The appeals are, therefore, decreed and the cases are remanded to the lower Court for disposal in accordance with the directions herein given.

As there has been some carelessness on the part of the plaintiff in drawing up the plaint, neither party will be allowed costs in this Court.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 818 OF 1917.

October 14, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Hayward.

WAMAN BALVANT KASHIKAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

Babu HARSHET SHETE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 9—Right of worship, nature of—Suit to enforce rights of worship and carrying processions, whether of civil nature.

The ordinary right of a citizen to worship, according to his own belief, any deity and in such manner as his belief requires him to do so long as he does not prevent others from carrying on similar worship according to their own belief, is a right of a civil nature and any interference with that right is a matter in respect of which relief would, in a proper case, be granted by a Civil Court. [p 421, col. 2.]

The right to conduct religious processions in the public streets is a right inherent in every person, provided he does not thereby invade the rights of property enjoyed by others or cause a public nuisance or interfere with the ordinary use of the streets by the public and subject to such directions or prohibitions as may be issued by the Magistrate to prevent obstructions to the thoroughfare or breaches of the public peace. The right to carry on the worship of any deity in any manner that a person pleases, subject to similar conditions, is also a right inherent in every person. [p. 420, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 478 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Chiplun, in Civil Suit No. 160 of 1914.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jaiyakar and S. S. Patkar, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The question in this second appeal is, whether the plaintiffs' claim is cognizable by Civil Courts.

The plaintiffs allege that their ancestors set up a new Bahiri temple at Chiplun for worship and devotional sports many years ago, that the present defendants' ancestors, who worshipped the same deity installed as the old Bahiri, filed Suit No. 28 of 1844 in the Court of the Munsif of Chiplun against the worshippers of the newly installed deity, and that in that suit they in effect sought to restrain the then defendants (plaintiffs' predecessors) from carrying on the worship of the new Bahiri in the same manner as the worship of the old Bahiri. A decree was passed in the suit and ultimately upheld by the Sudder Diwani Adawlut in Special Appeal No. 4631 in the year 1852, under which the then defendants were restrained from performing certain ceremonies as being appurtenant to the village deity, but were allowed to perform them on their passing an agreement to the Collector that they would not perform the particular ceremonies as village ceremonies but would perform them for sports and out of devotion. They further allege that in 1911 the District Magistrate passed an order under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act at the instance of the present defendants restricting the plaintiffs in their worship to the four rites mentioned in the said decree and referred to in the prayer clause as items Nos. 1, 9, 11 and 13. They allege that they have been subsequently prohibited by an order made in October 1911 to use a dhol on the said occasions. They claim in this suit a declaration that they have a right to do certain acts of worship in connection with the new Bahiri and for an injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing them in the performance of the worship in that manner. They also claim damages to the extent of Rs. 5. The acts referred to in the plaint in the prayer clause are these:—

"1. Palkhi procession in the month of Falgun.

2. Performance of tamasha on the same before the god and tamasha procession along with the palkhi in the town.

3. Moving about in the town playing dhulwad (playing with mud, etc.,) and along with nishans and zendes (banners) on the first day of the latter half of Falgun.

4. Moving about in town playing shenwad (playing with cowdung) along with nishans and zendes (banners) on the 2nd day of the latter half of Falgun.

5. Procession of rang (colours) through the town and the throwing of colours on each other's body on the 5th day of the latter half of Falgun

6. Taking of the palkhi to Chetavali in Chaitra.

7. Pal kiraka procession in Jeshta and Ashad and on occasions a kiraka procession of and killing of a goat.

8. To do jagar in Shrawan and on the full-moon day in Shrawan taking of a cocoanut in procession from the temple to the Bunder (harbour) for offering to the water-deity.

9. Tying povtis (cotton thread) round the wrist of the god in Shrawan.

10. Taking of the palkhi in procession to Uktad in Bhadrapad.

11. Setting up (ghat) in the temple in Ashwin.

12. Making out palkhi on Dasra day for the worship of Shami tree.

13. Waiving lamp about the idol in Diwali.

14. Raising of the banner and the god going to hunting on the full moon day in Paush and the lowering of the banner and the return of the god on the full moon day in Magh.

15. And other acts required to be done occasionally, and to use the dhol on those occasions."

The defendants contend that the claim is not cognizable by the Civil Courts and that on merits the plaintiffs have no such rights. The plaintiffs gave a purshis to the effect that the right of performing the ceremonies mentioned in the plaint was not vested in the deity, but it was their right to perform the said ceremonies before the deity for sports and out of devotion.

Both the lower Courts have disallowed the plaintiffs' claim on the preliminary ground that the suit is not cognizable by the Civil Courts.

In the appeal before us we are not concerned with the merits of the plaintiffs' claim, nor with the extent and form of the relief, which the plaintiffs may be ultimately found to be entitled to. The only question that we have to consider is whether the claim is cognizable by the Civil Courts.

It will be convenient to state the terms of the decree in the suit of 1844 and of the order of the District Magistrate. In the suit of 1844 the Court had made the following order:—

"By doing ceremonies of manasthiti such as taking out palkhis, preparing povtis, etc, at the new temple in course of time it will not be possible to distinguish ceremonies of manasthiti from the other; and plaintiff will thereby suffer. Therefore, the ceremonies of manasthiti performed at the new temple, i. e.,

1. Taking out palkhi in Shimga,
2. Preparing povtis in Shrawan,
3. Setting up ghat in Ashwin, and
4. Waiving lamp in diwali

should not be performed by the defendants. But if the defendants pass a Muchalka (recognizance) or Karar to Government that they will perform them not as village ceremonies (ganvkichi manasthiti) but will perform them for sport and out of devotion (kheladukhal bhaktichi), there is no reason to forbid them to do so. They should follow their own devotion. Performing ceremonies of manasthiti at the new temple is not approved by Government. If defendants don't pass a Karar, they should not perform the ceremonies specified in the plaint.

The stone set up as idol by defendants is installed according to rites as stated by defendants' witnesses. There is, therefore, no reason to remove them. They will be treated like the several ones which some people set up out of devotion."

The District Magistrate passed a considered order under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890), in which he directed in paragraph 16 (2) that—

"The new Bahiri people should perform only the four ceremonies mentioned in paragraph 13 above after passing the Karar to Government that they would perform them for sport and out of devotion and not as of manasthiti; they shall not perform at all the other ceremonies referred to in paragraph 14 above neither out of sport nor out of devotion nor as of manasthiti and shall not be allowed to pass any Karar concerning those other ceremonies."

The ceremonies referred to in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the order are the ceremonies which are now referred to in the plaint.

The question is whether the present claim of the plaintiffs is of a civil nature. There is no question in this suit as to the right to property or to an office and the explanation to section 9 of the Code has no application. It is not suggested in this case that the cognisance of this suit is either expressly or impliedly barred. In fact section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act expressly provides that any order made by the District Magistrate under sub-section 1 shall be subject to a decree, injunction or order made by a Court having jurisdiction. The question, therefore, simply is whether the suit as framed is of a civil nature within the meaning of section 9 of the Code. Almost all the prayers in the plaint relate to some processions to be carried in the town of Chiplun on some occasions accompanied with some ceremonies in connection with the new Bahiri. The plaintiffs claim the right to worship the deity in any manner they please and to use the public streets for the purpose of processions connected with the worship of the deity as detailed in the plaint and to use the dhol on these occasions, and they make it clear that they do not claim to carry on any worship in connection with the new Bahiri as if it was the worship of the village deity (Gram Devata). The order of the District Magistrate makes it clear that they are prohibited altogether from performing any of these ceremonies, except the four which are mentioned in the decree in the suit of 1844, even for sport or out of devotion. The pleadings in the present case and the terms of the order of the District Magistrate make it quite clear that the real dispute between the parties is as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to carry on the worship of the new Bahiri as they please so long as they do not perform it as of manasthiti, or whether the defendants have the exclusive right to perform those ceremonies with reference to the village deity and to prevent other persons from performing similar worship in connection with another deity of the same name. The prayers in the suit also involve the claim to use the public streets for the purpose of certain religious processions as detailed in the plaint. The question in this case is, not whether the defendants shall be required to perform any ceremony or that the plaintiffs shall be required to do so, but whether the ordinary right of a citizen to worship, according to his own belief, any deity and in such manner as his belief requires him to do, so long as he does not prevent others from carrying on similar worship according to their own belief, is a right of a civil nature. After giving the best consideration to this point it seems to me that in substance the plaintiffs' suit is of a civil nature, and if they have a right to worship the new deity in any manner they please, any interference with that right is a matter with reference to which they can get relief in a Civil Court provided they are found entitled to that relief.

It has been held in several cases that the right to conduct religious processions in the public streets is a right inherent in every person, provided he does not thereby invade the rights of property enjoyed by others or cause a public nuisance or interfere with the ordinary use of the streets by the public and subject to such directions or prohibitions as may be issued by the Magistrate to prevent obstructions to the thoroughfare or breaches of the public peace. Further the right to carry on the worship of any deity in any manner that a person pleases subject to similar conditions is also a right inherent in every person, and it is an important right. I do not think that the lower Courts are right in holding that the suit is not of a civil nature. In the present case the question does not relate to any religious rites or ceremonies, but to the right of the plaintiffs to be protected in the performance of the worship of their deity in any manner they please, subject to the conditions which I have already stated with reference to the right to use the public streets, and to their right to prevent the defendants from interfering with the performance of the worship in their own way.

This conclusion in the present case appears to me to be consistent with the view which the Sadder Diwani Adawlut took in the suit of 1841 which came up to that Court. It was held by the learned Judges then that the suit was cognizable by a Civil Court under Regulation II of 1827, section 21, as it then stood, having regard to the nature of that suit and the relief claimed by the plaintiffs in that suit. The present suit seems to me to be of a similar nature. The present plaintiffs seek to be protected in the performance of their worship of the deity. I do not express any opinion as to the effect of the decree in that suit on the merits of the present claim. The District Magistrate has referred to this decree in his order, and it is a point in dispute between the parties as to whether the effect of the decree is in favour of the plaintiffs or the defendants in the present case. That is a matter which the Court dealing with the suit on the merits will have to consider and to decide. I refer to that suit at present only for the purpose of showing that it was held to be of a civil nature.

Several cases have been cited in the argument at the Bar; but I do not consider it necessary to discuss them. The nature of the present suit must be determined with reference to the allegations and the pleadings in the present case. The observations in the reported cases which have been relied upon on either side must be read with reference to and in the light of the nature of the particular suit in which they are made. I do not think that any decision referred to in the argument conflicts in any way with the view which I take of this case.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the suit to the trial Court for disposal according to law.

All costs to be costs in the suit.

HAYWARD, J.— I agree. The cause of action is, in my opinion, of a civil nature, in so far as it relates to the conduct of the defendants tending to prevent the exercise of the ordinary rights of freedom of worship of the other side, whether in private or in public. It would seem, broadly speaking, that every citizen has a right to worship as he pleases so long as he does not thereby trench upon the rights of office or property of other persons. He has, broadly speaking, similarly a right to go in procession so long as he does not interfere with the rights of others to the unrestricted use of the public roads and streets. But the exercise of these rights is always subject to such orders as might be necessary to prevent disorder or riot by the Magistrates under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act or section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Appeal allowed.

LACHHMI PRASAD CHAUDHURI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c), (v)—Suit for declaration of title and possession—Court-fee payable.

Where a challenge is directly thrown on the plaintiff's title as the adopted son of a certain person and the plaintiff comes into Court in order to meet that challenge and claims a declaration of his title as an adopted son and also seeks to recover possession of his adoptive father's property, the suit falls within section 7 (iv) (c), of the Court Fees Act and not within clause (v) of the section. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagulpore, in Trial Suit No. 125 of 1918, dated the 13th August 1919.

Messrs. S. Z. Mullick, Rajendra Prasad and Sambhu Saran, for the Appellants.

Messrs, Lal Mohan Ganguly and Nitai Ch. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought this suit for possession of an estate on the ground that he had been validly adopted by the widow of the last male owner under authority from the latter. He valued the suit at 5 lacs for purposes of jurisdiction and at Rs. 82,500 for purposes of Court-fee, as if it were a suit for possession, valuing the immoveable property at ten times the Government revenue for the purpose of Court-fee. The plaintiff prayed for the following reliefs:

"(1) For adjudication that the plaintiff is entitled to the properties set forth in schedule A below as the adopted son and heir of Shib Nag Chandi Nath Chaudhry and that the defendants 1st, 3rd, 4th parties have wrongfully kept him out of possession thereof.

"(2) For a decree for possession of the said properties in favour of the plaintiff against the said defendants 1st, 3rd and 4th parties, and for putting him in possession of the properties mentioned in part I of the said schedule A by ousting these defendants or any person claiming under them. and of the properties mentioned in part II of the said schedule by ordering the defendant 1st party to deliver them to the plaintiff or in default the value.

"(3) For a decree for Rs. 60,000 or such other sums as the Court may find just and proper on account of mesne profits of the properties set forth in part I of the schedule A from the Fasli year 1321 till the date of the suit as well as future mesne profits from the date of the suit till the date of the plaintiff's possession with interest against the defendants 1st, 3rd and 4th parties.

"(4) For costs of the suit with interest against the defendants."

The defendants denied that the plaintiff was the adopted son of Shib Nag Chandi Nath Choudhry and asserted that even if he was adopted, his adoption was invalid. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff, therefore, appealed to the High Court. He valued his appeal as he had valued his suit both for the purposes of jurisdiction and for the Court fees. The Stamp Reporter objected to the Court-fees paid on the plaint as well as on the memo. of appeal, being of opinion that the suit was one for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and as such the plaintiff ought to have paid Court-fees ad valorem on 5 lacs, the jurisdictional value, both on the plaint and on the memo. of appeal under section 7 (IV) (c) of the Court Fees Act. He submitted the matter to the Taxing Officer, who agreeing with the reports of the Stamp Reporter observed as follows: —

"It is clear that by the 1st relief a declaration was asked for of plaintiff's title as the adopted son. This adoption was denied by the defendants and this was the main issue in the suit. The burden of proving adoption lies on the person who asserts the adoption, and without the declaration of title it would be impossible for the plaintiff to recover possession; and that this was recognized is clear from the reliefs claimed.

The learned Vakil for the appellants contended that it was only so when a document had to be got rid of that a declaration is required. But I think his argument is based on the fact that the rulings reported as Lagan Burt Kuer v. Khakhan Singh (1) and Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (2) happened to refer to cases in which a document stood in the way of the plaintiff. What stands in the plaintiff's way in the present case is the fact that unless he can prove not only his adoption but the validity of his adoption, he cannot have any claim to recover possession. Had he left out the prayer regarding his adoption or had the defendants admitted the adoption, I should have held that in the former case we must be guided by the plaint, and in the latter case also the prayer for adjudication of the adoption was a surplusage. As it is the prayer is there; and so far from being a surplusage, it is the very foundation of the plaintiff's case, and it is hotly contested by the defendants. I, therefore, hold that this is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and that ad valorem Court-fees must be paid on the value of the suit. The proper Court-fee both on the plaint and on the memo. of appeal is Rs. 3,000. Rs. 1,350 having been paid on both, there is a deficit on each of Rs. 1,650, i. e., a total deficit of Rs. 3,300. One month's time is allowed within which to pay."

The deficit Court-fee on the memo. of appeal to the High Court was paid within time, but the deficit of Rs. 1,650 due from the appellant on his plaint in the Court of 1st instance was not paid. The case was, therefore, placed before a Division Bench constituted of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Das and the Hon'ble Mr.

ORDER.—This is a Court-fee matter.

The question involved is of considerable importance and in our view should be decided by a larger Bench. The point is this. Whether a suit for declaration of title as adopted son and for possession is a suit that comes within section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act, or within section 7, clause (V) of that Act. The learned Registrar has taken the view that it comes under section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellant has argued that this view is erroneous inasmuch as every suit for possession must necessarily involve adjudication of the title of the plaintiff. He says that in every suit for possession the plaintiff must prove his title, and that consequently he must necessarily ask for declaration of his title. In my view the question depends on whether the suit is a suit that comes within section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. If it is a suit that comes within section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, then it must come under section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act.

It is true that every suit for possession does not involve a question of title in the sense that the plaintiff in an ejectment suit must prove his title. But that is not the case here. Where, however, a challenge is directly thrown on the title of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff comes to Court in order to meet that challenge, it is a suit clearly under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and it would accordingly, in my view, come under section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act. In this case it appears to me that there was undoubtedly a challenge thrown on the plaintiff's title. He came to Court to meet that challenge. He asked for a declaration that he was the adopted son of somebody and for consequential relief, that is, for possession. It is not the same thing as an ordinary suit for possession where the question of title incidentally arises. In my view the learned Registrar has taken an entirely correct view of the matter, but as the question is always coming before us in one garb or another, we think that it ought to be finally settled by a larger Bench. Place the record before the learned Chief Justice for necessary orders.

On 4th February 1920 the learned Chief Justice (Sir Dawson Miller, Kt.) declined to refer the matter to a Full Bench and passed the following ORDER.—In my opinion this decision is correct. There is no other decision in conflict with the above and I do not think it is necessary to refer it to a Full Bench.

The case was again placed before the Division Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Adami, which on the 5th February 1920 passed the following

FINAL ORDER.—This matter now comes before us for decision. My learned brother Mr. Justice Foster and myself expressed our view in the order which we passed on the 29th January last. We thought that the matter was of general importance and should be settled by the decision of a larger Bench. We directed that the papers should be placed before the learned Chief Justice for the necessary orders. The learned Chief Justice does not think that there is any necessity to refer the matter to a Full Bench. My learned brother Mr. Justice Adami agrees with the view which I have already expressed in the case. Therefore, the order must be that the decision of the learned Registrar is right and that the appellant must pay the additional Court-fees on the plaint in the lower Court. We give him three weeks time to do so.

Order accordingly.

JAMSEDJI F. SHROFF—PLAINTIFF

HUSSEINBHAI AHMEDBHAI—DEFENDANT.

Receiver, suit against—Leave of Court not obtained before institution of suit—Leave obtained subsequently, whether cures defect.

Where a suit is filed against a Receiver without first obtaining the leave of the Court which appointed him, the defect can be cured by leave subsequently granted. [p. 425, col. 2.]

JAMSETJI v. HUSSEINBHAI AHMEDHHI.

Mr. Kanga, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Desai, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The summons was issued on an application by the plaintiff for leave to continue the suit against the defendants who are Receivers of the estate of Ahmedbhai Habibbhai. The plaintiff claims to have been employed as a broker by the Receivers and sues for his brokerage. It is clear, therefore, that there is a question to be tried and the case is one in which the Court would grant leave as a matter of course: Lane v. Capsey (1) and Braja Bhusan Trigunait v. Sris Chandra Tewari (2).

The only difficulty arises from the fact that per incuriam the suit was filed without the previous sanction of the Court. It was held in Pramatha Nath Gangooly v. Khetra Nath Banerjee (3) that leave of the Court is a condition precedent to the right to sue and that that omission cannot be rectified by subsequent application. The judgment in that case is not supported by any reasons and was not followed in Rustomjee Dhunjibhai Sethna v. Frederic Gaebele (4). The various statutory provisions which require the consent of the Court or some other authority as a condition on which a suit may be maintained are collected in the case of Chandulal Khushalji v. Awad (5). The consideration of those and subsequent authorities shows that the words in the Statute have to be examined in each case in order to ascertain whether the provision is a bar to the Court dealing with the actior, or is a bar to the original institution of the suit. In the former case the suit may continue on leave subsequently granted: for instance, the leave of the Collector in a suit to which sections 4 and 6 of the Pensions Act XXIII of 1871 are applicable: Nawab Muhammad Azmat Ali Khan v. Musammat Lalli Begum (6), or leave under Order I, rule 8 (1), Civil Procedure Code: Fernandez v. Rodrigues (7), or leave under section 20, Civil Procedure Code: Narayan Shankar v. Secretary of State (8). But in the latter case, that is, when the bar is to the original institution of the suit, leave subsequently granted is of no avail: for instance, the consent of the Advocate-General under section 92, Civil Procedure Code: Tricumdass Mulji v Khimji Vullabhdass (9), or the leave of the Court under section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act: Dwarkadas Tejbhandar, In re (10).

In the case of a suit against a Receiver there is no statutory provision requiring the leave of the Court. But the same principle would apply, and the defect can be cured by leave subsequently granted if there is no bar to the institution of the suit, that is to the jurisdiction of the Court to admit the plaint.

The necessity for leave to sue the Receiver rests upon two considerations: (1) that such a suit is incompatible with the dignity and authority of the Court; (2) that it might interfere with the duty of the Court to maintain the Receiver's possession. Neither of these considerations affects the jurisdiction of the Court. They are matters which the Court can deal with after the suit is filed: and the Court could order the suit to be stayed until it was satisfied that there was no encroachment upon its authority, nor want of attempt to interfere with the Receiver's possession.

Therefore, it seems clear that leave may be granted after the filing of the suit, and Mr. Desai with his customary fairness does not dispute this proposition.

Accordingly, I make the summons absolute but direct that plaintiff pay the costs of the summons. Counsel certified.

Summons made absolute.

LOKENATH RAI—PLAINTIFF AND SHEO SHANKAR PROSAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow, alienation by—Consent of reversioner, effect of—Necessity, proof of.

The consent of the immediate reversioner to an alienation made by a Hindu widow is presumptive proof of legal necessity and bars further enquiry into legal necessity. The consenting reversioner cannot subsequently say that there was no legal necessity. [p. 428, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah.

The Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha, Messrs. Naresh Chandra Sinha and Netai Ch. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and Shambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondent Loknath Roy against the appellant and the pro forma respondents to enforce a mortgage bond executed by Musammat Adhikari Kuer and by Sheo Shankar, Uma Shankar and Rama Shankar on the 9th of August 1907. There is no dispute that Musammat Adhikari Kuer was in possession of the estate in her right as a Hindu widow and that Sheo Shankar, Uma Shankar and Rama Shankar, as her daughter's sons, were on that date the immediate reversioners. It appears that Rama Shankar was on that date a minor but that his name was actually signed by his eldest brother Sheo Shankar.

The learned Subordinate Judge has given a full mortgage decree to the plaintiff.

The first question which has been argued on behalf of the appellant is that there were certain part payments made by Musammat Adhikari Kuer and that those part payments are not shown in the account annexed to the plaint. The appellant's allegation is that she paid Rs. 200 to the plaintiff on the 30th of Bhado 1316 and Rs. 408 on the 30th of Aghan 1319. She relies upon two receipts alleged to have been granted by the plaintiff to her. It is noteworthy that these payments are not endorsed on the mortgage-bond.

Now, in order to determine this question it is necessary to examine whether the case of the defendant was at all put to the plaintiff. The plaintiff came to the witness-box and stated as distinctly as he could that the defendant had not paid anything to him on account of his dues. That was a clear statement that nothing had been paid to him by the defendant. There was absolutely no cross-examination on this point at all. The Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha, on behalf of the appellant, relies on the fact that the defendant raised the question of part payments specifically in her written statement and that, therefore, it was for the plaintiff to deny that allegation in the witness-box. I do not agree with this contention at all. The plaintiff came to the witness-box to prove his case and it was for the defendants, if they had a specific case on the point, to put that specific case to the plaintiff. It is, in my opinion, not fair to rely upon receipts alleged to have been executed by Loknath without giving Loknath an opportunity to deny his signatures on those receipts.

In the next place the evidence as regards the payments is, in my opinion, not sufficient. I will take the second receipt. That receipt is alleged to have been granted on the 30th of Aghan 1319. Now, it is the defendant's case that on the 5th of Fagun 1317 the defendant executed a Mukhtarnama in favour of the plaintiff's son, appointing him her agent for the purpose of collecting rents, issues and profits. Therefore, on the date, when she is alleged to have paid Rs. 408 to the plaintiff, she was not in possession of the estate at all. The Mukhtarnama has been read to us by the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha and it appears that the lady appointed Ram Nihora, the son of the plaintiff, as her Manager on a salary to make collections on her behalf, to pay Government revenue and other public demands out of such collections and to pay her Rs. 30 a month for her expenses and at the end of each year to account to her for such collections and to make over to her the balance in hand. Now one of the witnesses for the defendants was asked from where defendant No. 1 got Rs. 408, which she made over to the plaintiff in part payment of what was due from her to the plaintiff. This witness is Kailas Bihari, who is a servant of the defendant and undoubtedly looks after her interest. His answer was 'I cannot say.' The defendant herself, in her evidence, says that arrears were due to her from the tenants and that these arrears were being realized by her servant Jankey Lal and that she made the payments to the plaintiff out of these collections. It seems to me that this is an impossible story. The Mukhtarnama shows that Ram Nihora was there to make collections on her behalf. The Mukhtarnama makes no distinction whatever between rents as they fell due and arrears of rent. Therefore, if the Mukhtarnama was at all acted upon, these collections would undoubtedly have been made by Ram Nihora and not by Jankey Lal. Now, if the second receipt goes, then, in my view, it must throw suspicion on the whole story of part payments. In my view, these circumstances, coupled with the fact that the receipts were not shown to the plaintiff when he came to the witness-box to give his evidence, make it impossible for us to accept the story of part-payments.

The next point argued by the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha is that the defendant appointed the plaintiff her agent to collect rents on her behalf and that, therefore, the plaintiff cannot claim an account of the money due to him from the defendant on the foot of the mortgage-bond, without accounting to her for the monies that came into his hands by virtue of the Mukhtarnama. The principle is well established that he who claims an account must also render account, if he is at all accountable. But in this case the Mukhtarnama is not in favour of the plaintiff, but in favour of the plaintiff's son. The evidence of the defendant, no doubt, is that though the name of Ram Nihora was used in the transaction, it was the plaintiff who actually acted for her. This evidence I cannot accept. This case, again, was not put to the plaintiff when he came to the witness box; and for that reason and also for the reason that every apparent transaction must be assumed to be the real transaction until the contrary is shown, I cannot accept this case.

The last point that has been argued before us is that the reversioners could not bind their reversionary interest by the mortgage transaction and that, therefore, all that can be sold in execution of the mortgage decree is the widow's interest. The question, whether the reversioners can bind their reversionary interest, is one of considerable difficulty and I do not propose to discuss that point in this case. But I look upon the transaction by the reversioners not as binding their interest in the estate but as consenting to the transaction by the widow. It is unnecessary to refer to all the cases, that have been decided on this question, but I may usefully cite a passage from the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Pershad Singh (1). At page 685* the Judicial Committee, in that case, said as follows:—"The law relating to the dealings of a Hindu widow with her husband's estate which devolves on her in default of issue is now too well-settled to need a prolonged consideration. To be valid as against the reversioners, or to affect their reversionary rights, a charge created by a Hindu widow or an alienation effected by her can be supported only by proof aliunde that such debt was contracted or such alienation was made for valid and legal necessity, and the onus of establishing such necessity rests heavily on the person who claims the benefit of transactions with a Hindu widow or other females taking similar estates. The requirement of the law may, however, be fulfilled by proving the consent or concurrence of the reversioners to or in the transactions." The Judicial Committee went on to point out as follows:—"There is no evidence that they," the reversioners, "benefited from the transactions, or that so far as they were concerned there was any need for the mortgages. Their Lordships think that when a stringent equity, to use Lord Hobhouse's expression in the course of the argument in Jiwan Singh v. Misri Lal (2), arising out of an alleged consent by the reversioners is sought to be enforced against them, such consent must be established by positive evidence that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the dealings they concurred in binding their interests, and that such consent should not be inferred from ambiguous acts or be supported by dubious oral testimony, such as appears to have been relied upon in this case."

In this case, fortunately for the plaintiff, it is unnecessary to have recourse to ambiguous acts or dubious oral testimony, because the reversioners were actually parties to the transaction, and so far as they were able, they undoubtedly consented to the mortgage transaction. They undoubtedly benefited from the transaction as the mortgage-bond recites that the money was borrowed in order to pay off prior mortgages to which they were parties.

It is argued, however, by the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha that one of the reversioners, namely, Rama Shankar Prosad, was a minor on the date when the mortgage-bond was executed and that, therefore, there was no such concurrence of the reversioners as is essential under the law. The point has considerably pressed me, but having considered the point very carefully I am unable to agree with Mr. Sinha. No doubt Rama Shankar Prosad was a minor, but his eldest brother acted for him in that transaction. The whole principle of consent binding the reversioners is based on this, that consent is presumptive proof of legal necessity and bars further enquiry into legal necessity. Sheo Shankar and Uma Shankar, who were both of age, undoubtedly entered into the transaction and in my view the fact, that Rama Shankar was a minor on that date, would not vitiate the transaction.

But there is another difficulty in the way of the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha, and it is this:—An alienation by a Hindu widow is not void but voidable. It is voidable at the instance of the reversioners who allege and prove that there was no legal necessity for the particular transaction in question. Now, what are the facts? So far as Sheo Shankar and Uma Shankar are concerned, they were of age, when they consented to the transaction in question; and, in my opinion, they cannot now be heard to say that there was no legal necessity for the transaction. The only person who could come to Court and challenge the transaction is Rama Shankar, who was a minor on the date of transaction, but Rama Shankar is now dead. He predeceased Musammat Adhikari Kuer and, therefore, that difficulty does not arise now. I prefer to rest my decision so far as this question is concerned on this ground.

Another point urged, somewhat half-heartedly, by the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha is that the sons and grandsons of the mortgagee have not been made parties to the suit. In my view, there is no substance at all in this point. The only person whose name appears on the mortgage-bond is the mortgagee, Loknath Roy, and he has instituted this suit. The Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha relied strongly upon the case of Girwar Narain Mahton v. Musammat Mahbulunnissa (3), in which it was held that "A mortgage is indivisible and if all the parties entitled to a share in the money due on the mortgage are not upon the record, the suit must be dismissed in its entirety." With that view I entirely agree, but it has not been shown in this case that any person other than Loknath Roy is entitled to the money due on the mortgage. That being so, in my opinion, there is no substance in the argument.

In the result, therefore, I agree with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and would dismiss this appeal with costs.

I desire to point out that Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha appeared on behalf of some of the minor respondents, but withdrew from the case as the costs of the minors have not been secured by the appellant. An application for costs should have been made on behalf of the minors in proper time. As such an application was not made in proper time, we declined to adjourn the hearing of the appeal at this stage.

not produce any witness who could give evidence as to identity.

Mr. Kennedy for the appellants had, when the appeal first came before this Court, classified the lands in their possession under three separate headings :

(1) 31 odd bighas of land in which they acquired raiyati interest prior to the lease of July 6th, 1905;

(2) 15 odd bighas of land in which they acquired raiyati interest during the pendency of the lease; and

(3) 12 odd bighas of land in which they acquired raiyati interest after the expiry of the lease.

The findings of the lower Court on remand show that out of the 31 bighas covered by the kabalas and sale certificates showing purchases before 1905, only 20 bighas 18 kathas 13 dhurs are within the plaintiff's Patti and that out of the 12 bighas covered by the sale certificates granted after 1911, only 2 bighas 6 kathas 10 dhurs fall therein. Mr. Kennedy admits that he can claim the protection of occupancy rights only with regard to the 15 bighas bought during the term of the lease and the 20 bighas 18 kathas 13 dkurs and 2 bighas 6 kathas bought before and after it respectively, in all 38 bighas odd, and that his client will be liable to pay damages for retaining possession of the remainder of the land in suit, amounting to 30 bighas or so. He points out, however, that on the 12th September 1917 the defendants appellants, having relinquished all the lands in suit pending decision of the appeal, made petition before the Executing Court that notice might be given to the decree-holders, present respondents, that possession had been given up and such notice was accordingly served. The appellants cannot, therefore, be made liable for damages subsequent to that date.

The main question in this appeal deals, then, with 38 bighas within the Patti, which have been purchased by the defendants from tenants who held them as occupancy raiyats, and we have to determine whether the defendants, by the purchase, obtained occupancy rights in the purchased land which will save them from ejectment.

The lands are divided into three categories; those purchased before, those purchased during and those purchased after the term of the lease, and each class must be considered separately.

First, as regards the 20 bighas 18 kathas 13 dhurs bought previous to the lease of 1905, namely, in 1894, 1893, 1889, 1891 and 1895: There appears to be no doubt that the defendant's predecessors, when they made the purchases, were thikadars under their then existing leases, and the question is whether under the terms of section 22 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, they could, as such, acquire an occupancy right by purchase. Before 1907, sub-section (3) ran :—

"(3) A person holding land as an ijaradar or farmer of rents shall not, while so holding, acquire a right of occupancy in any land comprised in his ijara or farm."

The question then arose whether the word "acquire" was to be taken to relate only to acquisition under the provisions of the Act, or would include acquisition by purchase or other forms of transfer. It was held in Ramrup Mahto v. H. Manners (1) that the word would not include "purchase" but was confined to acquisition of the status of occupancy raiyat as described in the Act. The Bengal Tenancy Act was amended in 1907, and, to make it clear that any kind of acquisition of occupancy right was to be barred, the words "by purchase or otherwise" were inserted after the word "acquire" in sub-section (3) of section 22. Then, in 1911, in the case of Raghubar Mahto v. H. Manners (2) Mukerjee, J., questioned the decision in Ramrup Mahto v. H. Manners (1), and expressed the opinion that the amendment merely gave effect to what had always been the law. The fact remains that before the amendment the Court interpreted the sub-section as excluding acquisition by purchase and the Legislature, by finding it necessary to make the amendment, admitted that it was not clear that such acquisition was included. We must hold, I think, that prior to the Act of 1907 the acquisition by a thikadar of an occupancy right by purchase was not barred by section 22 (3) and that, therefore, the defendants acquired such a right in the 20 bighas 18 kathas 13 dhurs.

Learned Counsel argues that the defendants by their conduct have shown that they did not claim raiyati rights in the land, and throughout treated the holding as belonging to the Maliks He points out that the defendants themselves looked after the survey proceedings and had these 20 bighas described in the Record of Rights published in 1897 as bakasht thikadar. It is true that the defendants are not recorded as raiyats of the lands, but a Settlement Officer, finding that they were thikadars of the Patti and that they were themselves cultivating the lands would naturally enter them bakasht thikadar, which simply means that they were lease lands which the thikadar was cultivating himself. The amendment of the Act in 1907 could not take away rights of occupancy already vested in the defendants.

There is no good evidence that these lands were the landlord's bakasht at the date of the lease, or that the lands were zeraiat. It is contended that, at the time the lease of 1905 was executed, the defendants did not set up any kashtkari right, and, in fact, agreed not to claim such right. There is no evidence that in any previous lease the defendants agreed not to claim the right, and whatever they may have undertaken in this respect in the lease of 1905 could not affect the occupancy right which, we have found, was acquired by purchase previous to 1907. Any such agreement in the later lease would be void under the provisions of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The condition in the lease as to giving up the kasht of any tenant purchased at auction refers only to purchases made during the term of the lease, and not to previous ones.

We next come to the acquisitions made during the term of the lease. It is not contended by the appellants that they could acquire an occupancy right by purchase after 1907. Mr. Kennedy urges, however, that though no occupancy right could be obtained, section 22 (3) does not bar the purchase of a non-occupancy right and further, that, under the conditions of the lease, the defendants can set up a right of occupancy in land purchased at auction from the tenants for which on the expiry of the lease the plaintiff has not offered to the defendants the auction purchase money paid by them. It is, I think, plain that the defendants could not acquire occupancy rights in these lands. There is the express provision in the law against it, whatever may be the terms of the contract. The question to be decided in regard to these lands is whether the purchase gave the defendants non-occupancy rights. If it did, the suit to eject the defendants from these lands is clearly barred by limitation under Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mr. Kennedy relies on the cases of Jawadul Huq v. Ram Das Saha (3) and Ram Mohan Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (4), in contending that where an ijaradar purchases an occupancy holding, such holding does not cease to exist but only the occupancy right is terminated, and also on Sheonandan Singh v. Ramhit Singh (Deo Saran Singh) (5), where it was held held that an ijaradar who has purchased an occupancy holding acquires it as a non-occupancy holding. Both of the two first mentioned cases deal with the purchase of an occupancy right by a co owner and with section 22 (2), but they decided that it is the occupancy right and not the holding which is extinguished by the transfer: the holding is merely divested of the incidents which attach to an occupancy holding. The principle laid down in those cases would apply in a case under sub section (3) which does not bar an ijaradar from acquiring non-occupancy rights. On the other hand Mr. Singh cites the cases of Raghubar Mahto v. H. Manners (2) and Manners v. Satroghan Das (6). The decision of Mukerjee, J., in the former would seem to disagree with the opinion he formed in Sheonandan Singh v. Ramhit Singh (Deo Saran Singh) (5), cited above, but it is clear that the facts were different. In neither Raghubar Mahto v. H. Manners (2) nor Manners v. Satroghan Das (6) was the main question the effect of the purchase of an occupancy holding by the ijaradar. In both of them the question seems to have been mainly whether the lease was a cultivating lease or the lease of a tenure and whether occupancy rights had accrued through long possession, though in the former the ijaradar seems to have induced the tenants to give up lands to him. In Manners v. Satroghan Das (6) Sharfuddin, J., considered the case from the point of view of merger. Now if it was contemplated that when an ijaradar purchases an occupancy holding the occupancy right merges in the ijara, the framers of the Act would surely have found it sufficient to omit the word "permanent" from sub-section (1) of section 22, which would then have the desired effect in the case of a purchase by an ijaradar. It is clear that sub-section (3) does not mean that the occupancy right merges; it simply means that no occupancy right passes.

In Sheonandan Singh v. Ramhit Singh (Deo Saran Singh) (5) Mukerjee, J., states: "Assume, therefore, for a moment that a person holding land as an ijaradar is not entitled, while so holding, to acquire by purchase a right of occupancy in any land comprised in his ijara. The result is that if an ijaradar purchases an occupancy holding, he acquires it as a non-occupancy holding."

In the present case, as was held in the one just cited, the defendants' character as purchasers conferred upon them the status of raiyats, but not of occupancy raiyats. It may be contrary to the intention of the framers of the Act that landlords and tenure-holders should be allowed to acquire raiyati rights, but until sub-section (3) is amended it cannot prevent the acquisition of non-occupancy rights.

Having found, then, that the defendants were, on the expiry of the lease, non-occupancy raiyats of these 15 bighas, we must hold that under Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act, the suit to eject them from those lands is out of time.

With regard to the undertaking in the kabuliyat to give up the kasht lands purchased in execution of rent suits against the tenants on receipt of the purchase money, and not to set up a right of occupancy in such lands except where the plaintiff failed to offer to pay the purchase money, it need only be remarked that the plaintiffs up to the date of the suit had not offered payment of the purchase money. The reason they give is that there was so much wasilat due from the defendants that it was only necessary to set off the purchase money. That reason, however, was not a good one. They were bound to make the offer if they wanted the lands.

With regard to the last class of lands, those purchased after the expiry of the lease in execution of decrees for rent which fell due during the lease, there is, I think, no doubt that the defendants must be held to have acquired occupancy rights, for section 22 (3) relates specifically only to acquisitions of occupancy rights made while still holding the ijara.

We hold, therefore, that the defendants acquired occupancy rights in the lands purchased before 1905 and after 1911, and that they cannot now be ejected from the lands purchased during the lease, in which they have non occupancy rights, because the suit was instituted beyond time.

The last point to be decided is that of wasilat or damages. Under the terms of the kabuliyat the defendants' predecessors undertook to pay mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 25 a bigha per annum if, on the expiry of the term of the lease, they did not give up possession of the lands and if they set up any claim to a right of occupancy in respect of any lands other than lands purchased at auction from tenants for which the lessors had not offered payment according to the terms of the lease.

So far as concerns the lands in which the defendants have been found to have acquired occupancy rights before the lease was executed, it is clear that no mesne profits or damages are payable, the lease referred only to occupancy holdings purchased during its term. The defendants have a right to remain in possession of those lands. Any agreement in the lease not to set up right of occupancy in lands in which such right had accrued would be void under section 178, Bengal Tenancy Act.

We have found that, with regard to occupancy holdings purchased during the term of the lease, the suit to eject the defendants is barred by limitation, they being in possession as non occupancy raiyats. The defendants, however, undertook to give up these lands on the expiry of the lease if the plaintiff offered payment of the sum paid by the defendants as auction-purchasers, and it was agreed that the rate of Rs. 25 per bigha should not be payable by the defendants in respect of the lands if the lessor did not make payment of the purchase price. The lessor has not offered payment up till the date of the institution of the suit, which was over three years after the expiry of the lease. The defendants contend that this offer of payment was not made within a reasonable time and that the lessor must be taken to have elected not to exercise his option.

What is a reasonable time depends on the facts in every case, but it is not necessary for us to decide the question in this case, since we have found that the defendants were up to the date of the suit in rightful possession as non occupancy raiyats and cannot be ejected, and offer of payment of the purchase-money had not up till then been made.

For lands in which occupancy rights have been acquired by purchase after the date of the suit mesne profits will of course not be payable since before the expiry of the lease and the date of the acquisition, such lands were in possession of occupancy raiyats. Thus we find that no mesne profits are payable in respect of the raiyati lands acquired by the defendants before, during, and after the lease, that is to say, an area of 33 bighas 4 kathas 13 dhurs.

For the remaining area out of the total of the 68 bighas 6 kathas 13 dhurs, namely, 30 bighas 2 kathas, Mr. Kennedy admits that wasilat will have to be paid up to the date when notice of abandonment of the lands was given to the plaintiff, namely, up to 12th September 1917, but contends that the rate of Rs. 25 per bigha per annum is far too high and was fixed as a penalty.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there was no undue influence or coercion and that the bargain to pay at this rate was not hard and unconscionable.

The plaintiff's witnesses themselves have deposed that the highest rate for land in the village is Rs. 10 per bigha per annum and that the usual rate is Rs. 8, so that it is clear that the rate of mesne profits stipulated for is far above the ordinary rate. The defendants contracted to hold the land for the term of the lease paying an annual rental of Rs. 672.11.6 and to deliver up the land under certain conditions on the expiry of five years. If they failed to deliver up possession or made any claim, they were to pay mesne profits to the lessor at the rate of Rs. 25 per bigha, that is to say, they were to pay Rs. 2,475 a year for the 99 bighas. The contract to pay mesne profits is a secondary one intended to secure the fulfilment of the primary contract to relinquish the land on the expiry of the lease: it may be just and reasonable that the lessor should be thus secured, but the high rate agreed on is clearly by way of a penalty and it is open to this Court to award reasonable compensation in lieu of such an excessive rate.

We are of opinion that the highest rate of rent for land in the village as shown by the plaintiff's witnesses would be a fair rate in this case and we accordingly decide that the defendants should pay at the rate of Rs. 10 per bigha per annum for the 30 bighas 2 kathas.

As a result the appeal will be allowed in part, and the decree of the lower Court will be modified to the extent that the plaintiff will be declared entitled to recover possession of the said 30 bighas 2 kathas of the lands mentioned in schedule II and will be allowed wasilat at the rate of Rs. 10 per bigha per annum for the 27 bighas of land of schedule III for 1320, and for the 30 bighas 2 kathas out of the lands mentioned in schedule II, wasilat at the same rate for three years from 1320 to 1322 F. S. There will be no deduction on account of purchase money paid by the defendants.

The parties will get costs in both Courts proportionate to their success.

RAM LAL SEN—PLAINTIFF

BIDHUMUKHI DASI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Bequest to wife for life with remainder to sons—Accumulation, direction for, validity of.

A direction in the Will of a Hindu testator to accumulate the surplus income of devised property with a gift of the accumulations is not fundamentally bad: it only fails if it offends some independent rule of Hindu law. [p. 376, col 2; p. 377, col. 1.]

A testator by his Will appointed his wife his executrix and trustee and "gave devised and bequeathed unto her the rest and residue" of his moveable and immoveable properties for her life and after her death to his five sons in equal shares, with directions to incur certain expenses and to accumulate the surplus income for the benefit of the sons:

Held, that the provision for accumulation of the surplus income was not bad. [p. 379, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to have the Will of one Ram Gopal Sen construed and the rights, shares and interests under the said Will of the parties to the suit ascertained and for administration of the estate of Ram Gopal Sen under the direction of the Court and for an account of the estate from the defendant Bidhumukhi Dasi from the testator's death and for partition. The plaintiff is a son of Ram Gopal Sen, the 1st defendant is his widow and the executrix of his Will, the defendant Sham Lal Sen is a son, the defendants Manick Lal Sen, Nitya Lal Sen and Gour Lal Sen are sons of a deceased son Heera Lal Sen who survived the testator and died after the institution of the suit, the defendants Sankar Lal Sen, Rash Behary Sen and Gosto Behary Sen are sons of another son of the testator named Bolai Chand Sen who survived the testator and died in the year 1895, the defendant Champa Dassi is the widow of another son Adhar Lal Sen who survived the testator and died in 1885 without leaving a son but leaving four daughters, three of whom are dead, two of them having left male issue, the defendant Bepin Behary Sen is a son of Doyal Chand Sen, a son of the testator who predeceased him, and the defendant Srimati Barai Dassi is a daughter of another son of Doyal Chand named Amrito who is dead. Srimati Barai had a son born to her last April. Amrita had a son Ganesh who died some time in or after the year 1905.

Ram Gopal Sen died on the 16th November 1880 a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law leaving a Will, dated the 9th October 1878, probate whereof was granted out of this Court in the year 1882 to the defendant Srimati Bidhumukhi Dasi, the executrix therein named. The heirs of Ram Gopal Sen at the time of his death were his five sons Bolai Chand, Sham Lal, Ram Lal, Adhar Lal and Heera Lal, and his two grandsons Bepin Behari and Amrita Lal.

The testator by his said Will appointed his wife, the defendant Srimati Bidhumukhi Dasi, executrix and trustee thereof and directed her to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and to expend a certain sum therein named on his first Shrad and after giving certain legacies, including a sum of Rs. 20,000 in Government 4 p. c. securities, to his wife for her life, to the end that she might spend and enjoy the interest thereof during her life, gave, devised and bequeathed the rest and residue of his estate moveable and immoveable unto his wife and her assigns for life interest to collect the rents, issues and profits thereof and to pay the ground rents, taxes and assessments payable in respect of the immoveable property and to keep the same in repair, and in the second place to expend according to her discretion a sum of not more than Rs. 3,600 a year towards the maintenance and education of his family, consisting of his wife his five sons thereinafter named, and their wives and children and the widow and children of his deceased son Doyal Chand Sen, and in defraying other family and customary expenses, and in the next place to accumulate the surplus income for the benefit of his said five sons, they all living in commensality in his dwelling house, and he directed that in case any of his said sons should live apart from the rest of his family he should be paid a monthly sum of Rs. 25 for his maintenance. The testator then upon the death of his wife gave, devised and bequeathed his house No. 30, Sunker Halder Lane, and certain shares to his infant grandsons Amrita Lal and Bepin Behary in equal shares, subject to the charge of maintaining their mother, and provided that in the event of either of them dying without male issue his share would pass to the survivor, subject to the charge of maintaining his widow and female issue (if any) and marrying the latter, and he provided that in the event of both his grandsons dying without male issue the bequest, except the Railway shares which were to pass to the survivor's heirs, should revert to and become a part of his residue, to devolve on his said five sons and their heirs subject to the limitation thereunder provided. And he gave the rest and residue of his estate moveable and immoveable on the death of his wife to his five sons, whom he names, in equal shares and proportions, but he provided that in the event of the death of any of them without male issue his share should pass to the survivors or survivor, subject to the charge of maintaining his widow and marrying the daughter of the son so dying, should he leave any, and paying to such widow or daughter Rs. 1,000 or more, at the same rate if more than one.

The plaintiff contends that the provision for accumulation is bad not on the ground of the length of the period of accumulation but as being repugnant, and he contends that if there is no gift until the wife dies there is an intestacy as to the amounts directed to be accumulated until her death. The widow contends that the accumulation is good and that the suit is premature and that nothing is divisible until her death; alternatively she contends that she takes a life estate in the whole income, the provision for accumulation being merely discretionary, and in the further alternative she contends that she gets a life estate by implication.

If the widow's main contention, namely, that the provision for accumulation is not invalid, prevails, then no question at present arises for decision and the suit is premature as no case for an account has been made out. But it seems to me that to decide if the provision for accumulation is valid, it is necessary first to see whether under the Will the sons took immediate vested interests under the Will or if vesting is postponed until the widow's death. If the sons took vested interests at the testator's death, then one of the arguments levelled against the provision for accumulation goes, namely, that the accumulations having no owner until the widow's death the provision for accumulation is bad. The argument is based on a passage in Trevelyan's Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 41, where it is laid down that every part and interest in a property must have an owner, it cannot remain in suspense or abeyance without an owner, it must vest in some one.

Now the clause in the Will directing the accumulations contains no express gifts of the accumulations and I do not think that any gift can be implied from the words "for the benefit of my said five sons." The sons are entitled to be maintained out of the sum of Rs. 3,600 or if they separate, they get Rs. 25 a month from the estate, and if the words "for the benefit of my said five sons" were intended to confer an immediate gift of surplus income, it is at least unlikely that there would have been as well provision for their maintenance. Presumably, therefore, if the provision for accumulation is valid, the accumulations fall into residue and pass under the gift of the rest and residue of the estate to the five sons on the death of the widow. Did then this gift vest in the sons on the death of the testator or is vesting postponed until the widow's death? I think that the gift vested on the death of the testator. Section 47 of the Hindu Wills Act, which is section 106 of the Succession Act, provides that where by the terms of a bequest the legatee is not entitled to immediate possession of the thing bequeathed, a right to receive it at the proper time shall, unless a contrary intention appears by the Will, become vested in the legatee on the testator's death and shall pass to the legatee's representatives if he dies before that time and without having received the legacy, and in such cases the legacy is, from the testator's death, said to be vested in interest, and the explanation to the section states that an intention that a legacy to any person shall not become vested in interest in him is not to be inferred merely from a provision whereby the payment or possession of the thing bequeathed is postponed or whereby a prior interest therein is bequeathed to some other persons or whereby the income arising from the fund bequeathed is directed to be accumulated until the time of payment arrives or from a provision that if a particular event shall happen the legacy shall go over to another person. I cannot see that in the Will before me any contrary intention appears, and the fact that there is a gift over to the surviving sons, in certain events, of a son's share (and the expression "his" share certainly looks like a vested interest) is not in my opinion a contrary intention and in fact the section so states.

That such a gift is a valid gift see section 59 of the Hindu Wills Act and it does not make the interest any less a vested interest but merely divests in certain events the estates or gift which has already vested. I think the five sons upon the death of the testator took immediate vested interests in the residue, which includes the accumulations, but I think that the estate of any son was liable to be divested upon his death without male issue during the lifetime of the widow. Counsel for Champa Dassee contended in reliance on Poultney, In re; Poultney v. Poultney (1) that "dying without male issue" meant death in the testator's lifetime, but unfortunately for his argument he has failed to notice that the decision of Joyce, J., in Poultney, In re; Poultney v. Poultney (1) was reversed on appeal see Poultney, In re; Poultney v. Poultney (2). I think that "dying without male issue" upon the true construction of the clause means death in the widow's lifetime and that Adhar's vested interest was divested upon his death in the widow's lifetime, without male issue, but of course under the terms of the Will the share of Adhar passed to the surviving sons, subject to the charge imposed on the gift of residue of maintaining Champa Dassee when the residue falls into possession and of making the payments to the widow and daughters directed by the Will. It did occur to me that a possible solution of any difficulty with regard to the accumulations might be found in holding that as under the gift of residue the accumulations pass to the sons eventually, they might upon the principle of Saunders v. Vautier (3) and like cases stop the accumulations at any time and claim the surplus income as it accrues. But two difficulties present themselves, (i) the gift over to the surviving sons in the event of a son dying without male issue in the lifetime of the tenant for life, (ii) the rights of Champa Dassee and her daughters respectively to maintenance and legacies out of Adhar's divested share of the residue, which includes the accumulations. The 1st point might be got over by the sons agreeing inter se to give up their rights of survivorship, but the 2nd point remains and could only be got over by Champa Dassee releasing her right of maintenance against the accumulations and by payment to her and her daughters of their legacies. But as matters stand I am of opinion that the principle of Saunders v. Vautier (3) has no application.

It remains, therefore, to consider under the circumstances of this case whether the provision for accumulation of surplus income during the lifetime of the widow is valid according to Hindu Law, bearing in mind the fact that according to the construction which I have put upon the residuary gift, the sons took immediate vested interests upon the testator's death. Now the question of the validity in a Will of a provision for accumulation of surplus income was recently discussed by the Appeal Court in Watkins v. Administrator General of Bengal, Suit No. 611 of 1907, Appeal No. 92 of 1913.* The case has escaped the vigilance of the reporters or perhaps I should rather say is unreported owing to their lack of vigilance. There Sir Lawrence Jenkins in delivering the judgment of the Court in unequivocal terms lays down, after discussing the cases that "A direction to accumulate with a gift of the accumu-

*The following is the judgment in Appeal No. 92 of 1913, dated March 4, 1914, decided by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

JENKINS, C J.—Once more the Will of Haridass Dutt is before the Court.

The testator by this Will made provision, as he thought, for the adoption of a son or sons. He died in 1876, and in the following year an adoption ceremony was performed as contemplated by the Will. In 1881 the boy died and after the lapse of a month the testator's widow, Swarnamoyee Dassee, again purported to make an adoption, the boy this time being Amrita Lal Dutt. This boy was married in the family and throughout treated as a validly adopted son until he instituted a Suit No. 535 of 1894 against Swarnamoyee Dassee and her daughter and their sons, claiming the corpus of the estate and in any event the surplus income notwithstanding the provision for postponment of vesting and accumulation contained in the Will

By way of defence the validity of Amrita's adoption was denied and this plea was upheld by this Court on appeal and by the Privy Council. Since then the Will has been the subject of two more appeals to the Privy Council, and if the forecast of Counsel is correct, there are probably as many more appeals to that tribunal in store.

The determination of this suit turns on the true construction of clause 9 of the Will which is in these terms:—

"I direct my executors and executrix and trustees to pay out of the income and interest of my estate and effects monthly all necessary household expenses as well as for the worship of our family idol Sri Sri Radha Gobindji and to pay my wife monthly during her natural life for her sole and separate use the sum of Rupees two hundred and also the sum of Rupees fifty monthly to such adopted son, who shall live and attain his full age of 18 years, after his so attaining such age of 18 years during the lifetime of my said wife, provided he remains under her control and bears a good character, and if my said executrix and executors and trustees think fit and are satisfied with his conduct and behaviour, and for the purposes of such monthly expenditure my executrix, executors and trustees shall set apart and retain out of the interest and income of my estate a sum sufficient to meet such expenditure for six months and invest the rest and residue of such income and interest in Government securities in their joint names, but in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control, dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife, after which event I direct my said executors and trustees to make over the whole of my estate and effects both real and personal immoveable or moveable whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or quantity soever to such adopted son who shall survive my wife, if he shall have attained his age of 18 years during the lifetime of my wife or on his so attaining such age after her decease, to whom and his heirs I give, devise and bequeath the same. But in case none of such adopted sons survive my said wife or in case of either surviving my said wife and dying under the said age without leaving a son or sons, I desire and direct my executors after the death of my said wife or the death of such son after her but under such age of 18 years without leaving a son or sons to make over and divide the whole of my estate both real and personal unto and between my daughters in equal shares, to whom and their respective sons I give, devise and bequeath the same, but should either of my said daughters die without having any male issue surviving but leaving my other daughter her surviving, then in such case the surviving daughter and her sons shall be entitled to the share of the deceased daughter or in case of the death of other daughter leaving sons the share of such daughter is to be paid to such her son or sons share and share alike"

As there was and could be no adopted son, it is necessary to see what the testator's family was at his death. Besides his widow Swarnamoyee, he left two daughters Ranimoni Dasi and Premmoni Dasi, and three grandsons Radha Prasad Mullick, Kassi Prasad Mullick and Jyoti Prasad Mullick. After the testator's death two other sons were born to Premmoni Dasi, Peary Lall Mullick and Behari Lal Mullick, while Ranimoni claims to have taken Jugal Kishore in adoption in 1901.

The present suit was instituted on the 12th April 1907 by Mr Watkins, described as the administrator pendente lite of the property and credits of Haridas Dutt, against the Administrator-General of Bengal as executor of the last Will of Swarnamoyee and Lal Mohan Dutt and Preolal Dutt as the executors of the Will of Dwarka Nath Dutt. With these Dutt defendants we now have no further concern, for the suit has been dismissed as against them Since the institution of the suit there have been several amendments On the th May 1909 Sreemati Premmoni Dasi and her son Radha Prasad Mullick were added as plaintiffs Both Mr. Watkins and Premmoni died before the hearing and thereby Radha Prasad Mullick became and continued up to decree to be the sole plaintiff

Since the institution of the suit Ranimoni Dassi and Jugal Kishore Sen have been added as defendants as also the plaintiff's brothers Kassi Prosad Mullick, Peary Lal Mulick and Behari Lal Mullick.

The prayers to the plaint are numerous, but in effect what the plaintiff seeks to establish is that certain properties named or indicated in the plaint as well as the surplus income accrued during the widow's life form part of the trust estate: and that he and the added defendants are together entitled thereto to the widow's exclusion

This claim has been based on two alternative grounds. First, it is said that in the events which lations is not fundamentally bad: it only fails if it offends some independent rule of Hindu Law. Thus it may infringe the rule against perpetuities, and so far as that goes it must be a question for consideration in each case whether there is such an infringement or not. Or the direction to accumulate may happened the daughters took vested interests in possession from the death of the testator, so that the whole income was payable to them from that date; failing that it is urged that the trust for accumulation was good, so that the daughters and their sons between them became entitled to the income and capital of the accumulated fund.

The Administrator-General on the other hand maintains that the daughters' interests did not vest in possession until the widow's death, that the trust for accumulation during her life was invalid, and that the income was not disposed of, and so went as on an intestacy to the widow as her husband's next heir.

The literal sense of the words in clause 9 of the Will makes the gift to the adopted son conditional on his surviving the widow and attaining the age of 18, and postpones the vesting of the daughters' interests until the death of the widow if there was no adopted son

This in effect is the interpretation placed on the Will by the Privy Council in Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (1), for it was there said by their Lordships "By the ninth clause the testator provided an income for his wife and adopted son during the life of his wife and directed accumulation of the surplus income The adopted son is to take the property if he survives the widow and attains 18, otherwise it is given over to the daughters" . See page 106). Later their Lordships describe the testator as "postponing enjoyment during the widow's life and making the boy's interest in the corpus contingent on his surviving the wife and attaining 18." Had the authority to adopt been effective any other construction would obviously have led to results that could not have been intended, seeing that successive adoptions were contemplated.

Though the possibility of an adopted son was out of the question from the first, still in form the gift to the daughters and their sons was on failure of the adopted son and after the death of the widow, and that this gift was good was decided by the Privy Council in Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dasee 2). It was there held that the daughters were entitled to the testator's estate in equal shares for life with a remainder over to their sons.

The decision makes no special mention of the accumulations. But whether they be claimed by the widow as heiress, or the daughters and their sons as universal legatees, they are claimed as part of the testator's estate. The gift in the Will is of the "whole of my estate both real and personal," why then should not the accumulations pass to the universal legatees?

It is contended for the Administrator-General, first, that a direction to accumulate is absolutely bad, and secondly, that if not, still the direction here never had any effective operation as it was a part of a futile scheme for providing for the adopted son and nothing more.

The Will is governed by the Hindu Wills Act which makes applicable to the Wills of Hindus certain portions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, that is to say, sections 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 56 and 57 to 77 both inclusive, sections 81, 82, 85, 88 to 103 (both inclusive, sections 106 to 177 (both inclusive) and sections 187.

It is noticeable that sections 104 and 105 are not made applicable: section 105 imposes a bar on bequests to religious or charitable works; section 104 is aimed against directions for accumulation. This omission was (in my opinion) deliberate.

It is no doubt provided by section 3 that nothing contained in the Act shall authorise any Hindu to create in property any interest which he could not have created before the 1st day of September 1870, but it cannot be said that every direction to accumulate comes within this ban

No case goes this length, though there is a diversity of opinion as to the extent to which accumulations can be validly directed

As far back as 1855 no less an authority than Colville, C. J., delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court, expressed the opinion that it was competent to a Hindu testator expressly to provide for the accumulations of the surplus income of his estate within the limits allowed by law and to make those accumulations subject to a limitation order as there described: Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick 3), while in Bissonauth Chunder v Sreemutty Bamasoondery Dossee 4 Lord Romilly, delivering the opinion of the Privy Council refers to the absence from the Will of any direction to accumulate as a matter deserving of observation, a remark that would hardly have been made had it been their Lordships' opinion that the direction to accumulate was necessarily void

In Rajendra Lall Agarwalla v Raj Coomari Debi (5 Harrington, J., held that there was nothing illegal in a direction to accumulate made by a Hindu and that, if such a direction was neither so unreasonable in its conditions as to be void as against public policy nor given for the purpose of carrying out an illegal object nor in its effect inconsistent with Hindu Law, it should be given effect to

In Nistar Chandra v Ratanmala Debi (6) it was held that a direction to accumulate for the purpose of providing for the marriage expenses of the testator's son was good, while in Jamnabai v. Bhanji (7, a direction to accumulate the income

And later in the judgment he states "What then is the period during which an accumulation can be validly directed? On principle I think it must be for so long a time as the absolute vesting of the entire interest can be withheld" (and I take him to mean by absolute vesting vesting in till a boy to be adopted attained the age of 16, was upheld.

In Benode Behari Bose v. Srimati Nistarini Dassi (8) the question of accumulation arose and their Lordships expressed the opinion, not that the direction was void, but that the widow, who in the circumstances was solely entitled to the fund directed to be accumulated, could release the directions for accumulation and enjoy the whole income.

It is true the direction to accumulate for 99 years which came under consideration in Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (9) was held to be bad, but it obviously offended the rule against perpetuities. And so a direction which aims at postponing the enjoyment of a presently vested interest created by the testator's Will fails for repugnancy, and to this may be referred the decisions in Srimati Bramamoyi Dasi v. Joges Chandra Dutt (10) and Mokoondo Lall Shaw v. Gonesh Chnnder Shaw (11).

So far the cases present no great difficulty, but n Amrito Lall Dutt v Surnomoni Dasi (12), Trevelyan, J., in reference to the direction now under consideration said: "I cannot see how a direction to accumulate can be valid unless there be a present gift to support the direction to accumulate."

I do not clearly understand what the learned Judge here intended to lay down. But though he evidently considered the direction to accumulate in Haridass Dutt's Will void, even he conceded that there might in appropriate circumstances be a good direction to accumulate.

He no doubt remarks that the fact that where there is a minor accumulation can be allowed, and that an accumulation for the purpose of paying debts did not help. Lord Eldon, however, when delivering judgment in the House of Lords in Thellusson v. Woodford (13) evidently regarded the fact that there would be of necessity an accumulation during lunacy as pertinent to the question whether a direction to accumulate was good. It is worthy of notice that the other members of the Bench declined to express agreement with the views of Trevelyan, J. How then does the matter stand on principle? Under the ruling of the Privy Council "the intention of the testator was to create in favour of his daughters an estate for life with remainder over to their sons." [Radha Prasad Mullick v. Rance Mani Dassee (2).]

This gift to the daughter was of the whole of the testator's estate after the death of their mother.

The gift has been held to be good so far as it relates to the property of the testator at the death. Why should it be bad so far as it relates to the income of that property up to the widow's death?

A direction to accumulate with a gift of the accumulations is not fundamentally bad, it only fails if it offends some independent rule of Hindu Law. Thus it may infringe the rule against perpetuities, and so far as that goes it must be a question for consideration in each case whether there is such an infringement or not. Or the direction to accumulate may be repugnant and so void, as an attempt to deprive a person of the enjoyment of that which has become his property. But if, as the decisions I have cited imply, it was within the power of a Hindu testator to direct the accumulations of property to be added to or made part of his own property, then there would seem to be no difficulty in the way of his making a gift of it to a person who under the same gift may become entitled to the original corpus of the testator's property.

What then is the period during which an accumulation can be validly directed?

On principle, I think it must be for so long a time as the absolute vesting of the entire interest can be withheld, or for so long a time as that during which the corpus of the property can be rendered inalienable, or its course or its devolution can be directed and controlled by a testator.

I know of no other test, and if that be the true test, then the direction to accumulate in this Will is within its bounds and valid.

Therefore, the accumulations passed under the gift to the testator and his sons as a part of the testator's estate.

I think there is no force in the argument that the direction to adopt was inoperative as it merely was an incident of the scheme to make provision for an adopted son. It may be that the expectation that there would be an adopted son was the leading motive for the direction, but it did not on that account cease to operate merely because there could not be an adopted son.

The testator's intention was that the intermediate surplus income should go first to his adoted son and failing that to his daughters and their sons, and that it should so go in the form of accumulations.

The income according to the plaintiff's case has in fact been accumulated, and even if the accumulation had been unnecessary that could not deprive the donees of their right to it. But while I am so far in favour of the plaintiff, I do not think the decree in its present form can stand, for it delegates to the Official Referee the trial and determination of complicated questions of law and fact which should be tried and determined by a Judge of the Court, possession), "or, for so long a time as that during which the corpus of the property can be rendered inalienable or its course or devolution can be directed and controlled by a testator." This decision of course is binding on me and I have not accordingly thought it necessary to refer to the authorities which are discussed and referred to in the judgment. It remains to apply this decision to the Will before me. Now accumulation is only directed during the lifetime of the widow, consequently there is no perpetuity as this is a period, namely, a life in being, during which the corpus can be rendered inalienable and its course and devolution directed and controlled by the testator. Nor in my opinion is the provision for accumulation repugnant having regard to the form of the residuary gift, and for the reasons which I have already stated. Consequently I hold upon the authority of the above case that the provision for accumulation of surplus income in the Will now before me is not invalid. This disposes of the suit and it is not necessary in the view I take for me to decide whether the widow took a life-estate in the whole income, as I understand that she only desired to press this in the event of the provision for accumulation being held bad. I have expressed my view with regard to Adhar Lal's share, as it was I think necessary for me to do so for the purposes of this judgment; but I do not propose to make any declaration with regard to this share as Adhar Dal's daughters and their representatives are not before the Court and accordingly no declaration which I made would be binding on them. The suit accordingly fails and must be dismissed.

Suit dismissed.

It is specially necessary that the hearing should be before a Judge in view of the difficult points of limitation that may arise.

The suit was instituted on the 12th August 1907, two days within the period prescribed by Article 98 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

The sole plaintiff was Nowell Shaw Watkins. He died before the trial and no one was substituted in his place. Radha Prasad Mulick and Premmoni were not added as plaintiffs till the 6th May 1909.

Over and above this it is suggested that Mr Watkins, was not a competent plaintiff. These matters must be borne in mind when the defence of limitation comes to be considered.

The parties before us have asked us not to deal decisively with the question of limitation at this stage, but to leave this matter to be decided when the case of both parties has been fully placed before the Court.

All, therefore, that we now do is to set aside the decree of Fletcher, J., except so far as it ordered that an entry of the death of Mr. Watkins be made in the register of this suit and that the cause title in the said register be amended by striking out therefrom the name of Mr. Watkins.

And we direct that the case be remanded to the Court of first instance to be tried according to law.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed:

versus
MR. W. W. BOUCKE—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Acknowledgment of debt, effect of—Suit, whether can be based on acknowledgment—Account stated, what is.

An acknowledgment of a debt only enures to the benefit of the creditor for the purpose of saving limitation if it is made before the original debt is time-barred; but the basis of a suit is always the original debt. No suit can be maintained upon a mere acknowledgment of a debt. [p. 380, col. 1.]

"An account stated" is one where several cross-items are set off one against the other and the balance is struck off in favour of one of the parties In such a case the law implies a new promise by the other party to pay the balance in consideration not merely of past debts but also of the extinguishment of the old debts on each side, and hence it is not necessary that a statement of account should be made within the period of limitation for the recovery of several cross-items. [p. 380, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Mozuffarpore, dated the 19th May 1919.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal and Ambica Prasad Upadhya, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case as stated in the plaint is that the defendant used to take loans from the plaintiff from time to time and that an account of what was due from him was made up on the 8th October 1917. On that day a sum of Rs. 359-12-0 was found due from the defendant to the plaintiff. The defendant acknowledged it and affixed his signature in the account book of the plaintiff. The basis of the plaintiff's case is stated in paragraph 4 of the plaint to be the said adjustment of account on the 8th October 1913 acknowledged and signed by the defendant.

No suit can be maintained upon a mere acknowledgment of a debt. An acknowledgment only enures to the benefit of the creditor for the purpose of saving limitation under Article 19 of the Limitation Act if the acknowledgment is made before the original debt is time-barred, but the basis of a suit is always the original debt. No doubt under Article 64 of the Limitation Act a suit may be brought within three years upon accounts stated between the parties. "An account stated" is one where several cross-items are set off one against the other and the balance is struck off in favour of one of the parties. In such a case the law implies a new promise by the other party to pay the balance in consideration not merely of past debts but also of the extinguishment of the old debts on each side, and hence it is not necessary that a statement of account should be made within the period of limitation for the recovery of several cross-items, Hargopal v. Abdul (1).

But the entry in the account of the plaintiff of the 8th October 1913 is merely a statement of the balance which was on that date due to the plaintiff from the defendant and cannot possibly be said to be an "account stated" between the parties under Article 64 of the Limitation Act. Hence the entry in the plaintiff's account book, call it an adjustment of accounts, a balance or an acknowledgment of past debts, cannot in itself be the foundation of a suit in Court. Suits based upon similar entries in account books were dismissed in the following cases:—Ganga Prasad v. Ram Dayal (2), Trihhovan Gangaram v. Amina (3), Shankar v. Mukta (4), Debi Prosad v. Ram Ghulam Sahu (5) and Ishar Das v. Harkishan Das (6) (Punjab Chief Court). There is, therefore, concurrent opinion of all the High Courts on the point. The plaintiff's suit must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 18, cls. (d), (e)—Succession certificate, grant of, in respect of entire debt Partial revocation or modification, when can be ordered.

If a certificate has once been granted in respect of an entire debt, and it becomes apparent to the Court that circumstances have subsequently changed so as to bring into operation clause (d), or (e), or both, of section 18 of Act VII of 1889, it is open to the Court to pass orders having the effect of a partial revocation of the succession certificate once granted, or to modify the terms of that grant in such manner as the interests of justice may seem to require. [p. 882, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Second Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 2th of April 191.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr Iqbal Ahmad, for Respondent No. 1, and Mr. Haidar, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from an order passed under the Succession Certificate Act. The first point taken is that the order complained of is not an order refusing a certificate, but is an order refusing to revoke a certificate against which no appeal is provided by section 19 of Act VII of 1889. In our opinion the order is in effect one refusing to grant a certificate to Musammat Sharif-un nisa, the applicant, and we are bound to entertain the appeal. On the merits the case seems a clear one, except for one difficulty which has greatly influenced the decision in the Court below, namely, the principles laid down in the case of Ghafoor Khan v. Kalandari Begam (1) as to the granting of a succession certificate for the collection of the dower-debt of a Muhammadan widow when her husband has died without satisfying her claim in respect of the same. The essential facts of this case are quite simple. The appellant before us is the daughter of Kazi Masum Ali by his wife Musammat Kifayat Fatima. That lady died with her dower-debt unpaid. Her heirs under the Muhammadan Law were her husband, to the extent of a one-fourth share, a brother named Husain Ali to the extent of a one fourth share, and her daughter, the appellant, in respect of the remaining half share. Husain Ali applied for a succession certificate and the Court to which he applied, following the principles laid down in the ruling to which reference has already been made, compelled him to take out a succession certificate in respect of the entire amount of the dower-debt which was stated in his application at Rs. 25,000. On the strength of this certificate Husain Ali proceeded to institute a suit against Masum Ali, but in this suit he claimed only his own one-fourth share of the dower debt. He made no attempt to recover on behalf of and for the benefit of Musammat Sharif-un-nisa the half share in the debt to which that lady was entitled. We understand that Husain Ali has obtained a decree but that this decree is still under appeal in this Court. Musammat Sharif-un nisa thereupon applied to the Court below asking either that the certificate granted in favour of Husain Ali should be revoked and a fresh certificate made out in her name, or in the alternative that her name should be associated with that of Husain Ali in the same certificate to the extent of the half share claimed by her. The Court below has held that no adequate case is made out under the provisions of section 18 of the Succession Certificate Act (No. VII of 1889) for the revocation of the certificate granted to Husain Ali and that, on the principles laid down by the Full Bench of this Court in the ruling already referred to, it is impossible to grant a certificate in any form which would be of any use to Musammat Sharif un-nisa. The appeal before us is against the order of the Court below rejecting her application in toto. The position arrived at is, in our opinion, an impossible one and calls for rectification by this Court. As matters now stand, Musammat Sharif-un nisa is absolutely precluded from instituting a suit for the enforcement of what on the facts stated seems to be a perfectly just claim. We think that the Court below could have revoked the certificate granted to Husain Ali, or at least have revoked the same in part, on more than one ground. In the first place, the proceedings which took place when Husain Ali obtained his certificate were seriously defective in substance within the meaning of clause (a) of section 18 of Act VII of 1889. Musammat Sharif-un-nisa was at the time a minor and her father, whose interest in this matter was obviously opposed to hers, he being the debtor whose liability it was sought to enforce by means of the application, was allowed to accept service of notice on her behalf. We are not saying that Husain Ali himself was to blame for this; but there was this serious defect in the procedure adopted by the Court. Over and above this, the certificate granted to Husain Ali has now become practically inoperative so far as Musammat Sharif-un nisa's share in the debt is concerned, and the decree made in his favour by a competent Court for the recovery of a fractional share only of the dower debt renders it proper and desirable that some further order should be passed enabling Musammat Sharif-un-nissa to claim her legal rights. The learned District Judge would probably have taken very much the same view, but he felt himself constrained by the decision of this Court in Ghafoor Khan v. Kalandari Begam (1) to hold that he could only choose between one of two courses, namely, rejecting Musammat Sharif-un nisa's application, or revoking altogether the certificate in favour of Husain Ali and granting a fresh certificate to Musammat Sharif-un-nisa for the recovery of the entire amount of the dower-debt. The difficulties felt by the learned Judges of this Court in applying the terms of the Succession Certificate Act to the case of a debt of a peculiar nature like the dower-debt of a Muhammadan widow are obvious enough from the judgment delivered in the case above referred to. Undoubtedly it is impossible in dealing with the matter under the Succession Certificate Act to treat the dower-debt as anything but a single debt due to the deceased woman, and the procedure laid down under the Act does not afford any suitable method for deciding conflicting claims as between the heirs of the deceased lady to specific shares in the debt claimed. We do not, therefore, desire to express any dissent from the principles laid down by the Full Bench of this Court, which indeed we are bound as a Divisional Bench to follow. At the same time it seems to us unnecessary to apply those principles beyond the original granting of the certificate. We are of opinion that, if a certificate has once been granted in respect of the entire debt, and it becomes apparent to the Court that circumstances have subsequently changed so as to bring into operation clause (d) or (e), or both, of section 18 of Act VII of 1889, it is open to the Court to pass orders having the effect of a partial revocation of the succession certificate once granted, or to modify the terms of that grant in such manner as the interests of justice may seem to require. It might be possible for us to treat Musammat Sharif-un nisa's share in the dower debt as representing the only debt now remaining to be paid to the heirs of the deceased lady; but this would involve treating the decree passed in favour of Husain Ali as equivalent to complete realisation of his share, which is not precisely the case, more particularly in view of the fact that an appeal is pending against the decree. Nor do we wish to pass any order which should throw difficulties in the way of Husain Ali's realising his claim, presuming it to be a just one. We think, however, that it is competent to us under the terms of the Act to pass the following order.

We revoke the certificate granted in favour of Husain Ali to the extent of half of the sum specified in the said certificate, namely, to the extent of Rs. 12,500, and we direct that a certificate for the realisation of this amount, as a debt alleged to be due from Masum Ali to Musammat Kifait Fatima, be granted in favour of the appellant Musammat Sharif-un-nisa. The appellant is entitled to her costs of this appeal, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Sale-deed, unregistered, of immoveable property of the value of Rs. 20, admissibility of, to prove nature of possession.

Defendant relied upon an unregistered sale-deed to prove a sale of an open site for Rs. 20. There was oral evidence of the delivery of the site in dispute:

Held, (1) that the sale-deed did not require registration under the provisions of the Registration Act, but it created no title to the site by virtue of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act; [p. 383, col. 1.]

(2) that although inoperative as a conveyance, the sale-deed was admissible as evidence of the agreement in pursuance of which delivery of possession took place. [p. 383, col. 2.]

Second appeal by the plaintiff against the appellate decree of the District Judge, Nimar, confirming on the 23rd December 1915 the decree of the Munsif, Khandwa, decided on the 8th September 1915.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Ramdas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Nathu and his brother were Malguzars of a village. The plaintiffs derive their title from them under two documents, one executed in 1910 and the other in 1913. The plaintiffs seek to eject the defendant from a plot in the abadi after the removal of building, he having purchased from one Ghansiam who, in his turn, obtained a house under a Will executed by Madho Sonar. The plaintiffs' case is that none of these people had a transferable interest in the site. The defence was that Madho Sonar purchased the site in dispute from Nathu, the then Malguzar, under an unregistered sale-deed, dated the 25th June 1895, for a consideration of Rs. 20. Exhibit D-1. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit. The District Judge has found that Exhibit D-1 was executed by Nathu, and that the site conveyed by it is identical with the plot in dispute. Both these findings have been questioned before me. I have, after careful consideration of the argument advanced by the learned Counsel for the appellants, come to the conclusion that these findings cannot be successfully impeached in second appeal. With regard to the identity of the plot, there was no plan attached to the sale-deed, and the description given is clearly of a very imperfect character, and the oral evidence on the record justifies the findings of the District Judge.

Now the document (sale-deed) being for Rs. 20 was admissible in evidence, so far as the provisions of the Registration Act are concerned, but under the Transfer of Property Act, it did not create a title. As pointed out in Musammat Rupa Telin v. Bisambar Teli (1), there is nothing to prevent the defendant proving a title by delivery of possession, as required by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. This has been found in favour of the defendant, but in determining the question as to the identity of the plot, the lower Appellate Court has relied upon the sale-deed to find the dimensions of the plot sold. It is urged for the appellants that this is in effect treating the unregistered document as a sale-deed. There is some force in the argument. The finding of the lower Court would have been equally justified by the oral evidence, which vaguely refers to the plot in the possession of the defendant, but having regard to the nature of the controversy raised by the plaintiff, it was difficult to avoid all reference to the boundaries and dimensions given in the sale-deed. If the document had been one for the validity of which registration was essential, as was the case in the two cases cited for the appellants, I would have agreed with this contention: Parmanand v. Birkhu (2), Narayan Bisnoi v. Jaswant Singh (3). I think the document may be regarded as an agreement to sell, on the principle laid down in the case of Burjorji v. Muncherji (4). At page 151, West, J., referring to the document in the case before him says: "It is, in terms, a conveyance, that is an instrument translative of ownership. * * I could not consider it as in its purport nothing more than an agreement to convey....But that principal purpose failing, the secondary one becomes the principal, and the document might, I think, be used to ascertain what the formal and final conveyance ought to be." The document, Exhibit D-1, fails to be operative as a conveyance. It is, however, admissible in evidence and may, therefore, be regarded as evidence of the agreement, in pursuance of which the delivery of possession took place.

It is urged that the document merely conveys a right to occupy the site and does not purport to sell the site. Such a construction cannot be adopted. It was an open site without any building on it. The instrument is described as a sale-deed and the site is sold for Rs. 20. I see nothing improbable in a Malguzar selling a small site in 1895 to a non-agriculturist for Rs. 20.

It is urged that Nathu's brother Govind Rao did not join in the conveyance, and, therefore, a good title has not been made out. The answer to this is that any right which Govind Rao may have had to object to the sale by his elder brother was barred by limitation long before the date of the suit, even prior to the purchase of the village by the plaintiffs, and it is not, therefore, open to the plaintiffs to raise any such plea.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

THE VELLORE COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD., BY AGENT KUMARASWAMI AIYAR —PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Promissory note—Evidence, admissibility of, to fix date of payment—Cause of action, accrual of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts 69, 80.

Where a promissory note is executed for a loan, evidence is receivable to fix the date of payment. [p. 385, cols. 1 & 2.]

Defendant applied to the plaintiff Bank for a loan on one of the Bank's printed forms, and mentioned therein six months as the period for repayment; his application was accepted and he executed a promissory note in favour of the Bank Upon a suit by the Bank to recover the amount of the promissory note:

Held, (1) that the application to the Bank was admissible in evidence to fix the date of payment; [p. 385, col. 1.]

(2) that the cause of action arose on the expiry of the six months mentioned in the application, and that either Article 69 or 80 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act provided the period of limitation for bringing the suit. [p. 385, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 130 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Vellore, in Original Suit No. 587 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The suit is barred. The cause of action arose on the date of the pro note. Neither the application for loan nor the endorsement thereon could be looked into to supplement what is not expressly stated in the pro note. The promissory note should itself fix the time for payment. Besides, under rule 24 of the Bank's Rules the Bank has the option of suing before the due date.

The proviso to Article 73 of the Limitation Act does not apply, as Exhibit B neither restrains nor postpones the right to sue. Article 69 will apply only when the promissory note in terms fixes the period for payment.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The pro-note and the loan application should be read together. The latter is admissible to supplement the terms of the pro note. Exhibit A contains a promise to pay and the contemporaneous document, Exhibit B, fixes the time for payment. The cause of action arises only on the expiry of that period. Article 69 or Article 80 governs the case.

Rule 24 of the Bank's Rules is a provision intended for the Bank's benefit and does not affect the accrual of the cause of action.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought upon a promissory note, Exhibit A. The question is when the cause of action arose for the suit. The defendant applied to the Bank at Vellore by Exhibit B for a loan. The application is in a printed form and be filled up the blank by inserting the words "for 6 months' thavanai." Thereupon the application was referred to an officer of the Bank who made an endorsement to this effect: "The applicants are responsible men. I am of opinion that Rs. 3,000 may be lent to them for six months' thavani at 12 annas per mensem." On the same date the promissory note was executed. In the accounts of the Bank, Exhibit C, six months' interest was deducted from the money paid to the defendant. On these facts the question is whether the cause of action arose on the date of the note or whether it arose only after the six months provided for in the application form, Exhibit B. Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar referred us to one circumstance which may be disposed of at once. He referred to rule 24 of the Rules of the Bank, which provided for the Bank anticipating the due date and suing before the six months are over. That was a provision made in the interests of the Bank and certainly has no effect upon the date upon which the cause of action starts. That provision was doubtless made to enable the Bank to bring a suit, if it found that the defendant had become an insolvent or was likely to leave the jurisdiction of the Court. In our opinion that provision could not in the least affect the starting period of limitation. The learned Vakil for the appellant argued that the exception provided for in Article 73 can have no application to this case. There is something to be said for this argument, because the article speaks of an agreement in writing restraining or postponing the right to sue.

It is doubtful whether Exhibit B really restrains or postpones the right to sue. The proper mode of looking at Exhibit B is to regard it as forming part of the same transaction as Exhibit A and as fixing the period of payment six months after the date on which the document was executed.

The first question is whether this document is receiveble in evidence. If we understand Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar's arguments rightly, he seemed to suggest that if Exhibits A and B are read together, then stamp duty will be payable as on a promissory note payable six months after date. But we regard Exhibit A as containing a promise to pay and Exhibit B, which is contemporaneous with Exhibit A, as fixing the time for payment. That such a document is receivable in evidence is clear from the judgment of Lord Dunedin in Motabhoy Mulla Essabhoy v. Mulji Haridas (1). In that case there was a promissory note for Rs. 50,000 and there was also a contemporaneous oral agreement that the document should not be sued on but that another document should be given for the amount. The suit was brought on a promissory note. The Judicial Committee, differing from the Courts below, held that this agreement, which had the effect of substituting a new contract for the promissory note, could be pleaded in defence and was receivable in evidence. The principle of the decision is applicable to the present case. It is open to defendant to plead that, notwithstanding the language of Exhibit A it was agreed between the parties that the cause of action for the money was not to commence until after six months of the date of the note. Further Cumming v. Shand (2) points out that the custom of the trade can be read into a promissory note or bill of exchange executed by a customer to the Bank. Here the printed form makes it clear that it is customary for the Bank to fix a period for payment. Therefore, the promissory note must be taken to have been given subject to that proviso. To the same effect is the ruling in Brown v. North (3).

For these reasons we are of opinion that the document, Exhibit B with the endorsement thereon, is receivable in evidence.

If they are receivable in evidence, the next question is under what article of the Limitation Act does the present suit fall. As we said at the outset, it may be open to argument whether Article 75 in terms is applicable. But we fail to see why Article 69 or Article 80 should not apply to this case. Article 69 provides for a suit upon a bill of exchange or money payable at a fixed time and the third column is "when the bill or note falls due." It was contended for the appellant that unless the promissory note itself in terms embodies this stipulation as to the period of payment, the article is not applicable. We are unable to agree with this contention. If evidence is receivable to fix the date of payment, then that would explain the contract which has been entered into and would have the effect of supplementing the contract on a matter on which it is silent and which is not in conflict with the terms of the note. Similarly, as regards Article 80, it is a general article which refers to all suits and promissory notes and the third column makes time commence when the bill or note or bond becomes payable. On our view that Exhibit B is receivable in evidence, that document makes the promissory note payable 6 months after the date of the execution of Exhibit A. For these reasons we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the cause of action arose six months after the execution of Exhibit A and not immediately after. We are supported in our view by the decision of the Full Bench in Annamalai Chetty v. Velayuddu Nadar (4), although this exact point was not decided in it.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 17 (2)—Failure of respondent to appear—Duty of Court—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 219—Revision—Material irregularity.

The absence of the respondent on the date fixed for hearing an appeal is no justification for decreeing the appeal Under rule 17 (2) of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code the Court is bound to hear the appeal and record a judgment, and its failure to do so amounts to a material irregularity within the meaning of section 219 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, involving interference by the Board of Revenue.

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Jhansi Division, dated the 22nd of May 1919, in the case of correction of papers.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(January 15, 1920.)—This is a third appeal under the Land Revenue Act, III of 1901. Musammat Raj Rani is appellant. Ramkishan is respondent. Musammat Rajrani won in the first two Courts. Ramkishan appealed to the Commissioner. The Commissioner, in a summary order with no apparent attempt to consider the merits of Ramkishan's appeal, gave him a decree simply because the respondent before him, Musammat Rajrani, had not appeared to reply to the appeal at the date fixed. This procedure on the Commissioner's part was too summary altogether. When an appellant does not appear, a Court may make a simple order dismissing the appeal under Order XLI, rule 17 (1), but when the appellant appears but the respondent does not, he has to hear the appeal under rule 17 (2) of the same Order (XLI), and he has further to write a judgment, as is apparent from the opening words of Order XLI, rule 21, and a judgment has to contain reasons for the decision on the points in dispute, under rule 31 of the same Order, which is made applicable to cases under the Land Revenue Act by rule 26 of Board's Circular 8-II.

Unless the Commissioner thinks the appellant's case a good one and gives reasons for so doing, he is not entitled to allow his appeal merely because the respondent has not turned up.

It is, however, argued that I cannot interfere in third appeal because of the specific section 201 of the Land Revenue Act. No doubt section 200 covers respondent as well as appellant and the word "order" in section 201 may be construed having in that section a wider meaning than it has in Order XLI, rule 17 (1), Civil Procedure Code, but this is immaterial in the present case. Taking the case to be that an appeal does not lie, a remedy is open by treating the case in revision under the latter portion of section 219, Land Revenue Act. The late Commissioner's order contained material irregularity and I would set it aside in revision and direct that the case be restored to his file and heard and decided on merits, opportunity being given to the appellant Musammat Rajrani to appear and reply as respondent before the Commissioner. Parties will pay their own costs in the present proceeding. Other costs will be determined by the Commissioner when he finally decides the appeal.

HARRISON, J. M.—(February 11, 1920).—I agree. Rules 17 and 21 of Order XLI are made applicable by rule 24 of the Board's Circular 8-II.

Order set aside.

JUDGMENT.—One Balaji died in 1883 leaving a widow Chandrabhaga and a stepmother Kaveri. Chandrabhaga died on the 21st December 1898 as found by the lower Court, and the present suit was instituted on the 19th December 1910 by the plaintiff, who is admittedly one of the nearest reversioners of Balaji. Chandrabhaga had executed four mortgages in the name of defendant No. 1, who was the sole defendant when the suit was instituted. Upon the basis of these mortgages two suits were instituted for foreclosure by defendant No. 1 and two decrees absolute were passed in his favour and possession was taken by him in 1895. The plaintiff's case is that there was no legal necessity for the mortgages, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover possession of half share of the property either unconditionally, or subject to payment of so much of the mortgage money as is legally binding upon the reversioner. One Amrit, who is the grandson of the plaintiff's brother, has refused to join in the suit, and the plaintiff, therefore, claims only half share. Upon an objection raised by the defendant, by an order of the Court, his father and brother who were admittedly members of a joint Hindu family, were made parties after the period of limitation had expired. The lower Court has held that the mortgagee made enquiries as to the necessity for loans and was satisfied about its existence, and the lower Court has also held that the whole suit was barred by limitation.

There are two questions which arise for decision in this case. The first is whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by reason of joinder of the other defendants when more than twelve years had elapsed from the date of the cause of action. The second is whether there is legal necessity for the various loans and which of them.

I will take up the point of limitation first. The defendant No. 2, the father of the first defendant, who is since dead, was at the time of mortgage in the Government service, and in order to evade the rule relating to the conduct of Government servants, had the mortgage taken not in his own name, as a manager of a joint Hindu family, but in the name of his son, the defendant No. 1. It was this defendant who brought the two suits without joining his co-parceners. It was he in whose name mutation took place in revenue records. He is, therefore, a "benamidar" for the joint family consisting of himself and his co-parceners. It is urged before me that a transaction of this kind is not a "benami" transaction inasmuch as it is a purchase in the name of one member of a joint and undivided family, and it is argued that a resulting trust only takes place when property is acquired by one man in the name of a perfect stranger having no interest in the property so transferred. The answer to the first argument is to be found in the passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter in Ohunder Nath Moitro v. Kristo Komul Singh (1), cited by Mayne:—"So far as the ordinary and usual course of things is concerned, the practice of making benami purchases in the names of female members of joint undivided Hindu families is just as much rife in this country, as that of making such purchases in the names of male members." It follows that a purchase in the name of one member of a joint Hindu family is a benami transaction, especially when that member is not the managing member or a representative of the family. As regards the principle of resulting trust embodied in section 83 of the Indian Trusts Act, the wording of the section is consistent with the view that a resulting trust takes place when three persons jointly furnish the purchase money, and the purchase takes place in the name of one of them. I have not been shown any authority against this view. Now a benamidar is allowed to represent the real owner in suits both as plaintiff as well as defendant. A decree obtained by a benamidar or against a benamidar is binding upon the real owner. If then he represents the real owner, the joinder of the other defendants was unnecessary, inasmuch as the decree even without their joinder would have been binding upon them. This view is supported by the decision of the Bombay High Court in Ravji v. Mahadev (2). The joinder of the real owner, after the period of limitation had expired, was held to be not a case contemplated by section 22 of the Limitation Act. The principle, I understand, is that if a person is already represented by a party to the suit, his joinder is not the joinder of a new plaintiff or a new defendant. Acting on this principle I hold that the suit was not barred by limitation.

I now proceed to discuss whether there was any legal necessity for the various mortgages which culminated in the foreclosure decrees. The lower Court finds that the defendant No. 2 made proper enquiries from not only the father of Chandrabhaga and her Muktiar but also from two persons Madho and Chintaman who are now dead. There is no doubt in my mind that there was necessity for the loan in favour of Jairam for Rs. 1,000. This was required for the purpose of obtaining possession of the estate of Chandrabhaga's husband which was then in the hands of his step mother. But it does not follow that there was necessity for all the loans which were taken to embark in the various litigations in which Chandrabhaga had figured. After obtaining possession of her husband's estate from Musammat Kaveri, Chandrabhaga embarked upon a litigation for rendition of accounts and mesne profits against Musammat Kaveri and her agent. Rs. 599 are said to have been advanced for this purpose as recited in the mortgage-deed Exhibit D-35. There was, of course, no necessity for this litigation. It was a foolish litigation, for it does not appear that anything could have been recovered from either of the persons against whom the suit was filed. It is impossible for me to pass this item as one incurred for legal necessity or binding upon reversioners. The taxed costs of suit for possession against Musammat Kaveri, which I have held to be a proper litigation, amounted to Rs. 492. The whole of the amount originally borrowed from Jairam, Rs. 1,000, would be more than enough for that litigation. On the mortgage deed, Exhibit D-34, therefore, I allow Rs. 1,042 8-0 paid to Jairam. On the date when Exhibit D-34 was executed, a decree had already been passed a week previously for possession of the estate. Therefore, I can find no justification for raising another item of Rs. 600 for the purpose of litigation. The slightest enquiry would have shown that no such money was needed. I think Rs. 1,042-8 0, is all that can be claimed as binding upon the reversioners under Exhibit D-34. Now dealing with the second mortgage Rs. 101-4-0, expenses in connection with a criminal case brought by Kaveri against Chandrabhaga may be passed as properly incurred. Similarly Rs. 202-4-0 taken for costs in a suit instituted by Kaveri for maintenance may be allowed, for Kaveri was claiming Rs. 15 per month as maintenance and the Court eventually reduced the claim to Rs. 10 per month. Rs. 65 borrowed for expenses in connection with the Sradh ceremony of Chandrabhaga's father-in-law appears to be a legitimate item. In the third mortgage-bond, Exhibit D 36, the purpose for which the money was taken is not recited. I am dealing with the case of a creditor who in the previous bonds gives full details of the purposes of the loans but deliberately omits to mention the purpose in this bond. I cannot accept the defendant No. 2's statement about enquiries and allow his claim under this bond at all. The fourth mortgage bond ostensibly for Rs. 2,500 was never given full effect to. Money was borrowed by Chandrabhaga for filing a suit for specific performance against one Ahalya for the purchase of a village for Rs. 1,800, which she according to defendant No. 2 expected to sell for Rs. 3,000, thus making a profit of Rs 1,500. This was a speculation and it is obvious that the money borrowed for such a purpose cannot be held binding upon the reversioners: as a matter of fact only Rs. 816 were advanced under this bond and items regarding Court-fees and Pleader's fees in connection with this suit must be disallowed. The only other item to make up the total of Rs. 816 is Rs. 500 said to be due on a bond not produced but defendant No. 2 as witness says is a bond in connection with the suit for rendition of accounts and mesne profits. I have already held that was not a proper suit to have embarked upon and the money advanced for it cannot be claimed for the reversioners.

The lower Court has relied upon certain loose papers supposed to contain the accounts of Chandrabhaga and produced by D. W. No. 12. They are merely copies and the original was not called for and they are not admissible in evidence. Apart from this I cannot place any reliance upon these loose sheets of paper. Balkrishna who produced them makes a significant remark that he kept these papers with him, as he anticipated a claim from the plaintiff in respect of Chandrabhaga's estate. An agent may keep for his own protection copies of accounts for a few years during which he may be sued: but it is strange that he should have kept these carefully preserved and filed them in 1914. I think these accounts filed by D. W. No. 12 must be rejected.

The suit in which the first foreclosure decree was passed was instituted for the recovery of money due under the mortgage-deeds Exhibits D 34, D 35 and D-36. A decree was passed for the total amount due under them. It is in evidence that the present plaintiff knew of the first of the three mortgages. It is argued that although the plaintiff was not made a party, he ought to have redeemed so much of the mortgage or such of the mortgages as was binding upon the reversioners. No doubt if the suit had been based solely upon a mortgage binding in its entirety on the reversioners, a foreclosure decree obtained thereupon would have been binding upon the reversioners. But in the suit instituted by the defendant No. 1 against Chandrabhaga, he joined all three mortgages and so the reversioners could not have very well been asked to redeem part of the mortgage. Not being made parties, the reversioners were not bound to redeem and the widow's inaction in the matter cannot in the least prejudice the reversionary rights. The argument before me is that as the reversioner knew of the suit he should have applied to be made a party and sought to redeem so much of the mortgage as is binding. No authority has been cited in support of the proposition that a person interested in certain litigation is bound to apply to have himself made a party and in default to be bound by the result of that litigation. It is true that when a suit is carried on on behalf of a person not made a party he may be bound by the result of that litigation, but this was not a case of that kind. Here the suit was against Chandrabhaga and not against the reversioner. I hold that there is no force in the argument that the knowledge of the plaintiff of the litigation bars his making the present claim.

The plaintiff had knowledge and was present when the money was paid by Jairam. He in fact received Rs. 18 advanced to Chandrabhaga out of the consideration money from Jairam. Under the circumstances the propriety of the loan in favour of Jairam must be presumed. On this ground I will allow the whole of Rs. 1,042-8-0 paid by the defendant to Jairam. But the consent obtained from Chintaman when he was executing a bond in favour of the defendant is also relied upon as raising a presumption. Chintaman was then separate from his brother, the present plaintiff. It was, therefore, the consent of one of two reversioners or rather ratification by him. Ordinarily a presumption in favour of the propriety of a transaction is made when it has the consent or is subsequently ratified by the next reversioner, but the circumstances of the present case entirely rebut the presumption. The recitals of the document completely prove that money was being advanced for litigation, which was useless and unnecessary. Therefore, I am not prepared to differ from the lower Court in its view that in regard to mortgages other than the one in favour of Jairam no presumption of their propriety should be made.

A small amount in respect of proportionate costs of stamp and registration would have to be added to the above items. The learned Pleader for the respondent tells me that the amount which I have declared to be a proper charge on the estate may be taken as satisfied out of the usufruct and, therefore, there need be no further enquiry as to the profits received by the defendants. The result is that the plaintiff's suit succeeds. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and in lieu thereof a decree for possession is passed as prayed for in the plaint. The respondent will pay the costs in both the Courts.

Decree set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Revenue sale—Purchaser, position of—Decree obtained by ex-proprietor, whether can be taken, advantage of—Tenants, position of.

The purchaser of an estate at a revenue sale is not bound by the act of the ex-proprietor. He gets the estate as it stood at the time of the Permanent Settlement. But it is open to the purchaser, if he wishes, to accept a previous decision between the ex-proprietor and his tenants as binding on himself and take advantage of it. If he does so, the tenants cannot object, because the purchaser is not in any worse position than the ex-proprietor and may elect to take advantage of the decree obtained by the latter, although the decree is not res judicata as between the purchaser and the tenants. [p. 54, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Beachcroft, dated the 26th of November 1918, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1109 of 1917, reported as 49 Ind. Cas. 959, reversing that of the District Judge Chittagong, dated the 29th of March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellants.

—Defendants are appellants here. This appeal arises out of a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in the price of foodstuffs and also on the ground of the rent being lower than the prevailing rate.

In 1903 the ex-proprietor of the estate instituted a suit for ejectment or assessment of rent in the alternative. The 1st Court thought that the previous decree would be binding and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court found it would not be binding and dismissed the suit. Mr. Justice Beachcroft in this Hon'ble Court held that the previous suit was res judicata and would be binding and decreed the suit.

My first submission is that the decree in the previous suit would not be binding as between the tenant and the auction-purchaser of the estate at the revenue sale.

Sections 33—35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act show the modes prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement of rent.

The rent-decree of 1903 cannot be said to be res judicata because the soil has undergone change since 1903.

The presumption under section 27 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would not arise in this case. Upon the findings of the Court of Appeal below no appeal lay before this Court.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Fifteen years have not yet expired since the last enhancement in 1903.]

In section 37 the manner prescribed refers to sections 30, 31A, 31B, 32, 35 and 36 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Section 37 is only a part of the substantive law and limits the power of the landlord to enhance the rent. It is not a part of procedure.

Did the Legislature contemplate different procedure in case of contract and suit?

I submit it did not. If the ex-proprietor makes a contract and then the present proprietor institutes a suit, an anomalous position will arise under section 37. Therefore, section 37 is not a part of the procedure Refers to Moonshee Buzlool Rahman v. Iran Dhun

The previous suit is not res judicata. See Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherjee (2), Gadadhar Bose v. Radha Charan Poddar (3).

If the auction-purchaser does not derive his title from ex-proprietor, the previous decision does not affect the rights of the parties.

If these decisions are not binding, I submit that the finding that no evidence was there to assess an equitable rent is conclusive. His Lordship Mr. Justice Beachcroft is in error in deciding that point in second appeal.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Charu Chandra Sen, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—I do not decide this appeal as a question of res judicata for it may be said that the auction-purchaser was not a party to the previous litigation nor did he claim under the ex proprietor within the meaning of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The purchaser is not bound by the act of the ex-proprietor. He gets the estate as it stood at the time of the Permanant Settlement. But the position here is this. The matter would have been res judicata if the question had arisen between the ex-proprietor and the tenants and in such case the latter would be bound to pay the rent previously adjudicated, and it is open to the purchaser, if he wishes, to accept the previous decision as binding on himself and the advantage of it. If he does so, it seems to me that the tenant cannot object. The purchaser is certainly not in any worse position than the ex-proprietor and may elect to take advantage of the decree obtained by the latter. If this were not so, then at each and every sale all previous litigations might be re opened and the purchaser in such a case might be worse off than the ex proprietor from whom he had purchased. I do not decide here what would be the effect if the purchaser had not accepted the previous decision. No doubt mutuality is a test of res judicata, but this is not a question of res judicata as between the purchaser and the tenant, but it is a case in which the tenant would have been bound towards his previous landlord and in which the purchaser at the revenue sale has elected to succeed to the right in this respect of the ex-proprietor. The rights of the tenants are in no way enlarged by the revenue sale.

In my opinion, therefore, there is no ground for reversing the decision of this Court and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

ADUSUMILLI KRISHNAYYA v. ADUSUMILLI LAKSHMIPATHI.

FACTS of the case and the arguments adduced sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment. The case lays down no new law, having been for all practical purposes concluded by their Lordships' judgment in Veerabasavaraju Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1) delivered after these appeals were filed: but it is reported for the succinct summary which the judgment contains of the law of adoption by a Hindu widow in the Dravada country.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—These are consolidated appeals from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which affirmed, with variations, a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam. The question for determination is whether the adoption of the first appellant, Adusumilli Kristnayya, is valid under the Hindu Law as administered in the Madras Presidency.

The parties are subject to the Mitakshara Law of adoption as administered in the Dravada country: and that law, which has been considered by the Judicial Committee in several recent cases, is now free from doubt. It was decided in the Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2)] that under the law here referred to a Hindu widow, although not authorised by her husband to adopt a son for him, may nevertheless make such an adoption with the consent of his sapindas. In a later case, Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (3), it was said that:—

"There should be such proof of assent on the part of the sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives in order to defeat the interest of this or that sapinda, but upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband."

The reference in the last mentioned case to a 'family council" gave rise to some doubt whether where there were agnatic relations closely related to the deceased, the assent of those standing in a remoter degree was either necessary or sufficient; but this doubt was resolved in the recent case of Veerabasavaraju Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1), where it was held that the absence of consent on the part of the nearest sapindas cannot be made good by the authorisation of distant relatives whose assent is more likely to be influenced by improper motives. This does not mean that the consent of a near sapinda who is incapable of forming a judgment on the matter, such as a minor or a lunatic, is either sufficient or necessary; nor does it exclude the view that, where a near relative is clearly proved to be actuated by corrupt or malicious motives, his dissent may be disregarded. Nor does it contemplate cases where the nearest sapinda happens to be in a distant country, and it is impossible without great difficulty to obtain his consent or where he is a convict or suffering a term of imprisonment. The consent required is that of a substantial majority of those agnates nearest in relationship who are capable of forming an intelligent and honest judgment on the matter. It must, however, be added that, save in exceptional cases such as those mentioned above, the consent of the nearest sapindas must be asked and if it is not asked it is no excuse to say that they would certainly have refused [Venkamma v. Subramaniam (4)]. Regard must also be had to the following observations of the Board in Sri Virada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishoro Patta Deo (5):

"But it is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property, and it may be in the case of collateral succession, as in the present instance, the rights of parties in actual possession, dependent on the caprice of a woman, subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the Courts to keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it."

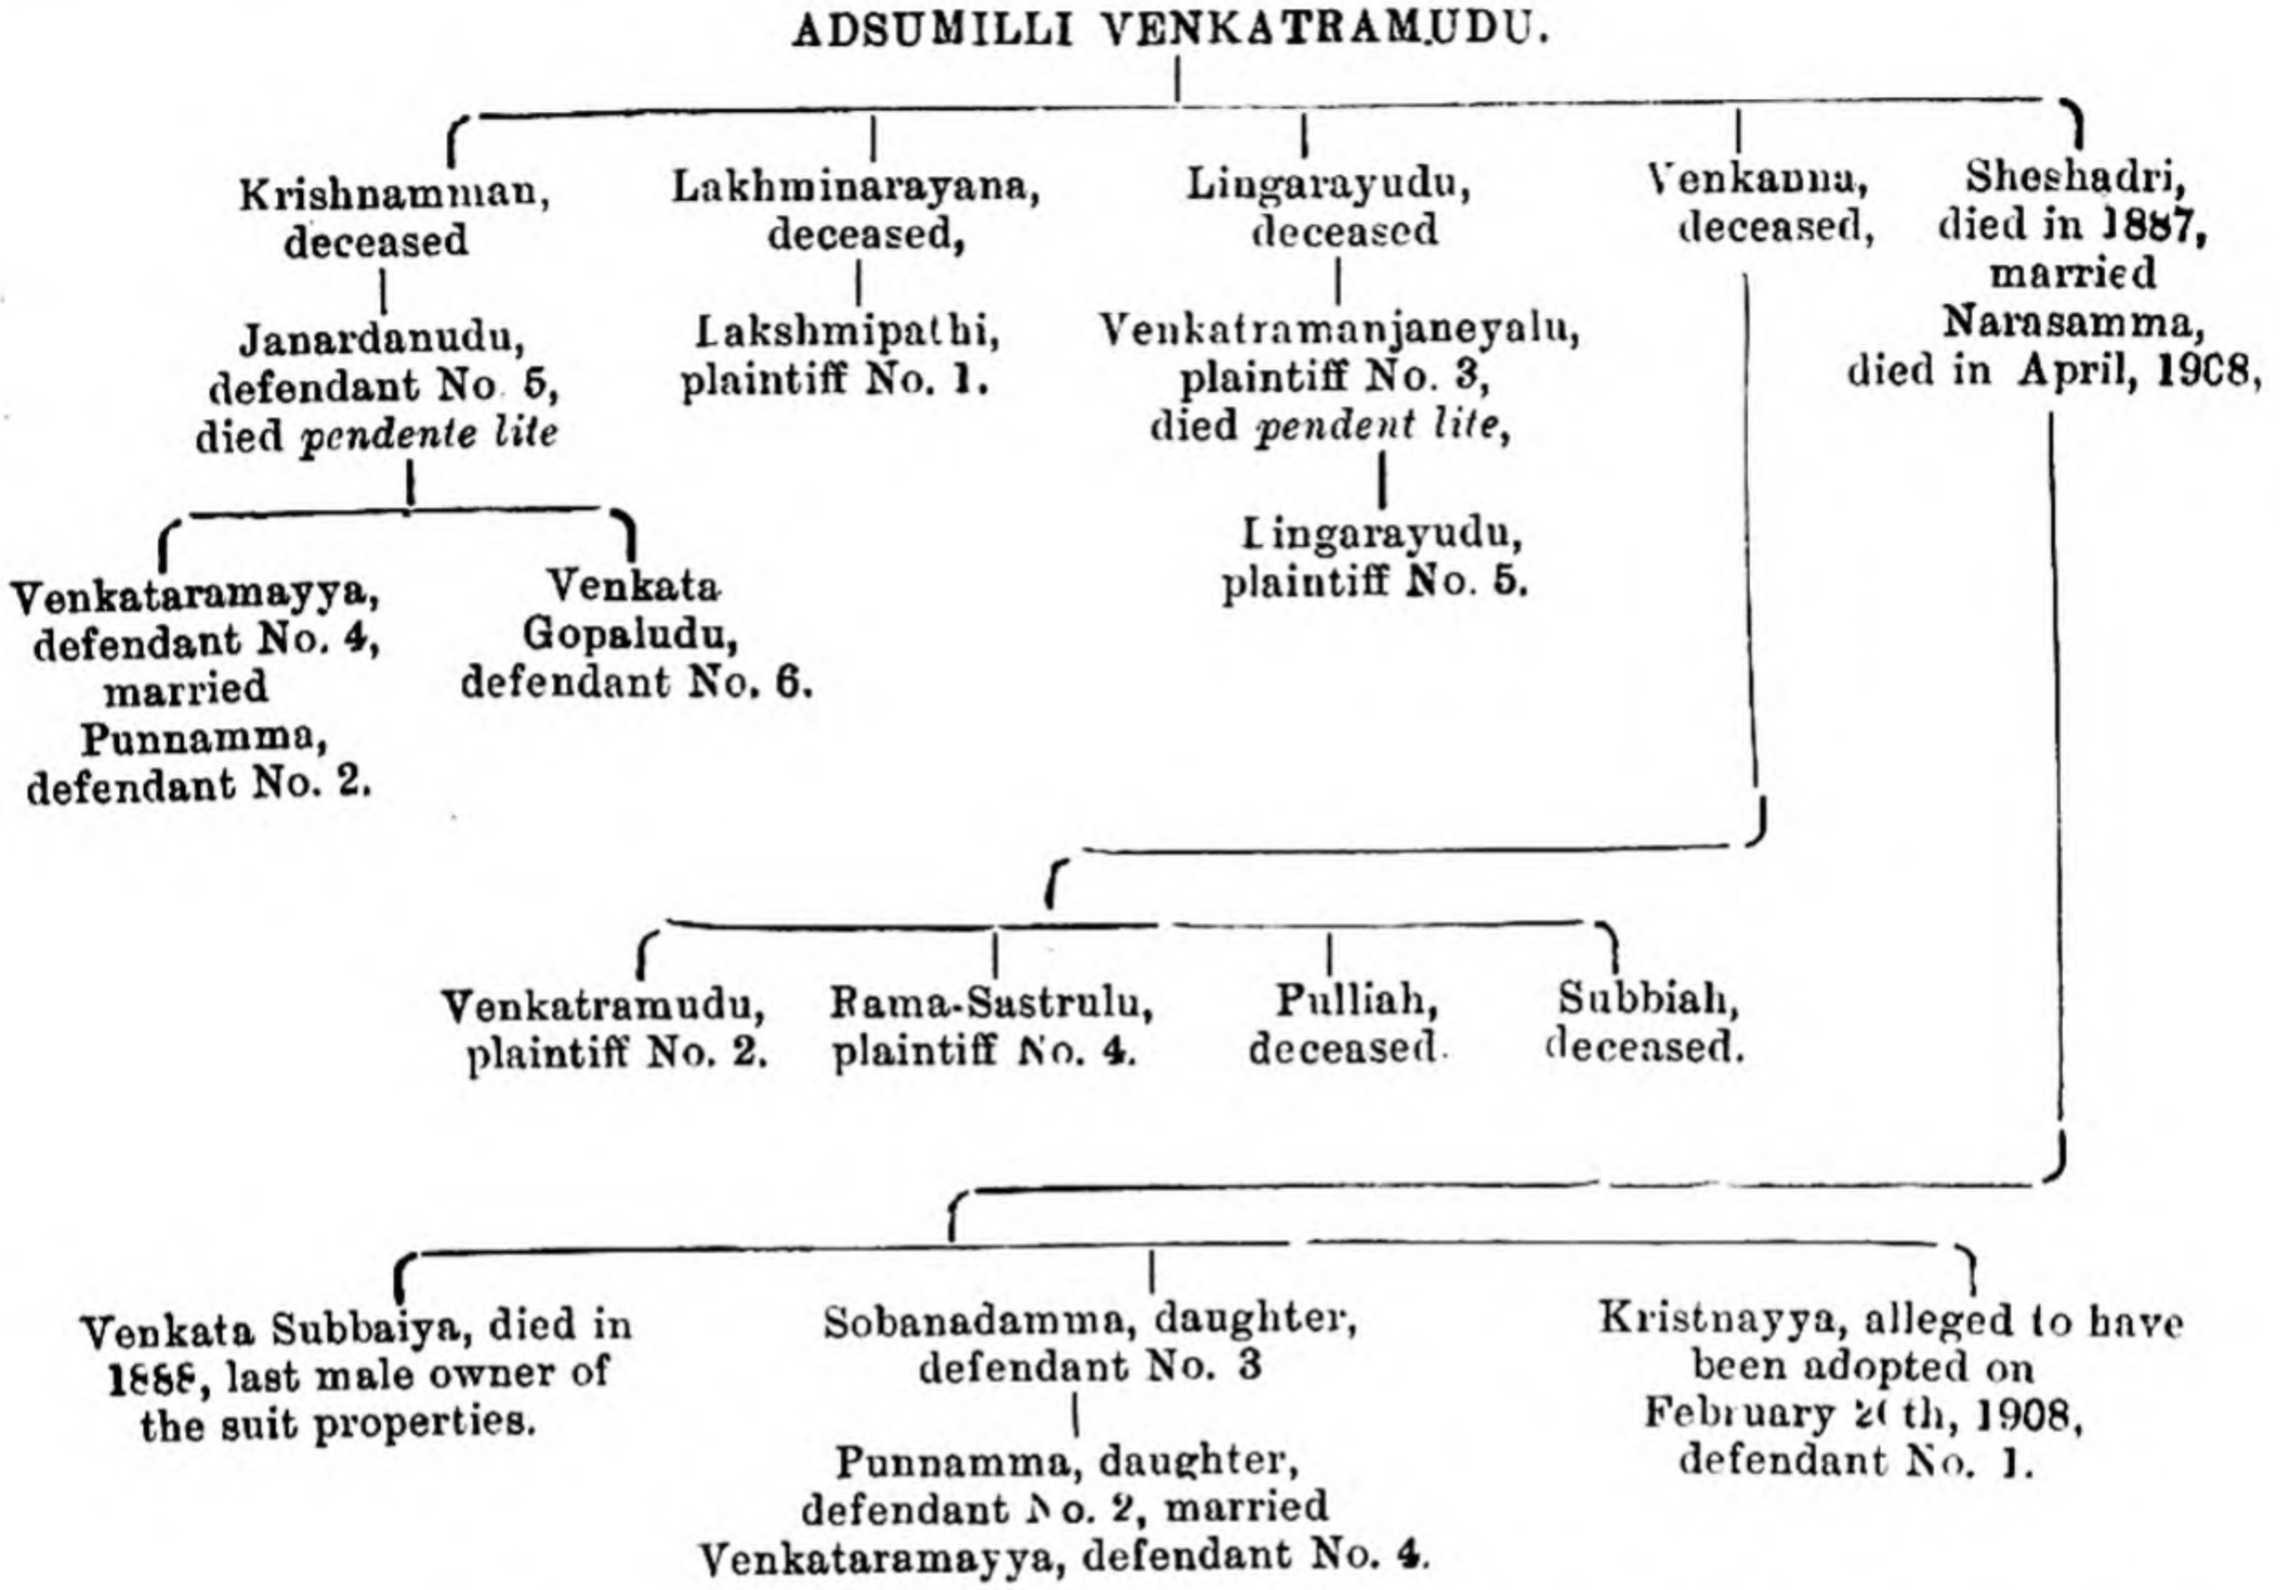
Turning now to the facts of the present case, the relationship between the parties will be explained by the following pedigree:—



Sheshadri, who was separated from his brothers, died in the year 1887 leaving a widow, Narasamma, and an only son, Venkata Subbaiya, who was then about thirteen years of age and unmarried. In the month of October 1888 this son was murdered, and his mother succeeded to the property of her husband, taking a Hindu widow's estate. Pulliah and Subbiah, two of the sons of Sheshadri's brother Venkanna, were charged with the murder, but were acquitted. They were then charged with the theft of some jewels which were on the person of the murdered boy before his death, but Pulliah died before the trial and Subbiah was ultimately acquitted on this charge also. On the 8th September 1901 Narasamma called a meeting of her husband's gnatis and obtained from 14 of them a deed authorising her to receive in adoption to her husband any boy she might like. At that time the nearest sapindas of Sheshadri were six in number, viz., the fifth defendant Janardanudu, and the five plaintiffs; but of these only Janardanudu signed the deed, and the other signatories were gnatis of remoter degrees. Narasamma did not at once act on this authority, but upwards of six years afterwards, viz, on the 20th February 1908, she adopted the defendant Kristnayya, who was then of age. Before making the adoption she entered into agreements with Kristnayya and his natural father under which the greater part of the property of Sheshadri was put at her absolute disposal, and she, in fact, disposed of it in favour of the issue of her daughter. Narasamma died in April 1908 and shortly afterwards this suit was brought by the plaintiffs to set aside the adoption.

From the above statement of facts, standing alone, the obvious conclusion would be that the adoption was invalid for want of the assent of five out of the six nearest sapindas. But the defendants by their written statement in the case alleged that Narasamma had applied, first to Venkanna (the only brother of Seshadri who survived him), and after his death to the plaintiffs and Subbiah, for their authority to make an adoption; and that all those persons, "out of dishonest and corrupt motives" and by reason of the long-standing enmity caused by the charges of murder and theft made against Pulliah and Subbiah, and with the desire to succeed to the property of Venkata Subbaiya, had refused or neglected to grant the authority asked for. In support of this plea the defendants called evidence of four attempts to obtain the desired authority. First, it was alleged that Narasamma, through her gumasta, applied to Venkanna for his consent, and that he put off his reply and died shortly afterwards without giving the desired authority. Secondly, it was alleged that Narasamma personally requested the third plaintiff, Venkatramanjaneyulu to consent to an adoption and to get the other plaintiffs and Subbiah to consent, that he promised to consult them and let her know, but that he never, in fact, gave her a reply. Thirdly, it was stated that the plaintiffs and Subbiah were invited to and were present at the meeting of gratis on the 8th September 1901 and that on being requested to agree to an adoption they replied that "there was no hurry" and shortly afterwards left the meeting. Fourthly, it was alleged that shortly before the actual adoption in 1908 Narasamma again sent an emissary to the plaintiffs (Subbiah being then dead) and asked for their consent to an adoption, but that they refused to give it except on payment of Rs. 10,000. The evidence relating to these allegations was examined both by the Subordinate Judge and by the High Court, and both tribunals came to the conclusion that none of the alleged requests had been proved. Notwithstanding these concurrent findings, their Lordships were pressed by Counsel for the appellants to examine the evidence on this question; and as the findings of the Subordinate Judge were by no means clear and his reasons were somewhat inconsistent, they have considered the evidence which was brought to their notice by Counsel on both sides. As the result of this consideration they have come to the following conclusions:—

1. The finding of the Courts on the question of these alleged applications was mainly based upon the view that, having regard to the hostility existing between the plaintiffs and Narasamma, it was unlikely that they would have been asked for their consent: but the evidence as a whole does not appear to support this view. The first plaintiff was not on unfriendly terms with Narasamma and at one time got her lands cultivated for her; and the Subordinate Judge in one part of his judgment says that there was "no ill feeling" between them The third plaintiff was plainly on speaking terms with Narasamma and was from time to time consulted by her; and the Subordinate Judge himself says that "it is not unlikely that he was requested by Narasamma to give his consent and also ascertain the wishes of his cousins, as probably the other persons were not quite so well disposed towards Narasamma as the third plaintiff." As to the other plaintiffs there was no clear evidence; and although it is very probable that the charges made against their brothers caused an estrangement between the second and fourth plaintiffs and Narasamma, the Subordinate Judge expressed a doubt whether this feeling continued in the same intensity down to the year 1901. Upon the whole, the true inference appears to their Lordships to be that, while there was some unfriendliness between Narasamma and two of the plaintiffs, this did not extend to the other plaintiffs and was not in any case such as to prevent Narasamma from asking for their consent to an adoption. Further, in no case is there evidence of such malice on the plaintiffs' part as would prevent them from forming an honest judgment on the matter,

2. It appears probable that Venkanna was asked for his consent: but as he died without giving a reply and there is no evidence of ill feeling on his part, this circumstance is immaterial.

3. It is also not improbable that shortly before the meeting of September 1901, the third plaintiff was consulted on the question of an adoption and was asked to ascertain the views of the other plaintiffs and Subbiah; but there is nothing to show that he did in fact ask for their consent or that his reply was delayed by reason of spite or malice. This circumstance, therefore, is also of little importance.

4. With regard to the meeting of the 8th September 1901 the evidence is conflicting. The defendants' witnesses say that the plaintiffs were present, and on being consulted said that there was no hurry about the matter and went away; but this is denied by the surviving plaintiffs. The defendants' witnesses were not believed by the Subordinate Judge, and it must be held that this allegation is not proved.

5. As to the alleged request in 1908, the defendants' evidence is conflicting and unreliable, and this allegation also breaks down.

The result of the above survey of evidence is that, in their Lordships' view, Narasamma is proved to have applied for the consent of the third plaintiff, but not of the other four plaintiffs, and that none of these five nearest sapindas is proved to have withheld his consent for any malicious or corrupt reason. It follows that the necessary assent of sapindas was not obtained, and the adoption was invalid.

Counsel for the appellants put forward an alternative argument, viz, that in view of the finding of the Courts in India that there was great hostility between the plaintiffs and Narasamma, it was unnecessary for her to ask for their consent; but this argument cannot be entertained. It is inconsistent, not only with the defendants' pleading, but with the whole of their evidence and arguments in the Courts below; and it is not open to them to make an entirely new case before this Board. In any case the argument derives no support either from the facts or from the law as above explained.

Apart from the absence of the necessary assent, other objections to the adoption were put forward on behalf of the respondents. It was said (1) that an authority given by sapindas to adopt "any boy at any time" is invalid [see Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (6)]; that an authority given by sapindas in 1901 could not validly be executed in 1908 when several of the signatories were dead and the opinion of others might have altered; and (3) that an authority to adopt asked and given for religious motives and in order to keep up the line of succession to Seshadri was not properly exercised by the adoption of Kristnayya on the terms that he should give up to the adopting widow or to her relatives the greater part of her late husband's estates. These questions, although raised in the Courts below, were not the subject of decision there; and their Lordships accordingly refrain from expressing any opinion upon them. But it is certain that these circumstances do not detract from the obligation imposed upon the Courts in cases of this character to require a strict compliance with the conditions imposed by law.

For the above reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66, object of—Court sale—Agreement by purchaser to convey property purchased, whether enforceable.

The object of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to put an end to purchases at Court auctions by one person in the name of another. [p. 398, col.]

An agreement by an auction-purchaser subsequent to the purchase to convey a portion of the property to another is not affected by section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code and is enforceable. [p. 399, col 1]

Consolidated appeals from the decrees of the High Court, Madras, dated 10th April 1916, reversing the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput.

FACTS.—These were suits to enforce an agreement to convey land purchased by the defendant at an execution sale. The facts are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment. The trial Court dismissed the suits on facts alone and did not deal with the issue as to whether the suits were barred by section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On appeal the High Court found that the auction-purchaser was a real purchaser but that he had agreed to convey to the plaintiffs such portions of the property for which they had already paid or had under such agreement to pay the balance of the purchase-money which took the case out of the purview of that section, and granted plaintiffs decrees.

Mr. Dube, for the Appellant.—The agreement, if proved, and even as found by the High Court, established that appellant was a benamidar and was governed by section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section requires (1) a suit to be brought against a certified purchaser, and (2) based upon the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of a person other than the certified purchaser. The suits were, therefore, not maintainable.

Kishan Lal v. Goruruddhuaja Prosad Singh (1), Ganga Baksh v. Rudar Singh (2), Suroj Narain v. Ratan Lal (3).

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents.—The purchasers at the Court auction sale were real purchasers who had agreed to convey to the plaintiffs in these suits or their predecessors in-title such portions of the property for which they had already paid or for which a balance remained to be paid under the agreement. The plaintiffs were beneficially interested in the purchase and in no way affected by section 66. Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (4).

The original agreement had been ratified on two occasions subsequent to the sale: the agreements subsequent to the sale were unaffected by the section and were enforceable. Amrutam Venkatappa v. Vavilala Jalayya (5), Kumbalinga Pillai v. Arisputra Padiachi (6).

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Madras reversing two decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Chingleput, and giving judgment in both suits for the plaintiffs. The following statement of the facts is founded upon the findings of the High Court, which, for reasons which will hereafter appear, their Lordships accept as correct.

One Sundarammal was the owner of certain lands in the village of Kovur and elsewhere in the Chingleput District, subject to a first mortgage for Rs. 25,000 and interest and to a second mortgage for Rs. 9,500 and interest, and had incurred other debts. In the year 1902 the second mortgagees brought a suit to enforce their mortgage, obtained a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, and themselves purchased it at the auction at a low price. Thereupon Sundarammal, in order to get this sale set aside under section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code and to provide for her other debts, entered into an agreement with four persons named Murugappa, Kandasami, Munisami and Ponnambala, for the sale of the whole property to them at the price of Rs. 65,000, being a sum sufficient to pay off the mortgage and other debts and to provide a small balance for the vendor. These persons were friends of Sundarammal, and it was understood that they should dispose of the lands piecemeal and, after paying out of the proceeds of sale the mortgage and other debts of Sundarammal and any money due to themselves, should pay over to her any balance which might remain. The property was accordingly conveyed to the four persons above named (who will be referred to as "the vendees") on the 10th August 1902; and on the 15th August 1902 they paid into Court a sum of Rs. 15,598, being a sum sufficient to satisfy the second mortgagees, and got the sale to those mortgagees set aside. On the 27th September 1902 the vendees divided amongst themselves about sixty acres of the land, which were taken to represent in value the amount which they had paid for redeeming the second mortgagees; and some time afterwards, as no sale could be made of the remaining lands in Kovur, the vendees made a similar division of those lands among themselves on the understanding that each of them should be responsible for his share of the debts. On this division a part of the land was reserved for Sundarammal, apparently in satisfaction of her interest in the ultimate balance to arise on realisation. Murugappa died, and his interest in the lands became vested in his widow and certain alienees from her. Meanwhile the first mortgagees, who had not been parties to the arrangements above recited, became dissatisfied; and in the year 1904 they took proceedings to enforce their mortgage, and on the 14th March 1904 obtained a decree for sale. The sale was fixed for the 3rd May 1905; and it is obvious that the persons claiming under the deed of 1902 ran the risk, unless they made some arrangement, of losing the benefit of their purchase and of the monies which they had found to satisfy the second mortgagees. They accordingly determined to bid for the property and for that purpose got together a sum of about Rs. 10,000, which they contributed in unequal shares. It was then ascertained that the appellant Vadivelu and two other persons named Vythilingam and Dharmakartha Kandasami were also proposing to bid, and it was in order to meet this difficulty that the agreement giving rise to these suits was entered into. The agreement was entered into orally between the three persons last named, that is to say, the appellant, Vythilingam and Dharmakartha Kandasami, and the four original vendees or their representatives, and was to the effect that the vendees should not bid for the property but should permit the above named three persons to buy, that if they bought the vendees should advance to them the above sum of about Rs. 10,000 to assist them in providing the deposit and completing the purchase, and that whichever of them became the purchaser of any property allotted on the first or second division to any of the original vendees (with an exception to be immediately mentioned) should convey such property to such vendee or his representative, on payment by him of such proportion of the auction price as might be found to be due from him on an adjustment of accounts. An exception was made in the case of Ponnambala, one of the four vendees, who was not anxious to get back the property allotted to him on the second division; and, so far as he was concerned, the arrangement applied only to the property passing under the first division, and it was understood that, as regards the properties allotted to him on the second division, the appellant should stand in his shoes.

The auction accordingly took place, and the appellant was declared the purchaser of Lot No. 3, comprising about 115 acres of the Kovur lands, for Rs. 21,500, other lots being purchased by Vythilingam and Dharmakartha Kandasami. The vendees duly made the contribution of Rs. 10,000 which they had promised; the balance required was raised from other sources, and sale certificates were issued to the purchasers and possession given to them. The lots purchased by Vythilingam and Dharmakartha Kandasami have been dealt with in accordance with the agreement and need not be further referred to.

In February or March 1906 there was an adjustment of accounts between the appellant and the vendees or their assignees in accordance with the arrangement above referred to. The decision of the questions which arose on the adjustment was entrusted to a panchayat; and it appears from the evidence that the appellant and the other persons concerned signed a written undertaking to abide by the award of the panchayatdars. In the course of this adjustment a slight variation was made in the allotment which had been previously made of the lands; and this variation was accepted by all parties and embodied in the award which fixed the amount payable by each of the vendees on taking his conveyance. The appellant was then quite willing to deal with the allotted lands in the manner agreed before the auction sale and was a party both to the agreement to abide by the award of the panchayatdars and to the agreement to vary the allotments.

In the year 1907, the appellant having shown reluctance to carry out the arrangement, a suit (No. 6 of 1907) was brought against him by certain persons who were nominees of Munisami and Kandasami. This suit did not go to trial but was settled by a compromise, by which the appellant agreed to convey to the plaintiffs in that suit about fifty acres of the lands purchased by the appellant. At the time of this compromise the other persons representing the original vendees, that is to say, Ponnambala and the persons claiming under Murugappa, insisted upon the appellant conveying to them also their respective shares in the property; and the representative of the appellant, while pointing out that an agreement to execute such a conveyance could not be included in the razinama in which the compromise then in question was to be embodied, undertook that the conveyance should afterwards be made. At the same time a variation was made in the original agreement so far as the representatives of Murugappa were concerned, those persons undertaking to take over from the appellant certain further properties and to pay an additional Rs. 2,600 for them.

Notwithstanding the above mentioned transactions, the appellant afterwards refused to convey to Ponnambala and to the representatives of Murugappa the properties to which they were entitled under the arrangement; and ultimately, viz., in the years 1912 and 1913, these suits were brought to enforce such a conveyance. The plaintiffs in one suit were the persons claiming under Murugappa, and the plaintiffs in the other suit were Ponnambala and persons claiming under him, the appellant being the defendant in both suits.

At the hearing of the suits two main points were raised by the appellant, viz., (1) that the appellant had not in fact entered into the agreement alleged or received the contribution of Rs. 10,000; and (2) that in any case the suits were barred by section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Subordinate Judge, by whom the suits were tried, found the first issue in favour of the appellant, and accordingly it was unnecessary for him to deal with the second question. On appeal, the High Court overruled this decision and held that the appellant had received the Rs. 10,000 and had agreed to convey the properties in manner alleged by the plaintiffs. The Court also held that section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code was not a bar to the suits, and accordingly passed decrees in favour of the plaintiffs. Thereupon this appeal was brought.

Upon the issue of fact their Lordships have no hesitation in accepting the decision of the High Court. The finding of that Court is precisely in accordance with and is practically based upon a statement made by the appellant himself in the Suit No. 6 of 1907 above referred to. The appellant in the course of the trial maintained that the statement which he had himself put forward in 1907 was wholly untrue and was made for some indirect purpose; but the High Court declined to accept this explanation, which was not supported by the other facts in the case, and their Lordships entirely agree with this view.

The alternative defence is based on section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is in the following terms:—

"No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims."

The question to be determined is whether the facts proved by the plaintiffs in these suits bring them within this section. This point was dealt with in the judgment of the High Court as follows:

"On the first question, from the facts which we find to have been proved in this case, it is clear that section 66 is not a bar to the plaintiffs' claim for specific performance of the contract. Their case is not that the first defendant or Vythilingam or Dharmakartha Kandasami were merely benamidars, but that they were to be real purchasers, but they agreed to convey to the plaintiffs in each of these suits or to their predecessors in title such portions of the property for which (as we find) they had already paid or had to pay under that agreement the balance of the purchase money. That, we think, is a sufficient answer to the plea under section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code."

It was argued by Counsel for the appellant that the agreement relied upon by the plaintiffs, even as found by the High Court, amounted in substance to an agreement that the appellant should purchase as to certain parts of the property on behalf of the respondents or of the persons whom they represent; and he was able to point to certain expressions both in the plaints and in the evidence of some of the plaintiffs' witnesses which supported that view of the transaction. If the agreement entered into before the auction stood alone, there would be considerable force in this contention. The object of section 66 was to put an end to purchases by one person in the name of another; and the distinction between a purchase on behalf of another, and a purchase coupled with an undertaking to convey to another at the price of purchase, is somewhat narrow. But whatever doubt might be caused by the character of the original agreement is removed by the events which happened after the sale. It was decided in Amrutam Venk tappa v. Vavilala Jalayya (5) that an agreement subsequent to a purchase is not affected by the section, and there can be no question as to the correctness of that decision. In the present case agreements were entered into after the sale, namely, first, at the time of the panchayat in 1906, and secondly, on the occasion of the compromise of the suit of 1907, by which the appellant bound himself to carry out the original contract with the respondents, with certain variations which were then agreed to and accepted by all parties. These subsequent agreements are unaffected by the section and are accordingly enforceable against the appellant.

For the above reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals fail and should be dismissed with costs.

TRIMBAK KESHAV VAZE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 443—Minor—Mother, as guardian of minor, consenting to arbitration and decree—Omission by Court to appoint guardian, effect of—Decree, whether binding on minor.

An arbitration can be entered into on behalf of a minor by his natural guardian, provided it is for his benefit, or reasonable and proper for the protection of his property, but the award would not be binding if that were not the case [p. 402, col. 1.]

Where a mother, as the natural guardian of her minor son, consented to a reference to arbitration and accepted the award on behalf of the minor and raised no objection to the passing of a decree in terms of the award, but no appointment of the mother as guardian of the minor had been made, as required by section 443 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and the subsequent result of the decree was a sale of the property in dispute for an undervalue:

Held, that the minor's interests had not been duly protected; that the omission to appoint a guardian was not a mere irregularity which could be condoned, and that the decree based on the award and the sale of the property were null and void. [p. 401, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Poona, in Appeals Nos. 230 and 231 of 1914, varying the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Civil Suit No. 298 of 1912.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The facts which have given rise to this second appeal are these:

The father of the present plaintiff mortgaged the house in suit on the 4th of December 1896 to defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,000 with interest at 6 per cent.

The plaintiff's father died in 1899 leaving a son, the present plaintiff, and a widow, the plaintiff's mother. In 1901 the mortgage claim was refered to arbitration by the defendant No. 1 and the mother of the plaintiff who was then a minor. An award was made in May 1901, under which the minor represented by his mother was to pay Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 200 and odd as interest with further interest at 6 per cent. on the principal within one month and the property was to be sold in case the money was not paid within the time specified. The present defendant No. 1 applied to the Court on the 12th of June 1901 to have a decree in terms of the award, and the present plaintiff's mother filed a statement on the 13th of June 1901, in which she consented to a decree being passed in terms of the award and stated that she had no objection to the award being filed in Court. She appeared through a Pleader. A decree was accordingly passed in terms of the award on the 19th of June 1901. In execution of the decree the house was sold in November 1902 and purchased by the present defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,700.

On the 10th of August 1912 the plaintiff after attaining majority filed the present suit to set aside the decree passed in terms of the award. The defendants contested the suit and several issues were raised representing the rival contentions between the parties.

The trial Court on a consideration of the evidence found that the plaintiff was not bound by the decree on the award, nor by the sale in execution of that decree and that he was entitled to the relief on the footing of the original mortgage of 1896. The accounts were taken under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act as the plaintiff was an agriculturist, and a decree was passed in respect of the amount that was found due to the mortgagees on the mortgage.

The defendants appealed to the District Court of Poona, and the learned Assistant Judge has affirmed the decision of the trial Court on the main point that the plaintiff was not bound by the decree on the award, and subject to a certain variation in the amount payable to the mortgagees, has upheld the decree of the trial Court.

The defendants have appealed to this Court, and it is urged on their behalf that the decree is binding upon the present plaintiff. It is urged that it was open to the mother as the natural guardian of the plaintiff to refer the matter to an arbitration and that as neither fraud nor undue influence is proved, the award must be taken to be binding upon the parties. It is also urged that though there may have been some irregularity in the proceedings to file the award in Court in so far as no formal order was made appointing the mother as the guardian of her minor son, under the circumstances it must be taken to be a mere irregularity, which has not in any way prejudiced the interests of the minor.

It is conceded before us that apart from this objection relating to the decree on the award there is no further objection to the decree as passd by the lower Appellate Court, that is, if the plaintiff is entitled to have relief on the footing of the mortgage of 1896 without any reference to the award proceedings, the decree now under appeal is not open to any objection. The principal question, therefore, is whether the lower Courts are right in holding that the decree in terms of the award is not binding upon the minor and that it is liable to be set aside at his instance.

It has been urged in support of the view taken by the lower Courts that there was no appointment of a guardian as required by section 443 of the Code of 1882 and that all the proceedings which resulted in the decree and the sale of the property are null and void, and further that under section 462 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to Order XXXII, rule 7, of the present Code the leave of the Court for filing the award was necessary and that in the absence of such leave the decree based on the award is voidable at the instance of the minor.

The lower Appellate Court has found that in the present case there has been a serious prejudice to the minor, as he has been deprived effectively of the benefit of the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, as the full amount was found payable by him without taking any account under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, as no instalments were allowed and as the time fixed for the payment of the whole sum was only one month. The lower Appellate Court has not gone into the question of the valuation of the house and has not expressed any opinion on the finding recorded by the trial Court that the house was in fact sold for nearly half the amount of its real market value.

I shall first deal with the point relating to the irregularity in the proceedings initiated by the present defendants on the award arising in consequence of no appointment of a guardian for the minor defendant having been made in those proceedings. It is clear that under section 443 of the Code then in force it was incumbent upon the Court to appoint a proper person to be the guardian for the minor defendant in those proceedings which under the provisions of the Code were to be treated as a suit. All the papers connected with those proceedings are before the Court; and it is clear from those papers—and that is the conclusion reached by the lower Appellate Court—that as required by section 443 no appointment of the mother or any other person as the guardian of the minor defendant was made. The question is as to the effect of this omission to appoint a guardian. When due regard is had to all the circumstances connected with these proceedings, it is difficult to avoid the inference that the minor's interests were not protected. The appearance of the mother as soon as the application for a decree in terms of the award was presented through a Pleader who is now stated by the mother to have been selected for her by the present defendant No. 1, and her consenting to a decree being passed in terms of the award are circumstances of some suspicion. When we have due regard to the terms of the award and the subsequent result of the decree, namely, a sale for an undervalue in favour of the defendants, the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court that the minor's interests had not been duly protected must be accepted. The inference is clear that the minor was not effectively represented in the proceedings initiated by the present defendants in 1901 and that the decree passed in those proceedings on the award and the subsequent proceedings in execution resulting in the sale of the property in favour of the defendant No. 1 must all be treated as null and void.

It is not necessary to refer to all the decisions which have been cited in the course of the argument: but I may refer to the case of Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (1) as supporting the above conclusion. The appellants have relied upon the decision in Musammat Bibi Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (2), but the ratio decidendi seems to me to be against the appellants. Their Lordships clearly point out in that case that it is obligatory upon the Courts to comply with the provisions of section 443, and the irregularity in that case was condoned on the ground that on the particular facts, the minor was held to have been effectively represented.

In the present case the question whether the omission on the part of the Court to comply with the provisions of section 443 should be condoned on a similar ground or not, is a matter which must be decided with reference to the facts of this case. Both the Courts have taken the view on the facts against the defendants, and it seems to me that the conclusion reached by the lower Courts on this point is right.

In view of this conclusion it is not necessary to consider the further question which has been argued at some length in this appeal, as to whether the leave of the Court under section 462 was necessary to give effect to the consent of the mother that a decree might be passed in terms of the award. This question involves the consideration of the point as to whether, when the mother appeared through a Pleader on the 13th of June 1901 and gave her consent to a decree being passed in terms of the award, she acted in pursuance of any agreement between her and the defendant No. 1 or not. If the facts could reasonably give rise to the inference that there was such an agreement between the parties, no doubt the provisions of section 462 would apply and the absence of any leave of the Court for such an agreement with reference to the suit to file the award in Court would entitle the minor on attaining the age of majority to avoid the decree. Whether there was such an agreement between the plaintiff's mother and the defendant No. 1 is really a question of facts. It is urged for the plaintiff that the facts justify an inference as to such an agreement between his mother and the defendant No. 1 and that the decision in Mahadev Balkrishna Kelkar v. Krishnabai (3) supports their contention. On the other hand, it is urged that apart from the agreement to refer the matter to an arbitration there is no further agreement with reference to the suit to file an award in Court, and Mr. Jayakar has relied upon the recent decision of the Full Bench in Hanmantram Rachakisan v. Shivnarayan Asuram (4) It is not necessary to pursue this point, or to discuss the cases which have been cited with reference to the applicability of section 462 to facts such as we have in this case.

The appeal, therefore, fails and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed with costs

The cross objections which are not pressed are dismissed with costs.

HAYWARD, J.—I agree An arbitration can be entered into on behalf of a minor by his natural guardian, provided it is for his benefit or reasonable and proper for the protection of his property, but the award would not be binding on him if that were not the case. The question of its binding effect could of course be decided in subsequent proceedings in which the minor was properly represented by his guardian. Such proceedings would include those taken for filing the award, because the jurisdiction to file it would depend upon the question whether or not the award had been based upon due authority given on behalf of the minor by his natural guardian. It was held that that was a question to be decided in such proceedings in decisions on section 526 of the old Civil Procedure Code, and the substance of those decisions has been incorporated in the opening words "where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration" of section 21 of the Second Schedule of the present Civil Procedure Code. Where the question of the legality of the reference is not taken in such proceedings, the ordinary inference would be that it was held to have been legal, so that here, where the legality was not called in question, the point to be considered would be whether the minor was duly represented in the proceedings by his natural guardian, i. e. in the proceedings taken to file the award. Now a minor would not ordinarily be properly represented unless his guardian was formally appointed as such by the Court. But on the other hand where the guardian was tacitly accepted throughout the proceedings as a proper person representing the minor and where the irregularity of not formally making the appointment in writing had not affected the merits, then no doubt the minor would be held to have been duly represented by his guardian by reason of the provisions of section 578 of the old Civil Procedure Code, which is now section 99 of the present Code. So that the real question, in my opinion, has been reduced to this: whether the minor was or was not prejudiced by the irregularity of his natural guardian, his mother, not having been formally appointed by the Court. It has been definitely held that there was prejudice by the first Appeal Court, and it seems to me difficult for us to say that that finding is wrong in view of the several circumstances which were brought to light. It was thus found that the ordinary procedure for settling the dispute between the parties would have been one in which the whole history of past transactions would have been enquired into under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and that in place of this ordinary procedure the special procedure was adopted of referring the matter to the sole arbitration of an arbitrator specially selected by the minor's opponents. It was prima facie not for the benefit of the minor to substitute this special procedure before the Special Judge chosen by his opponents, and this prima facie conclusion was proved to have been correct by the subsequent result. The award was for the whole amount claimed and ordered it to be paid within one month, instead of the six months which would have been the least allowed by the ordinary procedure, quite apart from the question whether or no instalments could not have been granted under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Then the sale that resulted was far from satisfactory. The property was sold for Rs 1,700 and was bought by the minor's opponents. The real value would appear to have been anything from Rs. 2,500 to Rs. 3,500. These latter facts were elicited at the trial, though they have not been referred to in the judgment of the first appeal Court. It seems to me that that is sufficient to justify us in holding that the irregularity of not formally deciding whether the minor's natural guardian, his mother, was or was not a proper person to represent him in the proceedings did affect the merits. It would seem to me that this circumstance tends strongly to show that the irregularity did most certainly affect the merits and prejudice the minor. If the question had been carefully considered, as it ought to have been, there is every probability that some other guardian would have been appointed such as the Nazir of the Court, who would have fully enquired into the circumstances of the arbitration. It seem to me that on this ground we ought to uphold the decree of the first Appeal Court.

It is not necessary in these circumstances to consider the other question argued before us, that is to say, whether there was an agreement between the minor's natural guardian, his mother, and the minor's opponents that the award should be filed without objection in Court. If there had been any such formal agreement, then no doubt it would have been necessary to have obtained the formal sanction of the Court. But it is not necessary here to discuss that matter further, as upon the other ground it seems to me clear that we ought to uphold the decree of the first Appeal Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Co-mortgagees, position of—Payment to one co-mortgagee, whether discharges mortgage.

Co-mortgagees must, unless the contrary is shewn, be regarded as having a separate interest in the money advanced, although they take a joint security, and must be treated as in the position of tenants-in-common and not joint tenants Therefore, a payment of the mortgage-debt to one of two mortgagees would not amount to a discharge of the mortgagor's liability to the other mortgagee. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—These appeals arise out of two suits Nos. 49 and 82 of 1915, which were tried together before the Subordinate Judge of Patna on the 14th March 1917. In the former Misri Lal and his minor son Ram Birich Lal claim to recover possession of their share of certain properties with mesne profits held under a zarpeshgi lease or mortgage granted by Syed Abbas, the defendant No. 1 in that suit, to Saudagar Mahton, the father of Misri Lal, and Puran Mal the defendant No. 2. The defendants Nos. 3 to 11 are members of Puran Mal's family. The defendants Nos. 12 to 21 are subsequent ijaradars holding under the mortgagor Syed Abbas and are now in possession of the property. The remaining defendants Nos. 22 to 27 are pro forma defendants, being other members of the plaintiff's family.

Misri Lal the plaintiff and Puran Mal the defendant No. 2 held a zarpeshgi lease of the property from Syed Abbas, and the latter contends that he redeemed the mortgaged property by payment of the zarpeshgi money to Puran Mal, co mortgagee with the plaintiff's father, on the 29th June 1915 and subsequently granted an ijara to the defendants Nos. 11 to 21 who are now in possession. The plaintiff claims in the alternative against Puran Mal and his family to recover the sum of Rs. 21,800, half the zarpeshgi money paid to him, in the event of the Court finding that such payment was a valid discharge of the debt due to both the mortgagees. Puran Mal's case is that the money was rightly paid to him, as he alone advanced the whole sum of Rs. 43,600 to Syed Abbas and that Saudagar Mahton's name was merely added as a mortgagee owing to an arrangement between them, whereby Saudagar was to remain in actual possession and manage the property for Puran Mal taking as payment therefor a half share in the profits after providing for interest on the loan and other outgoings.

In the second suit No. 82 of 1917 Puran Mal and other members of his family sued Misri Lal and the members of his family for an account of the profits arising from the management of the mortgaged property, of which Saudagar and after his death in 1907 his son Misri Lal are said to have been in possession as agents for Puran Mal.

The two cases were tried together before the Subordinate Judge of Patna on the 14th March 1917, who found that payment to Puran Mal was not a valid discharge of Misri Lal's interest in the mortgage debt and directed that Misri Lal should recover joint possession of a half share in the property in suit together with Syed Abbas and the ticcadars, and awarded him mesne profits from those defendants from the date of his dispossession. He further found that Saudagar Mahto and after him Misri Lal had been in possession of the properties as mortgagees under the zarpeshgi lease to the extent of their half share, and not as agents for Puran Mal and accordingly dismissed Suit No. 82 in which Puran Mal claimed an account from Misri Lal of the profits realised during the currency of the mortgage.

From this decision three appeals have been preferred. Appeal No. 95 of 1917 arises out of Suit No. 49 of 1915 and is brought by Syed Abbas, who contends that the payment made to Puran Mal was a valid discharge of the debt. Appeal No. 127 arising also out of Suit No. 49 is brought by Puran Mal, who contends that the money advanced in consideration of the mortgage was advanced by him alone and that Misri Lal had no interest in the same. Appeal No. 126 arises out of Suit No. 82 and is brought by Puran Mal, claiming that he is entitled to an account from Misri Lal on the grounds already stated.

The properties in suit consist of three villages named Subanwa, Bhabhandigha and Kalyanpur, which form part of a wakf estate of which Syed Abbas is the mutwalli. It appears that in the year 1900 Saudagar Mahton held from Syed Abbas a zarpeshgi ticca of the villages in question at a rent of Rs. 4,500. He had also advanced a sum amounting to one year's rent to be repaid at the termination of the lease. The properties of the wakf estate, including the three villages in question, were hypothecated to one Baijnath Singh under a simple mortgage which took priority over Saudagar's zarpeshgi and which had then fallen due. The amount due to Baijnath amounted to Rs. 34,000, but Syed Abbas was unable to raise the whole of this money. Saudagar had been in possession of these villages as ticcadar since about the year 1890 on apparently advantageous terms and as he had an unexpired term of three years to run, it was to his interest that the mortgage to Baijnath should, if possible, be discharged. As Syed Abbas required financial assistance to raise the greater part of the money necessary to liquidate his debt to Baijnath, he approached Saudagar with a view to obtaining a loan of Rs. 46,300 for this purpose proposing to grant him a fresh zarpeshgi lease of the property for a period of 10 years on somewhat more favourable terms than the existing lease. Saudagar was not in a position to advance the whole of the money required, but according to the plaintiff Misri Lal's case he was able and willing to advance half that sum if he could find any one prepared to join with him in the transaction and advance the other half. He, therefore, approached Puran Mal, a Mahajan residing at Patna, with a view to obtaining the balance required. According to Misri Lal's case Puran Mal agreed to advance half the amount at an interest of 11 annas per cent. per mensem and in conjunction with Saudagar to take a zarpeshgi lease of the villages for a period of 10 years at a rent of Rs. 5,300, out of which the interest on the advance amounting to Rs. 3,597 and the Government revenue and cesses, etc., amounting to Rs. 1,701-2-5 were to be deducted, leaving a trifling balance of under Rs. 2 payable to the landlord. The rents of the villages amounted to considerably more than Rs. 5,300 and the net profits were to be divided equally between the two mortgagees. Each party was to be put in possession either by himself or his agents and collect half the dues recoverable by him. Saudagar lived on the spot at Kalyanpur. His Patwari was one Naurangi Lal and according to the case of Misri Lal he was appointed to act for both parties as Patwari whilst Puran Mal appointed as his Gomashta Bishun Singh and subsequently Shakawat Hussain, and by this arrangement half the proceeds were paid over to Bishun Singh and afterwards to his successor Shakawat Hussain, the other half going to Saudagar and after his death to Misri Lal. An instrument in writing dated the 19th August 1900 was accordingly drawn up and executed by the parties to carry out the arrangement come to. By the terms of this document a zarpeshgi lease or mortgage was granted by Syed Abbas to Puran Mal and Saudagar Mahton for a period of 10 years. After reciting the necessity of borrowing money, it proceeds, "accordingly Babu Puran Mal and Saudagar Mahton have agreed to take lease by making an advance of the sum of Rs. 46,300 carrying interest at 11 annas per cent. per mensem for a period of 10 years" of the Mauzas in question. Provision was then made for paying off Saudagar's advance of Rs. 4,500 at the end of three years. The rent was also to remain at the old rate of Rs. 4,500 for the same period and from this the sum of Rs 3,597 was to be deducted for interest on the new loan and the balance of Rs. 903 was to be paid to the mortgagor. For the remainder of the term of 10 years the rent was to be Rs. 5,300 including Government revenue and cesses and the balance, as already stated, of something under Rs. 2 was payable as hakhajri to the mortgagor. The mortgagor also had the option of paying off the whole or a portion of the advance of not less than Rs. 5,000 during the currency of the term, in which case the rent would be increased by the amount of interest proportionate to the sum repaid. The whole of the zarpeshgi money or such portion as had not been repaid under the above option was payable at the end of Jeyth 1317 F. (June 1910 A. D.), when the lease should come to an end and the mortgagor would be entitled to get direct possession. But in the event of non payment of the whole zarpeshgi money by last year of the term, the lease with all its conditions was to remain in force until the whole or such part of the debt as was still due had been paid up.

There can be no doubt from the terms of this document that both Saudagar Mahton and Puran Mal are referred to as the persons advancing the money and acquiring the interest in the property. In addition to the passage already quoted the following clause appears:—

"Therefore, of our own free will and accord we" (Syed Abbas and his brother who at that time also had an interest in the property) "have given in lease as detailed below for 10 years on receipt of Rs. 43,600 in advance carrying interest at 11 annas per cent. per mensem to Babu Puran Mal * * * and to Saudagar Mahton * * * * the whole and entire 16 annas of each of the Mauzas."

Throughout the document these two are referred to as the lessees. Only one other passage in this document need be referred to. It provides that "till payment of the zarpeshgi money the said Mauzas shall stand mortgaged and liable." The effect of this document was to create a mortgage over the leasehold interest in the property as security for the re-payment of the advance, with the stipulation that the lease should continue in any event for 10 years on payment of the reserved rent notwithstanding the earlier discharge of the debt. The lessor could only redeem on re-payment of the loan, otherwise the lessees' interest would continue indefinitely.

No portion of the loan was repaid during the currency of the term and Saudagar having died in 1907, his son Misri Lal succeeded him as karta of the family. The 10 years' term expired on the 30th Jeyth 1317 F. (June 1910 A. D.). But nothing was then done by way of repayment and the lessees remained in possession until 5 years later, when a sum of Rs. 41,770-6-9 was paid to Puran Mal on the 29th June 1915, i. e., on the 2nd Asarh 1322 F. or two days after the end of Jeyth that year. The balance of the zarpeshgi money, amounting to Rs. 1,829-9 3, was deducted on account of certain sums said to be due from Misri Lal to Syed Abbas for rent of another Manza and other small items which Puran Mal agreed to settle in account with his co lessee. It was alleged on behalf of Syed Abbas that Misri Lal and Puran Mal went together at his request to his house some 3 or 4 days before the 30th Jeyth and that they both agreed on that occasion to these deductions, and said they would come again on the 30th Jeth and receive, the money, but that Misri Lal alone came on the 30th, Puran Mal not being present, and on that occasion the money was tendered to Misri Lal, who said that he had not the patta in his possession as it was with Puran Mal who would return it. This evidence was given by Raghubans Sahay, the Mukhtar-am of Syed Abbas. This witness further stated that later on in the evening of the 30th Jeyth Puran Mal did turn up, but for some reason not explained the money was not tendered to him then. The next day was a holiday and on the following day the 2nd Assarh the money was paid to Puran Mal as already stated. Between the 30th Jeyth and the 2nd Assarh Raghubans consulted his employer's Vakil, Rai Bahadur Purnendu Narain Sinha, as to how payment should be made and was advised that as the money was payable to joint mortgagees he could get a good discharge by paying it to one. The Rai Bahadur was called as a witness on behalf of Puran Mal. Syed Abbas had been his client for some years and he had been present when the zarpeshgi deed of the 19th August 1900 was executed and was an attesting witness thereto. He had no very clear re-collection of anything that Puran Mal told him about the document on that occasion, but he was evidently stating the facts impartially to the best of his re-collection, and he says that he was informed by Puran Mal when the deed was executed that the money was to be repaid to both Misri Lal and Puran Mal. He further says that when Raghubans asked his advice as to the manner of payment in 1915, he was told by him that Misri Lal was endeavouring to avoid payment and did not turn up at the time when payment was due which was the 30th Jeyth. The complaint was that Misri Lal was endeavouring to evade payment within the month of Jeyth. The evidence of this witness can undoubtedly be accepted as accurate but it materially differs from the story put forward by Raghubans and as far as it goes, corroborates that of Misri Lal which will be referred to presently. The evidence of Raghubans was that Misri Lal agreed to everything suggested and was willing that the deductions referred to should be made from the zarpeshgi money, and that he in fact turned up at the house of Syed Abbas on the 30th Jeyth and that it was Puran Mal who did not come on that occasion and that Misri Lal was quite agreeable to the money being given to Puran Mal. The account given by Misri Lal differs materially from that of Raghubans. His story is that on the 2nd Assarh a servant of Syed Abbas told him that the latter wanted to see him about paying off the zarpeshgi, whereupon he pointed out that as the 30th Jeyth had passed it was too late to take payment that year. Nothing else happened and he did not go to Patna or ever ask Syed Abbas or any one else to pay his share to Puran Mal or authorise the latter to receive it, nor did he agree to any deductions nor was any money ever tendered to him. The view he took of the zarpeshgi lease apparently was that it could only be terminated by payment at the end of Jeyth in any year and as that date had passed, the lease must continue for at least another year. If this story be accepted as it was by the learned Judge it follows that Misri Lal's interest as mortgagee was never redeemed; nor was any tender ever made to him of what was due. The learned Judge, who dealt very carefully with the evidence, arrived unhesitatingly at the conclusion that Misri Lal's story was true and that that of Raghubans and Puran Mal and the other witnesses for the defendants could not be accepted. He was very unfavourably impressed by the evidence of Puran Mal who, he says, "hesitated, took time and did not tell us the whole truth." Puran Mal's evidence in the main supported that of Raghubans but differed from it in some important details. He confirms the latter in so far as he says that Misri Lal agreed that he should accept payment from Syed Abbas of the whole of the zarpeshgi money save the deductions already mentioned and that Misri Lal was quite agreeable that these deductions should be made. He differs from Raghubans as to what took place when he and Misri Lal went together to the house of Syed Abbas a few days before payment became due. Puran Mal says that Syed Abbas sent for him and when he went to the latter's house, he found Misri Lal sitting there but did not know for what business he had come. Syed Abbas did not say to Misri Lal that he would pay the zarpeshgi money, and there was no talk at the time as to whether the rent due to Misri Lal would be deducted. No details were discussed. All that Syed Abbas said was that he would pay the money, but when or where was not mentioned and he did not meet Syed Abbas again after that until the money was actually paid on the 2nd Assarh. These stories are, therefore, not in themselves consistent and it is highly improbable if the whole sum was due to Puran Mal and Misri Lal also owed him a sum of over Rs. 57,000, as he alleges in his plaint in Suit No. 82 in respect to these Mauzas that Puran Mal would readily agree to consent to a deduction of over Rs. 1,800 due from Misri Lal to the mortgagor on an entirely different transaction and take the chance of recovering it back from Misri Lal in addition to his existing liabilities, and I see no reason for disturbing the conclusions of fact arrived at by the learned Judge on this part of the case.

If, however, the whole of the loan was advanced by Puran Mal when the mortgage was executed, then payment to him would be a complete discharge of the debt. It remains therefore, to consider the evidence on this part of the case and to determine whether the learned Judge was justified in arriving at the conclusion that Saudagar himself advanced half the loan. I have already stated shortly the case put forward by Misri Lal as to how the advance came to be made, and up to a point there is no dispute between the parties. The case of Puran Mal, however, is that he advanced the whole of the money and allowed Saudagar and afterwards Misri Lal to remain in possession of the property as his agents to collect the rents on his behalf, taking as commission half the net profits after paying the interest due to Puran Mal and the Government revenue and other necessary outgoings. It is admitted that no written agreement was entered into between the parties at any time as evidence of this arrangement, although the zarpeshgi lease itself clearly indicates that the money was advanced by both the lessees and was repayable to them both. Puran Mal gives two reasons for allowing Saudagar's name to appear in the document as one of the lessees, first, that he had complete confidence in him, and, secondly, that there was a fear that the tenants might turn refractory if it were known that Puran Mal alone was the ticcadar. It appears, however, from Puran Mal's own evidence that his first acquaintance with Saudagar dated from 12 months before the transaction was entered into. It also appears that from the beginning the tenants knew that Puran Mal was one of the ticcadars and there is no suggestion that any trouble arose in consequence of this. It is almost inconceivable that a Marwari in the position of Puran Mal, who in addition had considerable Zamindari interests, would conduct his affairs in such an unbusiness-like manner and allow a comparative stranger, as Saudagar then was, to be joined with him as lessee and remain in possession of the property without some document in writting defining their relative positions. The only evidence which at all supports Puran Mal's story is the fact that the advance made to Syed Abbas in consideration of the zarpeshgi lease was made by a cheque drawn by Puran Mal on the Bank of Bengal on the 15th September 1900, about a month after the lease was executed. Puran Mal had previously had dealings with the Bank of Bengal and on the 5th September 1900 a new account was opened in his name with that Bank, and between that date and the 13th September deposits amounting in all to over Rs. 59,000 were made to the credit of that account. It is Misri Lal's case that this account was opened for the express purpose of collecting the money to be advanced to Syed Abbas and that a deposit of Rs. 24,075 made on the 11th September included Rs 21,800 of Saudagar Mahton's money. Misri Lal's case is that this money was brought from Kalyan Bigha where Saudagar lived to Patna where Puran Mal lived on the back of an elephant and was taken to Puran Mal's dukhan on the 10th September, and on the following day deposited in the Bank together with a further sum of Puran Mal's own money making together the sum of Rs. 24,075. This story is corroborated by a number of witnesses, some of whom accompanied the elephant whilst others went by train from Kalyan Bigha to Patna City station where they transferred the money from the elephant to a ticca gharry and took it to Puran Mal's house. A further sum of Rs. 11,000 appears from the account to have been deposited by Puran Mal on the 13th September. There was then an amount of something over Rs. 59,000 to the credit of this account, and it is admitted that on the 15th of the same month Puran Mal drew a cheque for Rs. 59,000 in favour of Baijnath Singh, Syed Abbas's creditor. It is not disputed that this cheque included the Rs. 43,600 zarpeshgi money for the lease in question in this suit and a further sum payable by Syed Abbas to Baijnath in respect to another transaction in which Puran Mal was financing him. Puran Mal contended that the whole of this money was his own and that the account had been opened with the Bank of Bengal before the zarpeshgi was executed and that the deposits were not made for the purpose of collecting the zarpeshgi money and paying it by cheque. This story, however, is not borne out by Gobind Ram, the brother of Puran Mal and one of his witnesses, who says that the account was opened with the Bank of Bengal after the lease was executed for the express purpose of collecting the money, and the account itself appearing from the Bank books shews that the first deposit was made on the 5th November. Puran Mal was cross examined as to the source from which these deposits came, but was unable to give any account except that he said he got the money from Calcutta. He said, however, that he had a jama kharach book which would shew from what source the money was obtained at the time of depositing in the Bank, and unfortunately he was not cross-examined further as to the specific item of Rs. 24,075 deposited on the 11th September, which the plaintiff claims included his money, and the evidence of Misri Lal's witnesses was not taken until after Puran Mal had been examined. It was strongly urged before us that this lack of cross-examination upon a vital point in the case went a long way to support Puran Mal's case and that the story as to money being brought to Patna and handed over to Puran Mal on the 10th September ought not to be accepted. There is no doubt considerable force in this argument, and it would certainly have assisted Misri Lal's case had the learned Vakil appearing on his behalf put the whole story with regard to the payment of this money by his client and the subsequent deposit in the Bank to Puran Mal in cross-examination instead of confining himself to a few questions as to the source from which the deposits came. There are, however, so many improbabilities in the story presented by Puran Mal that I am not prepared to say that the learned Judge who saw the witnesses was not justified in disbelieving his evidence and accepting that of Misri Lal. No documents were produced by Puran Mal in support of this part of his story, nor had he the jama kharach book with him upon which he relied. This book he stated was in the possession of an arbitrator at Calcutta who at that time was sitting upon an arbitration in a partition case between Puran Mal and other members of his family, and the Court ordered a telegram to be sent to the arbitrator asking for the book to be sent. The telegram was sent the same day that Puran Mal gave his evidence, and a reply was received from the arbitrator that there must be some misconception as the account books had been taken away by Puran Mal and his brother some time in the previous year and were not in his possession. About a week later a letter was addressed to the Peshkar of the Subordinate Judge's

Court from the arbitrator, stating that although none of the account books of Puran Mal were in his possession, some of them were with Babu Kanhai Lal Mahsuddi, who was apparently another arbitrator engaged in the same case, and that he had asked the latter to forward them. The railway receipt for these books, when they were sent by Kanhai Lal, was received by the Peshkar but returned presumably with the consent of the Judge as there had been no order of the Court requesting Kanhai Lal to send them. On the 2nd March when the evidence of both parties was closed, Puran Mal petitioned the Court to appoint a Commissioner to examine these account books, but the Judge rejected the petition on the ground that he did not consider it a bona fide one and that every possible opportunity had been given to the petitioners to produce their documents at an earlier period. It was urged before us that Puran Mal had been unfairly treated in this matter, first, because after he had agreed to the two cases being tried together his evidence was taken first by the order of the Judge and that he did not think at that time that these documents would be necessary, and that he ought to have been given an opportunity after Misri Lal's witnesses were examined of calling rebutting evidence. I do not think that he has any grievance from the fact that he was ordered to begin and call his witnesses first. He was the plaintiff in Suit No. 82 and the trial had originally been fixed for hearing on the 9th May 1916 in that suit, by which date he was ordered to be ready with his witnesses and evidence. The case did not in fact come on for hearing until many months later. According to the procedure by which the trial of actions is governed, the parties must produce at the first hearing of the suit all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power on which they intend to rely and which has not already been filed in Court, and no other documentary evidence shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause be shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. These rules have the salutary effect in many cases of preventing documentary evidence from being fabricated for the purposes of the case. In the present case some documents had been produced on behalf of Puran Mal which the learned Judge rejected on the ground that they were not genuine, and I see no reason for interfering with his discretion in refusing the application to have these account books examined by a Commissioner in the circumstances. Throughout the record there is no documentary evidence apart from that already mentioned to suggest that Puran Mal alone advanced the zarpeshgi money, and such oral evidence as there was on this point was by no means convincing and was dismissed by the learned Judge as unworthy of credence. It is also very significant that if he alone was entitled to the whole of the interest on the sum advanced, he never in fact received, it from Saudagar or after his death from Misri Lal and although his case is that they failed to pay him this money and a large debt was accumulating against them without any security for its payment, he appears to have taken no effective steps to obtain any account from them upto the moment that Misri Lal's suit was instituted. In fact although Misri Lal instituted his suit for possession on the 10th July, a few days after he was dispossessed, and made an alternative claim therein against Puran Mal for half the zarpeshgi money, it was not until the 2nd December that Puran Mal filed his suit for an account. Although Saudagar died in 1907 without rendering any account to Puran Mal, Misri Lal was allowed without protest to continue in possession of his half share including the interest on the zarpeshgi money as well as half the net profits, and still no accounts were obtained from him and in the Record of Rights finally framed and published on the 1st August 1910 the names of Puran Mal and Misri Lal were recorded in the Khewat relating to these Mauzas as interested in equal shares without any protest on behalf of Puran Mal. The only reason given by the latter for allowing this state of affairs to continue was that he had confidence in Saudagar whom he had met for the first time about a year before the zarpeshgi lease was executed. This confidence one would have expected to have been seriously shaken when on his death no accounts were forthcoming, and yet we find that his son Misri Lal was allowed to continue in possession of his half share receiving half the interest and half the profits in the same way as his father had done before him It is alleged that Misri Lal rendered some accounts in the year 1909 which purported to be in the handwritting of Naurangi Lal the Patwari, but this would not explain why matters were allowed to go on some six years longer without any settlement of this account. Naurangi Lal denies that these papers are in his handwriting, and the learned Judge on comparing them with the admitted writing of Naurangi Lal rejected them as spurious, It was said that Naurangi Lal would be sent to explain these papers but it is admitted that he never came. Moreover, the papers relied on shew an entirely different state of affairs from that actually existing. These papers shew Danabandi, although admittedly the Manzas were Batai, and they further in other cases shew a higher rate of rent than that admittedly existing and differ in other respects from the existing facts, as pointed out by the learned Judge. I can see no reason whatever, after reviewing the whole of the evidence, to differ from the conclusions of fact arrived at in the trial Court.

The only question which remains is whether payment to one of two mortgagees is a discharge of the mortgagor's liability to the other. The common law rule that payment to one of two joint creditors discharges the debt due to both is subject to the equitable rule that mortgagees must, unless the contrary is shewn, be regarded as having a separate interest in the money advanced, although they take a joint security, and must be treated as in the position of tenants-in common and not joint tenants [see Steeds v. Steeds (1) and Powell v. Brodhurst (2)]. It was contended before us that this doctrine was not the law of this country and the case of Barber Maran v. Ramana Goundan (3) was relied on. It was held by the Madras High Court in that case that payment to one of two joint mortgagees was a good discharge of the debt to both, and this was followed by the majority of the Full Bench of that Court in the case of Mannava Annopurnamma v. Uppala Akkayya (4) where the question was whether one of several payees of a negotiable instrument can give a valid discharge of the entire debt without the concurrence of the others. Of the three learned Judges who decided that case one of them, the Chief Justice, dissented. So far as mortgagees are concerned, the view of the Madras High Court has been repeatedly dissented from by the High Court of Calcutta [see Husainara Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum 5) and Umes Chandra Banerjee v. Dinabandhu Mahanti (6) and other cases. The Madras decision in Barber Maran v. Ramana Goundan (3) (ubi sup.) may be justified on the ground that the mortgagees in that case were in fact joint and took as joint tenants, but in my opinion the rulings in Seeds v. Steeds (1) and Powell v. Broadhurst (2) (ubi sup) are good law in this country and mortgagees will be regarded as having several interests unless the contrary be shewn, and the decisions of the Calcutta High Court correctly lay down the law on this matter. It was contended that an offer of performance had been made to Misri Lal on the 30th Jeth, but as already stated the evidence of this tender to Misri Lal cannot be accepted. Section 38 (3) of the Indian Contract Act was relied on as shewing that the legal consequence of the offer subsequently made to Pu an Mal and the acceptance by him was to put an end to the debt. It will be observed, however, that this part of the section relates to joint promisees and the presumption is that co-mortgagees are not joint. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider further the effect of this section. I may mention that the Allahabad High Court has taken the same view as that of Calcutta, that one of two mortgagees who have advanced the mortgage

In the case of inams and saranjams in the Bombay Presidency the ordinary presumption in respect of such a settlement as the foregoing is in favour of the grant being limited to the royal share of the revenue, in the absence of any words to indicate a grant of the soil, but the absence of such words would not necessarily establish that the grant is of the royal share of the revenue only [p 415, cols &]

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued to recover possession of a part of Survey No. 45 in the village of Rajgoli Khurd with Rs. 10 as profits for one year from defendant No. 1 and his tenants. He alleged that the property was Watan property, and that the alienation thereof effected by his father in favour of defendant No. 1 was not valid beyond his lifetime under section 5 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, that his father died in January 1912, and that he was entitled to the possession of the land.

The defendant No. 1 resisted the claim on the ground that under the decree on an award in Suit No. 253 of 1910 obtained by him against the plaintiff's father, he was entitled to retain possession of the land in suit until the Shake year 1852 (1930 31 A. D.), that it was not Watan property and that the plaintiff's father had authority to effect the alienation in his favour.

The trial Court found that the property was Watan property and that the plaintiff's father had no power to alienate it beyond the term of his natural life. It passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession and mesne profits.

The defendant appealed to the District Court, and the learned Assistant Judge who heard the appeal found that the original grant was not a grant of the soil but merely of the royal share of the revenue of the village, and that there was nothing to show that the land in suit was not held by the original Inamdar at the time of his grant as his private property. Accordingly he allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and it is urged in support of the appeal that the conclusions reached by the lower Appellate Court are erroneous. In order to appreciate the rival contentions of the parties in this appeal, it is necessary to state briefly the history of the grant of the village of Rajgoli Khurd, of which the land in suit forms a part.

The earliest document relating to the grant of this village is the order issued by the then Maratha ruler, Shambhu Chatrapati, to the Mukadam of Mouje Rajgoli Budruk and Mouje Rajgoli Khurd in the year 1734 A. D. The grant is in these terms:—

"The respected Virupakshara Yamaji of Gotra Gautama, who is the most devoted servant of the Swami (King), has been rendering service (to the Swami) with singleness of purpose and, therefore, it is necessary for the Swami to provide for his maintenance by the grant of an Inam to him. Therefore, the Swami is now graciously pleased to grant to him as new Inam the whole of the aforesaid two villages Koolbab and Koolkanoo (i. e., all taxes and assessments) but exclusive of the (Haks of) Hakdars and Inamdars. You should, therefore, acting in obedience to this order continue the said Inam to him, his sons, grandsons and so on from generation to generation."

The material words in Marathi are:—

"Nutan inam koolbab koolkanoo kherij hakdar wa inamdar karun sadarhu donhi ganv darobasta inam dilhe ast."

Some years later in a letter written by Balaji Bajirao Pradhan the grant is referred to in the same terms, and there is a command that the entire amal of the two villages should be continued as Inam hereditarily according to the King's letter, the Marathi word for 'entire' being darobasta. In 1858 the Iman Commissioner examined the history of this grant and decided under Act XI of 1852 as follows :—

'It seems proper and it is ordered that the village of Mouje Rajgoli Khurd exclusive of the Hakdars and Inamdars must, under Appendix 2, section 2, of Act XI of 1852, be continued as long as the line represented by the sons, grandsons and so on born of the original acquirer Virupaksha Yamaji, the great-grandfather of the claimant Yamajipant, continues...This Faisalnama is only meant to show how long the village is to be continued as Mafi (free from the payment of revenue)."

In the reasons for the decision the village is referred to as standing at the time in the name of Yamajipant bin Virupakshapant Mutalik Desai as service Inam in the records of the Collector.

In 1884 the Inamdar accepted the settlement in respect of various lands including the village of Rajgoli Khurd in lieu of service on the conditions mentioned in the Sanad. The terms of the Sanad are these:—

Whereas in the Zilla of Belgaum certain lands and cash allowances are entered in the Government accounts of the year 1862-63 as held on service tenure as follows :—

and whereas the holders thereof have agreed to pay to Government a fixed annual payment in lieu of service:—

It is hereby declared, that the said lands and cash allowances shall be continued hereditarily by the British Government, on the following conditions: that is to say, that the said holders and their heirs shall continue faithful subjects of the British Government, and shall render to the same the following fixed yearly dues:—

In consideration of fulfilment of which conditions—

1st—The said lands and cash allowances shall be continued without demand of service, and without increase of Land Tax over the above fixed amounts, and without objection or question on the part of Government as to the rights of any holders thereof, so long as any male heir to the Watan, lineal collateral, or adopted within the limits of the Watandar family, shall be in existence.

2nd—No Nuzzerana or other demand on the part of Government will be imposed on account of the succession of heirs, lineal, collateral, or adopted within limits of the Watandar family, and, permission to make such adoptions need not hereafter be obtained from Government.

3rd—When all the sharers of the Watan agree to request it, then the general privilege of adopting at any time any person (without restriction as to family) who can be legally adopted, will be granted by Government to the Watan, on the payment from that time forward in prepetuity of an annual Nuzzerana of one anna in each Rupee of the above total emoluments of the Watan.

This settlement is on the lines of the Gordon Settlement; and the lands including the village of Rajgoli Khurd are assigned on certain terms in lieu of service. There is no provision in the Sanad giving to the Watandar any right to alienate the Watan beyond his lifetime, and the Watan is mentioned as the Mutalik Desai Watan. There are other documents of minor importance, which need not be referred to.

In 1910 the defendant No. 1 obtained a decree on an award against the plaintiff's father for a certain claim and the possession of the land in suit, which is referred to in the decree as Watan land, was to be retained by the defendant for a certain number of years. The terms of this decree have not been referred to in detail in the argument before us. But the decree is accepted by both the parties as effecting an alienation by the plaintiff's father for a certain number of years. The land in suit forms part of the village lands.

It is clear from these facts that the settlement effected in 1884 is referable to section 15 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, and is binding upon the parties. According to that settlement the village of Rajgoli Khurd is Watan property. Under section 5 of the Act no Watandar can mortgage, charge, alienate or lease for a period beyond the term of his natural life any Watan or any part thereof to any person who is not a Watandar of the same Watan without the sanction of Government: and this provision applies to any Watan in respect of which a service commutation settlement has been effected under section 15 of the Act, unless the right of alienating the Watan without the sanction of Government is conferred upon the Watandars by the terms of the settlement The defendant No. 1 is not a Watandar of the same Watan and no such right of alienation has been conferred by the terms of the settlement. The Sanad in this case is in the usual form adapted to the Gordon Settlement, and it is clear, on the terms of the section as also on the decisions of this Court relating to the Gordon Settlement in Arpai Bapuji v. Keshav Shamrav (1) and Bhau v. Ramchandrarao (2), that in the absence of a sanction of the Government any alienation of the Watan property beyond the term of the Watandar's natural life is inoperative. The village of Rajgoli Khurd is Watan property having regard to the definitions of 'Watan property' and 'hereditary office' in the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act. If the land in question forms part of the Watan property, the alienation thereof could not be valid after the death of the plaintiff's father.

For the plaintiff it is urged that the burden of showing that the land in suit is not a part of the Watan property is on the defendant, that he has failed to discharge that burden, that the distinction between a grant of the royal share of the revenue and a grant of the soil which is recognised in this Presidency with reference to Inams and Saranjams cannot be, and has never been, extended to Watans, and that the presumption in favour of a grant being limited to the royal share of the revenue even in the case of Inams and Saranjams cannot be made in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (3). Further it is contended that on the terms of the grant in this case it ought to be held that the grant was of the soil and not merely of the royal share of the revenue of the village.

It is urged for the defendant that the plaintiff has failed to show that the land in suit forms part of the Watan property, that the Watan property here only means the royal share of the revenue and not the soil of the village of Rajgoli Khurd according to the terms of the Sanad, that even according to the terms of the original grant confirmed by the Inam Commissioner it is limited to the royal share of the revenue and does not extend to the soil, and that this distinction is well recognised in this Presidency and ought to be accepted in this case in spite of the decision in Suryanarayan's case (3).

In the absence of any clear proof that the occupancy right in the Survey Number in suit was vested in the plaintiff's ancestor independently of the grant and that the land in suit was outside the lands dealt with in the Settlement of 1884, I think that it must be held to be Watan property like the village itself. 'Watan property' according to the Act means moveable and immoveable property held, acquired or assigned for providing remuneration for the performance of the duty appertaining to an 'hereditary office,' which expression includes such office even where the services originally appertaining to it have ceased to be demanded. It is difficult to treat the village mentioned in the Sanad as referring to the royal share of the revenue only. The Sanad refers to the lands and where the whole village is referred to, the lands of the village are not referred to in detail by their Survey Numbers. Thus where the whole village is mentioned in a Sanad evidencing a settlement under section 15 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, it is for the party alleging that a particular Survey Number of that village is outside the scope of the settlement to prove it. In the present case there is no such evidence. The lower Appellate Court observes that there is nothing on the record to show that the land in dispute was not held by the original Inamdar as his private property at the date of the first grant. But at the same time there is nothing to show that it was so held. No document is referred to before us as showing that the Survey Number in question was held at anytime otherwise than as part of the Watan property. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that in the decree in the suit of 1910 it is described as Watan land. In the case of Watan property the distinction between grants of the royal share of the revenue and grants of the soil, which is admissible in the case of Inams and Saranjams, cannot be conveniently made without detriment to the statutory restriction on the Watandar's power of alienation and should not be made unless it is clearly justified by the terms of the settlement. The statutory restriction would be limited in its scope if such a distinction were made. The terms of the Sanad in the present case do not justify such a construction of the grant under the Settlement of 1884. I do not say that such a distinction can never be made in the case of Watans. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case to observe that no basis for such a distinction has been made out on the terms of the Settlement of 1884 with reference to the land in suit.

So far my conclusion is based upon the terms of the Sanad of 1884, and is independent of the terms of the grant in 1734 as confirmed in 1858 by the Inam Commissioner. It is by no means clear on the terms of the original grant of 1734 that it is limited to the royal share of the revenue. It is quite true, as contended by the defendant, that in this Presidency in the case of Inams and Saranjams the ordinary presumption, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, is in favour of the grant being limited to the royal share of the revenue and that clear words are necessary to indicate a grant of the soil: see Krishnarav Ganesh v. Rangrav(4), Ramchandra v. Venkatarao (5), Rayya v. Balkrishna Gangadhar (6). It is also true that the words ordinarily used to indicate a grant of the soil are 'water, grass, wood (trees), stones, mines and hidden treasures', as pointed out in Ravinarayan v. Dadaji Bapuji (7), Collector of Ratnagiri v Antaji Lakshman (8) and Balvant Ramchandra v. Secretary of State (9). But the absence of these words cannot be treated as necessarily establishing that the grant is of the royal share of the revenue only. There is no decision which has gone so far as to lay down that no other expression can indicate a grant of the soil.

Assuming that the nature of the settlement in 1884 must be determined with reference to the terms of the original grant as confirmed by the Inam Commissioner, it is not a matter of presumption but a question of the construction of the words actually used. It is clear from the reference to section 2, Appendix 2 (Schedule B), of Act XI of 1852 in the decision of the Inam Commissioner that the Inam was then continued according to the terms of the old grant of 1734 A. D. Thus though the word durobasta is not used in the decision of the Inam Commissioner, it seems to me that by implication the grant is continued on the same terms as the old grant and that in effect the expression used by the Commissioner must be taken to be the expression used in the grant of 1734 A. D. That expression is by no means clear on the question as to whether the grant was only of the royal share of the revenue or of the soil also; and apart from authority I should have found it difficult to construe it as a grant of the soil. The difficulty is increased by the consideration that the usual words (jala, taru, truna, pashana, nidhi, nikshepa) indicating a grant of the soil are not used. I find it, however, difficult to distinguish the grant in the present case from the grant which was construed by this Court in Vasudev Pandit v. Collector of Puna (10). I think that we ought to follow this decision and hold that the grant in this case was a grant of the soil and not merely of the royal share of the revenue. The present case cannot be reasonably distinguished on the ground that the word durobasta is not used by the Inam Commissioner in his decision.

I do not say that the use of the word durobasta would necessarily indicate a grant of the soil. In the case of Vaman Janardan Joshi v. Collector of Thana (11) the grant was held to be limited to the royal share of the revenue. In that case, however, there was a clause to the effect that "the village should be continued to him as an Inam grant and the revenue of the said village, including that of Kasba Chauk should be entered in the Taluka account to the debit of the Jcshi, on account of Inam." In the present case we have no such clause. It is not easy to reconcile all the observations in this case with the decision in Vasudev's case (10). But there is no necessary conflict between the two decisions. On the best consideration that I can give to the question, I think that on the terms used in the grant of 1734 and confirmed by the Inam Commissioner in 1858, the grant is of the soil as in Vasudev's case (10).

In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to consider the effect of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suryanarayana's case (3), relied upon by the plaintiff as to the presumption made in this Presidency in favour of a grant being of the royal share of the revenue in the absence of any indication that the grant is of the soil, in the case of Inams and Saranjams. In a somewhat similar case their Lordships have referred to these observations and have pointed out that each case must be considered on its own facts and that in order to ascertain the effect of the grant resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances so far as they could be ascertained: see Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Diti Seetharamudu (12). Both these cases were cases of ancient Agrahara grants: and the considerations applicable to Agrahara grants are naturally different from those applicable to secular grants for service. The question whether these decisions of the Privy Council require that no presumption that a grant is of the royal share of the revenue can be made where there is nothing to indicate that the grant is of the soil, is one of great practical importance: and it will have to be decided hereafter, when it arises. As the point is argued, I do not consider it inappropriate to point out the difficulties in the way of interpreting the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the manner suggested by the plaintiff without expressing any opinion on the point. The presumption is made in this Presidency in favour of a limited grant of the royal share of the revenue in the absence of any words to indicate a grant of the soil, not because the Courts have felt any doubt as to the power of the rulers to make a complete grant of the land, but because the grants by the Crown must be construed strictly so that nothing more may be deemed to have been conveyed than what appears clearly from the words of the grant, and because suitable words are generally used when a complete grant of the soil is intended. This presumption may be only another form of stating the rule that the Crown grants should be construed according to their tenor as stated in section 2 of the Crown Grants Act XV of 1895. The history of the Inams in this Presidency and the words in the preamble of Act XI of 1852, showing that the Act was passed with a view to try and determine without delay the claims against Government on account of Inams and other estates wholly or partially exempt from the payment of land revenue, may go to indicate that the grant might be merely of the royal share of the revenue and of nothing more. The meaning of the word "resumption" under that Act, as explained by the Government in 1854 and accepted by this Court in Vishnu Trimbak v. Tatia (13) and in many other later decisions both as to Inams and Saranjams, may also show that there are many grants merely of the royal share of the revenue. The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the above cases may not be irreconcilable with the decisions of this Court, in which it is pointed out that in the absence of any words indicating a grant of the soil, a grant by the Crown must be taken to be a grant of the royal share of the revenue only.

I would allow the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court on the defendant No. 1.

I would make the same order in Second Appeal No. 929 of 1917.

HAYWARD, J.— I agree. It is simply a question of interpreting the deeds of grant, which include two from the time of the Maratha rulers and the Sanad under the Gordon Settlement from the British Government. There is, in my opinion, no sufficient ground for holding the grant to have been merely a grant of the royal share of the revenue and not a grant of the soil. It is similar to the case of Vasudev Pandit v. Collector of Puna (10). It is, of course, necessary in interpreting such grants to remember what words were in ordinary use at the time for distinguishing between grants of the royal share of the revenue only and for grants of the soil, but it has also to be remembered that this was a grant for service or a Watan grant and not an ordinary Inam or Saranjam grant. There is no authority excluding from consideration these matters. It was merely held that there was not a priori presumption that grants were limited to the royal share of the revenue and were not of the soil in the case of Suryanarayana v. Patanna (3) by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy tenant, whether entitled to cut and appropriate trees—Custom—Burden of proof—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption of correctness—Evidence before Court—Duty of Court.

The general rule is that an occupancy tenant has the right to cut the trees standing on his holding but the landlord has the right to appropriate them. If the tenant claims any right to appropriate the trees, he must prove a custom or usage to that effect. [p. 418, col. 1.]

An entry in a Record of Rights is entitled to the benefit of the presumption attached to it, but where the Court has before it the evidence upon which the record was prepared and where the plaintiff denies the correctness of the record, the Court is bound to come to a finding whether that evidence is sufficient to justify the entry. [p 418, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—These thirteen second appeals arise out of thirteen suits instituted before the Assistant Settlement Officer of Champaran under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears that 27 such suits were originally instituted. Twelve were decided by one judgment and 15 by another judgment, dated the 5th of April 1918.

The suits out of which these present second appeals arise belong to this latter batch. The plaintiff in all these suits was the proprietress of the Bettiah estate.

An entry having been made in the Record of Rights published under section 103A, Bengal Tenancy Act, that the tenants were entitled to appropriate the trees standing upon their occupancy holdings, the proprietress instituted suits before the Assistant Settlement Officer for a declaration that the entry was incorrect.

The Assistant Settlement Officer and on appeal the Special Judge both held that the proprietress had no title in the trees and maintained the entry.

It appears that the plaints in the suits were amended some months after they were filed. In the original plaints the landlord seemed to have recognised a custom by which the defendants were entitled to appropriate half the trees, but in the amended plaints she appears to have withdrawn from that position and to have pleaded that she was entitled to appropriate all the trees but that as she had in fact for many years only realised half the value of the trees, the entry should be amended by limiting her right to that extent.

The Assistant Settlement Officer framed the following issues.—

1. Is the plaintiff entitled to half share of the timber and trees standing on the present survey plots ?

2. What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to ?

The ordinary law is that the tenant has the right to cut but the landlord the right to appropriate. If the tenant claims any right of appropriation, he must prove a custom or usage to that effect and, therefore, it was open to the officer who prepared the Record of Rights to enquire whether the tenants had discharged the onus which the law had placed upon them. But as section 103B, Bengal Tenancy Act, provides that the Record of Rights is presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved by evidence, the Assistant Settlement Officer was in my opinion right in placing the onus upon the plaintiff to show that she had the right to a half share.

From his judgment, however, it is not clear whether he appreciated the real position of the parties. He seems to have been under the impression that before the Revenue Officer the onus of proving a custom was upon the plaintiff. He also seems to think that in the proceedings before him it was for the plaintiff to show that there was a custom entitling her to appropriate the half share. He had before him the evidence upon which the Record of Rights was based, but he comes to no finding that this evidence was sufficient to prove a valid custom or usage in law. He relies entirely upon the weakness of the plaintiff's evidence as to realisation, in coming to the finding that the Record of Rights has not been rebutted.

In Second Appeal No. 802, the Special Judge, Mr. Boyce, appears to have adopted the same procedure and to have thrown the burden of proving the custom upon the plaintiff. He concludes his judgment by the observation that isolated instances of the collection of the price of timber are not sufficient to prove the custom set up by her.

Mr. Adami, the learned Judge who heard the remaining cases, has stated the legal position correctly and has come to the conclusion that while the plaintiff has failed to show before the Assistant Settlement Officer that there was no custom which would justify the entry, the defendants have proved that there was a custom and that the plaintiff had abandoned her rights. The learned Judge, however, does not discuss the evidence which he considers sufficient to prove the custom set up by the defendants and in my opinion there has been no proper trial of that issue.

The Record of Rights no doubt was entitled to the benefit of the presumption attached to it, but where, as in these cases, the Court had before it the evidence upon which the record was prepared and where the plaintiff denied the correctness of the record, the Court was bound, in my opinion, to come to a finding whether that evidence was sufficient to justify the entry. This view is in accordance with the decisions of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Sheonandan Persad Sukul v. Bacha Kaut (1) and Bagha Mowar v. Ram Lakhan Misser (2).

The learned Special Judge Mr. Adami has held that a decision in a case under section 103 and a judgment in a case under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, regarding certain other tenants in the same village were inadmissible in the present suits, but in my opinion that view is incorrect. This decision and judgment would be relevant under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act.

As in my opinion there has not been an adequate and satisfactory treatment of the issue on custom in the judgments of either of the two learned Special Judges, I think their judgments and decrees should be set aside and the cases remanded for re-hearing. The Special Judge now exercising jurisdiction in the matter must come to a clear and definite finding whether the defendants have proved a valid custom entitling them to a half share in the trees. For this purpose they will be entitled to adduce before him such additional evidence as they think necessary, while the landlord will be entitled to adduce rebutting evidence in reply. If the defendants decline to adduce further evidence, the learned Judge will dispose of the case upon the evidence already on the record.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 9—Right of worship, nature of—Suit to enforce rights of worship and carrying processions, whether of civil nature.

The ordinary right of a citizen to worship, according to his own belief, any deity and in such manner as his belief requires him to do so long as he does not prevent others from carrying on similar worship according to their own belief, is a right of a civil nature and any interference with that right is a matter in respect of which relief would, in a proper case, be granted by a Civil Court. [p 421, col. 2.]

The right to conduct religious processions in the public streets is a right inherent in every person, provided he does not thereby invade the rights of property enjoyed by others or cause a public nuisance or interfere with the ordinary use of the streets by the public and subject to such directions or prohibitions as may be issued by the Magistrate to prevent obstructions to the thoroughfare or breaches of the public peace. The right to carry on the worship of any deity in any manner that a person pleases, subject to similar conditions, is also a right inherent in every person. [p. 421, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 478 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Chiplun, in Civil Suit No. 160 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The question in this second appeal is, whether the plaintiffs' claim is cognizable by Civil Courts.

The plaintiffs allege that their ancestors set up a new Bahiri temple at Chiplun for worship and devotional sports many years ago, that the present defendants' ancestors, who worshipped the same deity installed as the old Bahiri, filed Suit No. 28 of 1844 in the Court of the Munsif of Chiplun against the worshippers of the newly installed deity, and that in that suit they in effect sought to restrain the then defendants (plaintiffs' predecessors) from carrying on the worship of the new Bahiri in the same manner as the worship of the old Bahiri. A decree was passed in the suit and ultimately upheld by the Sudder Diwani Adawlut in Special Appeal No. 4631 in the year 1852, under which the then defendants were restrained from performing certain ceremonies as being appurtenant to the village deity, but were allowed to perform them on their passing an agreement to the Collector that they would not perform the particular ceremonies as village ceremonies but would perform them for sports and out of devotion. They further allege that in 1911 the District Magistrate passed an order under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act at the instance of the present defendants restricting the plaintiffs in their worship to the four rites mentioned in the said decree and referred to in the prayer clause as items Nos. 1, 9, 11 and 13. They allege that they have been subsequently prohibited by an order made in October 1911 to use a dhol on the said occasions. They claim in this suit a declaration that they have a right to do certain acts of worship in connection with the new Bahiri and for an injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing them in the performance of the worship in that manner. They also claim damages to the extent of Rs. 5. The acts referred to in the plaint in the prayer clause are these:—

"1. Palkhi procession in the month of Falgun.

2. Performance of tamasha on the other before the god and tamasha procession along with the palkhi in the town.

3. Moving about in the town playing dhulwad (playing with mud, etc.,) and along with nishans and zendes (banners) on the first day of the latter half of Falgun.

4. Moving about in town playing shenwad (playing with cowdung) along with nishans and zendes (banners) on the 2nd day of the latter half of Falgun.

5. Procession of rang (colours) through the town and the throwing of colours on each other's body on the 5th day of the latter half of Falgun

6. Taking of the palkhi to Chetavali in Chaitra.

7. Pal kiraka procession in Jeshta and Ashad and on occasions a kiraka procession of and killing of a goat.

8. To do jagar in Shrawan and on the full-moon day in Shrawan taking of a cocoanut in procession from the temple to the Bunder (harbour) for offering to the water-deity.

9. Tying povtis (cotton thread) round the wrist of the god in Shrawan.

10. Taking of the palkhi in procession to Uktad in Bhadrapad.

11. Setting up (ghat) in the temple in Ashwin.

12. Making out palkhi on Dasra day for the worship of Shami tree.

13. Waiving lamp about the idol in Diwali.

14. Raising of the banner and the god going to hunting on the full moon day in Paush and the lowering of the banner and the return of the god on the full moon day in Magh.

15. And other acts required to be done occasionally, and to use the dhol on those occasions."

The defendants contend that the claim is not cognizable by the Civil Courts and that on merits the plaintiffs have no such rights. The plaintiffs gave a purshis to the effect that the right of performing the ceremonies mentioned in the plaint was not vested in the deity, but it was their right to perform the said ceremonies before the deity for sports and out of devotion.

Both the lower Courts have disallowed the plaintiffs' claim on the preliminary ground that the suit is not cognizable by the Civil Courts.

In the appeal before us we are not concerned with the merits of the plaintiffs' claim, nor with the extent and form of the relief, which the plaintiffs may be ultimately found to be entitled to. The only question that we have to consider is whether the claim is cognizable by the Civil Courts.

It will be convenient to state the terms of the decree in the suit of 1844 and of the order of the District Magistrate. In the suit of 1844 the Court had made the following order:—

"By doing ceremonies of manasthiti such as taking out palkhis, preparing povtis, etc, at the new temple in course of time it will not be possible to distinguish ceremonies of manasthiti from the other; and plaintiff will thereby suffer. Therefore, the ceremonies of manasthiti performed at the new temple, i. e.,

1. Taking out palkhi in Shimga,
2. Preparing povtis in Shrawan,
3. Setting up ghat in Ashwin, and
4. Waiving lamp in diwali

should not be performed by the defendants. But if the defendants pass a Muchalka (recognizance) or Karar to Government that they will perform them not as village ceremonies (ganvkichi manasthiti) but will perform them for sport and out of devotion (khelada-khal bhaktichi), there is no reason to forbid them to do so. They should follow their own devotion. Performing ceremonies of manasthiti at the new temple is not approved by Government. If defendants don't pass a Karar, they should not perform the ceremonies specified in the plaint.

The stone set up as idol by defendants is installed according to rites as stated by defendants' witnesses. There is, therefore, no reason to remove them. They will be treated like the several ones which some people set up out of devotion."

The District Magistrate passed a considered order under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890), in which he directed in paragraph 16 (2) that—

"The new Bahiri people should perform only the four ceremonies mentioned in paragraph 13 above after passing the Karar to Government that they would perform them for sport and out of devotion and not as of manasthiti; they shall not perform at all the other ceremonies referred to in paragraph 14 above neither out of sport nor out of devotion nor as of manasthiti and shall not be allowed to pass any Karar concerning those other ceremonies."

The question is whether the present claim of the plaintiffs is of a civil nature. There is no question in this suit as to the right to property or to an office and the explanation to section 9 of the Code has no application. It is not suggested in this case that the cognisance of this suit is either expressly or impliedly barred. In fact section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act expressly provides that any order made by the District Magistrate under sub-section 1 shall be subject to a decree, injunction or order made by a Court having jurisdiction. The question, therefore, simply is whether the suit as framed is of a civil nature within the meaning of section 9 of the Code. Almost all the prayers in the plaint relate to some processions to be carried in the town of Chiplun on some occasions accompanied with some ceremonies in connection with the new Bahiri. The plaintiffs claim the right to worship the deity in any manner they please and to use the public streets for the purpose of processions connected with the worship of the deity as detailed in the plaint and to use the dhol on these occasions, and they make it clear that they do not claim to carry on any worship in connection with the new Bahiri as if it was the worship of the village deity (Gram Devata). The order of the District Magistrate makes it clear that they are prohibited altogether from performing any of these ceremonies, except the four which are mentioned in the decree in the suit of 1844, even for sport or out of devotion. The pleadings in the present case and the terms of the order of the District Magistrate make it quite clear that the real dispute between the parties is as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to carry on the worship of the new Bahiri as they please so long as they do not perform it as of manasthiti, or whether the defendants have the exclusive right to perform those ceremonies with reference to the village deity and to prevent other persons from performing similar worship in connection with another deity of the same name. The prayers in the suit also involve the claim to use the public streets for the purpose of certain religious processions as detailed in the plaint. The question in this case is, not whether the defendants shall be required to perform any ceremony or that the plaintiffs shall be required to do so, but whether the ordinary right of a citizen to worship, according to his own belief, any deity and in such manner as his belief requires him to do, so long as he does not prevent others from carrying on similar worship according to their own belief, is a right of a civil nature. After giving the best consideration to this point it seems to me that in substance the plaintiffs' suit is of a civil nature, and if they have a right to worship the new deity in any manner they please, any interference with that right is a matter with reference to which they can get relief in a Civil Court provided they are found entitled to that relief.

It has been held in several cases that the right to conduct religious processions in the public streets is a right inherent in every person, provided he does not thereby invade the rights of property enjoyed by others or cause a public nuisance or interfere with the ordinary use of the streets by the public and subject to such directions or prohibitions as may be issued by the Magistrate to prevent obstructions to the thoroughfare or breaches of the public peace. Further the right to carry on the worship of any deity in any manner that a person pleases subject to similar conditions is also a right inherent in every person, and it is an important right. I do not think that the lower Courts are right in holding that the suit is not of a civil nature. In the present case the question does not relate to any religious rites or ceremonies, but to the right of the plaintiffs to be protected in the performance of the worship of their deity in any manner they please, subject to the conditions which I have already stated with reference to the right to use the public streets and to their right to prevent the defendants from interfering with the performance of the worship in their own way.

This conclusion in the present case appears to me to be consistent with the view which the Sadder Diwani Adawlut took in the suit of 1841 which came up to that Court. It was held by the learned Judges then that the suit was cognizable by a Civil Court under Regulation II of 1827, section 21, as it then stood, having regard to the nature of that suit and the relief claimed by the plaintiffs in that suit. The present suit seems to me to be of a similar nature. The present plaintiffs seek to be protected in the performance of their worship of the deity. I do not express any opinion as to the effect of the decree in that suit on the merits of the present claim. The District Magistrate has referred to this decree in his order, and it is a point in dispute between the parties as to whether the effect of the decree is in favour of the plaintiffs or the defendants in the present case. That is a matter which the Court dealing with the suit on the merits will have to consider and to decide. I refer to that suit at present only for the purpose of showing that it was held to be of a civil nature.

Several cases have been cited in the argument at the Bar; but I do not consider it necessary to discuss them. The nature of the present suit must be determined with reference to the allegations and the pleadings in the present case. The observations in the reported cases which have been relied upon on either side must be read with reference to and in the light of the nature of the particular suit in which they are made. I do not think that any decision referred to in the argument conflicts in any way with the view which I take of this case.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the suit to the trial Court for disposal according to law.

All costs to be costs in the suit.

HAYWARD, J.— I agree. The cause of action is, in my opinion, of a civil nature, in so far as it relates to the conduct of the defendants tending to prevent the exercise of the ordinary rights of freedom of worship of the other side, whether in private or in public. It would seem, broadly speaking, that every citizen has a right to worship as he pleases so long as he does not thereby trench upon the rights of office or property of other persons. He has, broadly speaking, similarly a right to go in procession so long as he does not interfere with the rights of others to the unrestricted use of the public roads and streets. But the exercise of these rights is always subject to such orders as might be necessary to prevent disorder or riot by the Magistrates under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act or section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Appeal allowed.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c), (v)—Suit for declaration of title and possession—Court-fee payable.

Where a challenge is directly thrown on the plaintiff's title as the adopted son of a certain person and the plaintiff comes into Court in order to meet that challenge and claims a declaration of his title as an adopted son and also seeks to recover possession of his adoptive father's property, the suit falls within section 7 (iv) (c), of the Court Fees Act and not within clause (v) of the section. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagulpore, in Trial Suit No. 125 of 1918, dated the 13th August 1919.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, Rajendra Prasad and Sambhu Saran, for the Appellants.

Messrs, Lal Mohan Ganguly and Nitai Ch. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

FACTS —The plaintiff brought this suit for possession of an estate on the ground that he had been validly adopted by the widow of the last male owner under authority from the latter. He valued the suit at 5 lacs for purposes of jurisdiction and at Rs. 82,500 for purposes of Court-fee, as if it were a suit for possession, valuing the immoveable property at ten times the Government revenue for the purpose of Court-fee. The plaintiff prayed for the following reliefs:

"(1) For adjudication that the plaintiff is entitled to the properties set forth in schedule A below as the adopted son and heir of Shib Nag Chandi Nath Chaudhry and that the defendants 1st, 3rd, 4th parties have wrongfully kept him out of possession thereof.

"(2) For a decree for possession of the said properties in favour of the plaintiff against the said defendants 1st, 3rd and 4th parties, and for putting him in possession of the properties mentioned in part I of the said schedule A by ousting these defendants or any person claiming under them. and of the properties mentioned in part II of the said schedule by ordering the defendant 1st party to deliver them to the plaintiff or in default the value.

"(3) For a decree for Rs. 60,000 or such other sums as the Court may find just and proper on account of mesne profits of the properties set forth in part I of the schedule A from the Fasli year 1321 till the date of the suit as well as future mesne profits from the date of the suit till the date of the plaintiff's possession with interest against the defendants 1st, 3rd and 4th parties.

"(4) For costs of the suit with interest against the defendants."

The defendants denied that the plaintiff was the adopted son of Shib Nag Chandi Nath Choudhry and asserted that even if he was adopted, his adoption was invalid. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff, therefore, appealed to the High Court. He valued his appeal as he had valued his suit both for the purposes of jurisdiction and for the Court fees. The Stamp Reporter objected to the Court-fees paid on the plaint as well as on the memo. of appeal, being of opinion that the suit was one for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and as such the plaintiff ought to have paid Court-fees ad valorem on 5 lacs, the jurisdictional value, both on the plaint and on the memo. of appeal under section 7 (IV) (c) of the Court Fees Act. He submitted the matter to the Taxing Officer, who agreeing with the reports of the Stamp Reporter observed as follows: —

"It is clear that by the 1st relief a declaration was asked for of plaintiff's title as the adopted son. This adoption was denied by the defendants and this was the main issue in the suit. The burden of proving adoption lies on the person who asserts the adoption, and without the declaration of title it would be impossible for the plaintiff to recover possession; and that this was recognized is clear from the reliefs claimed.

The learned Vakil for the appellants contended that it was only so when a document had to be got rid of that a declaration is required. But I think his argument is based on the fact that the rulings reported as Lagan Burt Kuer v. Khakhan Singh (1) and Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (2) happened to refer to cases in which a document stood in the way of the plaintiff. What stands in the plaintiff's way in the present case is the fact that unless he can prove not only his adoption but the validity of his adoption, he cannot have any claim to recover possession. Had he left out the prayer regarding his adoption or had the defendants admitted the adoption, I should have held that in the former case we must be guided by the plaint, and in the latter case also the prayer for adjudication of the adoption was a surplusage. As it is the prayer is there; and so far from being a surplusage, it is the very foundation of the plaintiff's case, and it is hotly contested by the defendants. I, therefore, hold that this is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and that ad valorem Court-fees must be paid on the value of the suit. The proper Court-fee both on the plaint and on the memo. of appeal is Rs. 3,000. Rs. 1,350 having been paid on both, there is a deficit on each of Rs. 1,650, i. e., a total deficit of Rs. 3,300. One month's time is allowed within which to pay."

The deficit Court-fee on the memo. of appeal to the High Court was paid within time, but the deficit of Rs. 1,650 due from the appellant on his plaint in the Court of 1st instance was not paid. The case was, therefore, placed before a Division Bench constituted of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Das and the Hon'ble Mr.

JAMSEDJI v. HUSSEINBHAI AHMEDBHAI.

Justice Foster for proper orders. The learned Judges on 29th January 1920 passed the following ORDER.—This is a Court-fee matter.

The question involved is of considerable importance and in our view should be decided by a larger Bench. The point is this. Whether a suit for declaration of title as adopted son and for possession is a suit that comes within section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act, or within section 7, clause (V) of that Act. The learned Registrar has taken the view that it comes under section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellant has argued that this view is erroneous inasmuch as every suit for possession must necessarily involve adjudication of the title of the plaintiff. He says that in every suit for possession the plaintiff must prove his title, and that consequently he must necessarily ask for declaration of his title. In my view the question depends on whether the suit is a suit that comes within section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. If it is a suit that comes within section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, then it must come under section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act.

It is true that every suit for possession does not involve a question of title in the sense that the plaintiff in an ejectment suit must prove his title. But that is not the case here. Where, however, a challenge is directly thrown on the title of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff comes to Court in order to meet that challenge, it is a suit clearly under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and it would accordingly, in my view, come under section 7, clause (IV), sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act. In this case it appears to me that there was undoubtedly a challenge thrown on the plaintiff's title. He came to Court to meet that challenge. He asked for a declaration that he was the adopted son of somebody and for consequential relief, that is, for possession. It is not the same thing as an ordinary suit for possession where the question of title incidentally arises. In my view the learned Registrar has taken an entirely correct view of the matter, but as the question is always coming before us in one garb or another, we think that it ought to be finally settled by a larger Bench. Place the record before the learned Chief Justice for necessary orders.

On 4th February 1920 the learned Chief Justice (Sir Dawson Miller, Kt.) declined to refer the matter to a Full Bench and passed the following ORDER.—In my opinion this decision is correct. There is no other decision in conflict with the above and I do not think it is necessary to refer it to a Full Bench.

The case was again placed before the Division Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Adami, which on the 5th February 1920 passed the following

FINAL ORDER.—This matter now comes before us for decision. My learned brother Mr. Justice Foster and myself expressed our view in the order which we passed on the 29th January last. We thought that the matter was of general importance and should be settled by the decision of a larger Bench. We directed that the papers should be placed before the learned Chief Justice for the necessary orders. The learned Chief Justice does not think that there is any necessity to refer the matter to a Full Bench. My learned brother Mr. Justice Adami agrees with the view which I have already expressed in the case. Therefore, the order must be that the decision of the learned Registrar is right and that the appellant must pay the additional Court-fees on the plaint in the lower Court. We give him three weeks time to do so.

JAMSETJI v. HUSEINBHAI AHMEDHBI.

Mr. Kanga, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Desai, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The summons was issued on an application by the plaintiff for leave to continue the suit against the defendants who are Receivers of the estate of Ahmedbhai Habibbhai. The plaintiff claims to have been employed as a broker by the Receivers and sues for his brokerage. It is clear, therefore, that there is a question to be tried and the case is one in which the Court would grant leave as a matter of course: Lane v. Capsey (1) and Braja Bhusan Trigunait v. Sris Chandra Tewari (2).

The only difficulty arises from the fact that per incuriam the suit was filed without the previous sanction of the Court. It was held in Pramotha Nath Gangooly v. Khetra Nath Banerjee (3) that leave of the Court is a condition precedent to the right to sue and that that omission cannot be rectified by subsequent application. The judgment in that case is not supported by any reasons and was not followed in Rustomjee Dhunjibhai Sethna v. Frederic Gaebele (4). The various statutory provisions which require the consent of the Court or some other authority as a condition on which a suit may be maintained are collected in the case of Chandulal Khushalji v. Awad (5). The consideration of those and subsequent authorities shows that the words in the Statute have to be examined in each case in order to ascertain whether the provision is a bar to the Court dealing with the actior, or is a bar to the original institution of the suit. In the former case the suit may continue on leave subsequently granted: for instance, the leave of the Collector in a suit to which sections 4 and 6 of the Pensions Act XXIII of 1871 are applicable: Nawab Muhammad Azmat Ali Khan v. Musammat Lalli Begum (6), or leave under Order I, rule 8 (1), Civil Procedure Code: Fernandez v. Rodrigues (7), or leave under section 20, Civil Procedure Code: Narayan Shankar v. Secretary of State (8). But in the latter case, that is, when the bar is to the original institution of the suit, leave subsequently granted is of no avail: for instance, the consent of the Advocate-General under section 92, Civil Procedure Code: Tricumdass Mulji v Khimji Vullabhdass (9), or the leave of the Court under section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act: Dwarkadas Tejbhandar, In re (10).

In the case of a suit against a Receiver there is no statutory provision requiring the leave of the Court. But the same principle would apply, and the defect can be cured by leave subsequently granted if there is no bar to the institution of the suit, that is to the jurisdiction of the Court to admit the plaint.

The necessity for leave to sue the Receiver rests upon two considerations: (1) that such a suit is incompatible with the dignity and authority of the Court; (2) that it might interfere with the duty of the Court to maintain the Receiver's possession. Neither of these considerations affects the jurisdiction of the Court. They are matters which the Court can deal with after the suit is filed: and the Court could order the suit to be stayed until it was satisfied that there was no encroachment upon its authority, nor want of attempt to interfere with the Receiver's possession.

Therefore, it seems clear that leave may be granted after the filing of the suit, and Mr. Desai with his customary fairness does not dispute this proposition.

Accordingly, I make the summons absolute but direct that plaintiff pay the costs of the summons. Counsel certified.

Summons made absolute.

ADHIKARI KUER v. LOKENATH RAI.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 195 OF 1917.

March 3, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Adami.

Musammat ADHIKARI KUER—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

LOKENATH RAI—PLAINTIFF AND SHEO SHANKAR PROSAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow, alienation by—Consent of reversioner, effect of—Necessity, proof of.

The consent of the immediate reversioner to an alienation made by a Hindu widow is presumptive proof of legal necessity and bars further enquiry into legal necessity. The consenting reversioner cannot subsequently say that there was no legal necessity. [p. 428, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah.

The Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha, Messrs. Naresh Chandra Sinha and Netai Ch. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and Shambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondent Loknath Roy against the appellant and the pro forma respondents to enforce a mortgage bond executed by Musammat Adhikari Kuer and by Sheo Shankar, Uma Shankar and Rama Shankar on the 9th of August 1907. There is no dispute that Musammat Adhikari Kuer was in possession of the estate in her right as a Hindu widow and that Sheo Shankar, Uma Shankar and Rama Shankar, as her daughter's sons, were on that date the immediate reversioners. It appears that Rama Shankar was on that date a minor but that his name was actually signed by his eldest brother Sheo Shankar.

The learned Subordinate Judge has given a full mortgage decree to the plaintiff.

The first question which has been argued on behalf of the appellant is that there were certain part payments made by Musammat Adhikari Kuer and that those part payments are not shown in the account annexed to the plaint. The appellant's allegation is that she paid Rs. 200 to the plaintiff on the 30th of Bhado 1316 and Rs. 408 on the 30th of Aghan 1319. She relies upon two receipts alleged to have been granted by the plaintiff to her. It is noteworthy that these payments are not endorsed on the mortgage-bond.

Now, in order to determine this question it is necessary to examine whether the case of the defendant was at all put to the plaintiff. The plaintiff came to the witness-box and stated as distinctly as he could that the defendant had not paid anything to him on account of his dues. That was a clear statement that nothing had been paid to him by the defendant. There was absolutely no cross-examination on this point at all. The Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha, on behalf of the appellant, relies on the fact that the defendant raised the question of part payments specifically in her written statement and that, therefore, it was for the plaintiff to deny that allegation in the witness-box. I do not agree with this contention at all. The plaintiff came to the witness-box to prove his case and it was for the defendants, if they had a specific case on the point, to put that specific case to the plaintiff. It is, in my opinion, not fair to rely upon receipts alleged to have been executed by Loknath without giving Loknath an opportunity to deny his signatures on those receipts.

In the next place the evidence as regards the payments is, in my opinion, not sufficient. I will take the second receipt. That receipt is alleged to have been granted on the 30th of Aghan 1319. Now, it is the defendant's case that on the 5th of Fagun 1317 the defendant executed a Mukhtarnama in favour of the plaintiff's son, appointing him her agent for the purpose of collecting rents, issues and profits. Therefore, on the date, when she is alleged to have paid Rs. 408 to the plaintiff, she was not in possession of the estate at all. The Mukhtarnama has been read to us by the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha and it appears that the lady appointed Ram Nihora, the son of the plaintiff, as her Manager on a salary to make collections on her behalf, to pay Government revenue and other public demands out of such collections and to pay her Rs. 30 a month for her expenses and at the end of each year to account to her for such collections and to make over to her the balance in hand. Now one of the witnesses for the defendants was asked from where defendant No. 1 got Rs. 408, which she made over to the plaintiff in part payment of what was due from her to the plaintiff. This witness is Kailas Bihari, who is a servant of the defendant and undoubtedly looks after her interest. His answer was 'I cannot say.' The defendant herself, in her evidence, says that arrears were due to her from the tenants and that these arrears were being realized by her servant Jankey Lal and that she made the payments to the plaintiff out of these collections. It seems to me that this is an impossible story. The Mukhtarnama shows that Ram Nihora was there to make collections on her behalf. The Mukhtarnama makes no distinction whatever between rents as they fell due and arrears of rent. Therefore, if the Mukhtarnama was at all acted upon, these collections would undoubtedly have been made by Ram Nihora and not by Jankey Lal. Now, if the second receipt goes, then, in my view, it must throw suspicion on the whole story of part payments. In my view, these circumstances, coupled with the fact that the receipts were not shown to the plaintiff when he came to the witness-box to give his evidence, make it impossible for us to accept the story of part-payments.

The next point argued by the Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha is that the defendant appointed the plaintiff her agent to collect rents on her behalf and that, therefore, the plaintiff cannot claim an account of the money due to him from the defendant on the foot of the mortgage-bond, without accounting to her for the monies that came into his hands by virtue of the Mukhtarnama. The principle is well established that he who claims an account must also render account, if he is at all accountable. But in this case the Mukhtarnama is not in favour of the plaintiff, but in favour of the plaintiff's son. The evidence of the defendant, no doubt, is that though the name of Ram Nihora was used in the transaction, it was the plaintiff who actually acted for her. This evidence I cannot accept. This case, again, was not put to the plaintiff when he came to the witness box; and for that reason and also for the reason that every apparent transaction must be assumed to be the real transaction until the contrary is shown, I cannot accept this case.

The last point that has been argued before us is that the reversioners could not bind their reversionary interest by the mortgage transaction and that, therefore, all that can be sold in execution of the mortgage decree is the widow's interest. The question, whether the reversioners can bind their reversionary interest, is one of considerable difficulty and I do not propose to discuss that point in this case. But I look upon the transaction by the reversioners not as binding their interest in the estate but as consenting to the transaction by the widow. It is unnecessary to refer to all the cases, that have been decided on this question, but I may usefully cite a passage from the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Pershad Singh (1). At page 285* the Judicial Committee, in that case, said as follows:—"The law relating to the dealings of a Hindu widow with her husband's estate which devolves on her in default of issue is now too well-settled to need a prolonged consideration. To be valid as against the reversioners, or to affect their reversionary rights, a charge created by a Hindu widow or an alienation effected by her can be supported only by proof aliunde that such debt was contracted or such alienation was made for valid and legal necessity, and the onus of establishing such necessity rests heavily on the person who claims the benefit of transactions with a Hindu widow or other females taking similar estates. The requirement of the law may, however, be fulfilled by proving the consent or concurrence of the reversioners to or in the transactions." The Judicial Committee went on to point out as follows:—"There is no evidence that they," the reversioners, "benefited from the transactions, or that so far as they were concerned there was any need for the mortgages. Their Lordships think that when a stringent equity, to use Lord Hobhouse's expression in the course of the argument in Jiwan Singh v. Misri Lal (2), arising out of an alleged consent by the reversioners is sought to be enforced against them, such consent must be established by positive evidence that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Part-payment of principal—Writing, what must contain—Extension of limitation.

If the fact that a payment is made by a debtor to a creditor appears in the handwriting of the person making the payment, and if it appears on the evidence in the case that the payment was in part satisfaction of the principal of a debt, the requirements of section 20 of the Limitation Act would be satisfied. JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued to recover the price of certain goods sold to the defendant on the 10th of September 1912 with interest up to date of suit; and deducting therefrom the amount received he claimed in all Rs. 1,197 at the date of the suit. The suit was filed on the 14th of October 1915. It was filed more than three years after the date on which the goods in question were supplied. But the plaintiff relied upon part-payments in respect of the debt made in two sums in July 1913, one of Rs. 193-8-0 forming part of the cash payment of Rs. 500 and the other of Rs. 235 by a Hundi received from the defendant, and upon the fact of the payments appearing in a letter written by the debtor on the 2nd of July 1913.

In the trial Court the defendant denied the claim on the merits and pleaded limitation. It was, however, found that the goods in question were sold by the plaintiff to the defendant and that the price of the goods was Rs. 1,350 with certain incidental charges in respect of the transaction. The trial Court, however, found that the part-payments in question did not satisfy the requirements of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act and that the claim was time-barred. Accordingly the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff appealed to the District Court, and the First Class Subordinate Judge with Appellate Powers upheld the plea of limitation and dismissed the appeal.

In the appeal to this Court by the plaintiff the same question of limitation has been raised. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the requirements of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act are satisfied in this case, that the two payments appear in the handwriting of the defendant and that they were made in respect of an account under circumstances under which the inference must necessarily arise that they were made in part-payment of the debt in question. On the other hand on behalf of the respondent it is urged that the requirements of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act have not been satisfied, as the writing in question does not show in terms that the payments were in respect of the debt in question, and that the payments were intended to be only part-payments, even if they were otherwise referable to the debt in question. It is contended that the debtor may have intended to make the payments in full satisfaction of the claim, that at least there is an ambiguity on the point and that an ambiguous writing of that character cannot serve the purpose of the plaintiff.

It is necessary at the outset to state that the account between the plaintiff and the defendant at the date of these two payments showed only a balance of about Rs. 301 apart from the debt in suit. There is no dispute in the present case about the correctness of this account. Over and above this balance at the date there was the debt of about Rs. 1,350 relating to the transaction in question. Thus the total amount due at the date of the two payments was a little over Rs. 1,650. When on the 4th and 5th of July 1913 the debtor paid two sums of Rs. 500 and Rs. 235, he necessarily paid a part of the debt in question. There is no other account between the parties and there is no other debt due by the defendant to the plaintiff than that appearing in the account When he made these two payments, the defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff as follows: "The reason for writing the letter is that your letter is received. I have sent currency notes of Rs. 500 and a Hundi for Rs. 235, in all Rs. 735. Credit them." It is true that this letter does not in terms contain any reference to the debt in question, nor does it state in terms that the sums were to be treated as part-payments of the debt in question. But the letter itself refers to a letter received by the defendant from the plaintiff. The letter which would be in the possession of the defendant has not been produced, and there is no evidence of the contents of that letter. The account shows that the debt in question was ascertained sometime before the payments. The state of the accounts and the terms of the letter clearly show that the defendant was either aware or made aware at the time of these payments of the existing state of the accounts which would include the debt in question, and further that he made the payments not intending that they were to be treated as payments in full satisfaction of the amount then due, but in the ordinary course intending thereby satisfaction of the amount due on the account to the extent of the payments.

The question is whether, on these facts, the payments made satisfy the requirements of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. That section provides that where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made, subject to the proviso that in the case of part-payment of the principal of the debt the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same. In the present case there can be no doubt about the fact of a part of the debt having been paid by the debtor on the state of the accounts. There is no doubt also that the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same. It is urged, however, that the proviso is not satisfied, as the fact that the payment was made in part satisfaction of the debt in question does not appear in the handwriting of the person making it. I do not think that the proviso requires that to be done in terms. It seems to me on the words of the proviso that if the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same and if it appears on the evidence in the case that the payment was in part satisfaction of the principal of a debt, the requirements of the section would be satisfied. The argument urged on behalf of the respondent requires the reading of words in the proviso, which are not there. The words in the proviso refer to the fact of payment and not to the fact of the payment being a part-payment of the principal. It is not without significance that the words 'as such' used with reference to the payment of interest are not used with reference to the part-payment of the principal. The view I take is consistent with the decision in Jada Ankamma v. Rama Sastrulu (1) and the observations in Kedar Nath Mitter v. Dinobandhu Shaha (2). In the present case the lower Appellate Court seems to me to have proceeded upon an erroneous view as to the meaning of the proviso. The decision in Ranchordas v. Pestonji (3) relied upon by the lower Appellate Court does not seem to me to conflict with the view which I take of the proviso; on the contrary some of the observations in the judgment seem to support that view. All that is necessary, in my opinion, for the creditor to prove in such a case is that the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same and further that the payment is really in part satisfaction of the principal of a debt. If these two facts are established, the creditor is entitled to have the benefit of the saving provisions of section 20 on the question of limitation. In the present case both the facts are proved. The payments appear in the letter, written by the debtor: and the same letter taken along with the undisputed facts as to the state of the accounts between the parties, clearly shows that the payments were in part satisfaction of the debt in question.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and allow the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 1,197 with interest at 6 per cent., from the date of the suit to the date of payment with costs throughout on the defendant.

PASUPATI MUKHERJEE In the goods of.

HAYWARD, J.—I agree. The account in the books of the plaintiff showed that there was a sum of about Rs. 300 due besides the debt of Rs. 1,350 sought in this litigation to be recovered from the defendant. The defendant made two payments, one of Rs. 500 and the other of Rs. 235 in response to a letter received by him, but which he has not produced. The first payment was sufficient to wipe off the Rs. 300 odd due and to leave besides a balance of some Rs. 200, which together with the other payment of Rs. 235 would be available against the debt of Rs. 1,350 odd demanded in this litigation from the defendant. It seems to me that the inference naturally to be drawn from these facts would be that this balance of Rs. 435 was intended as a part-payment of the principal sum of Rs. 1,350 odd, which must have been included in the demand which was no doubt made in the letter which has not been produced by the defendant. This inference would seem to me to be justified on the principles laid down in the cases of Evans v. Davies (4) and Friend v. Young (5). It was, however, held at the trial that that would not be enough and that it would be necessary to show not only that such part-payment was noted in the handwriting of the defendant, but also that the principal sum towards which it was paid should also be noted in the handwriting of the defendant under the proviso to section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. It seems to me, however, that that was an error. It was not required by the express words of the proviso that anything but the payment should be noted in the handwriting of the person making it. It was not expressly provided that the principal debt to which the payment was made should also be noted in the handwriting of the person making it and that was pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Kedar Nath Mitter v. Dinabandhu Shaha (2). There a cheque drawn in favour of the payee was the document which noted the part-payment and there would not be in such a document any mention of a principal debt towards which the payment was made. It would appear to me, therefore, that it was sufficient to prove that the payment was noted in the handwriting of the defendant and it was not necessary to prove besides anything more than that the payment was intended to be a part payment of the principal sum demanded from the defendant. It was not necessary, that is to say, to have a description of the principal debt also noted in the handwriting of the defendant. The demand, therefore, for the balance due upon this debt of Rs. 1,350 odd was, in my opinion, saved from the bar of limitation by the provisions of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act.

There ought, therefore, in my opinion, to be a decree in favour of the payee as proposed for Rs. 1,197 principal with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of suit till payment with costs from the defendant in all Courts.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

August 21, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rankin.

In the goods of PASUPATI MUKHERJEE, DECEASED.

Administrator Generals Act (III of 1913), s. 11, applicability of, where Administrator-General appointed executor.

The fact that the Administrator-General is appointed to be the executor of a Will, is no bar to his obtaining, under section 11 of the Administrator-General's Act, an order to take possession of the assets before applying for Probate of the Will. [p. 432, col. 1.]

Mr. B. L. Mitter, for the Petitioner Administrator-General.

Messrs. O. R. Das and I. B. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case I think there is power on the facts of the present case to make the order which is asked for under section 11 of Act III of 1913. This estate consists of shares, some of which, though by no means necessarily all of which, may want looking after in the sense that their value may be going up and down, also in the sense that dividends require to be collected, and further in the sense that bonus shares may require to be applied for and obtained in order that the most may be made of the deceased's estate. It is not disputed that the suggestion that the Administrator-General should have the estate under section 11, would be anything except a convenient and cheap method to make sure that this property should not come to any harm; but on behalf of the respondents to this motion, Mr. Sen has argued before me that in view of the fact that the applicant here alleges that there is a Will and a valid Will, of which he had been appointed executor, and notwithstanding the fact that the execution of the Will is disputed and the validity, even if it were duly executed, is also disputed, section 11 does not apply. Now it seems to me that there being no difficulty with regard to the condition as regards this testator having left estate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court; and the applicant not alleging that there is no person immediately available who is legally entitled to the succession of this estate, I have to look at the second condition mentioned in the second part of section 11:—"Such Court is satisfied that danger is to be apprehended of misappropriation, deterioration, or waste of such assets before it can be determined who may be legally entitled to the succession thereto." Mr. Sen has argued that if it is even alleged by the party applicant that there is a valid Will, that prevents him, and I rather gather that he thinks it prevents anybody else, having recourse to that section. I do not think so. I do not see why the word "succession" should be read as meaning "intestate succession." I think that the executor, as in this particular instance, is the universal successor to his testator. It seems to me that it would be a very extraordinary thing if such a very common case were left out of the benefit of section 11, it being a well-known fact that the commonest case, when difficulties of this kind arise, is a case where one person propounds a Will and the other person says that there is no Will at all. Another way of looking at the matter is this:—When you have two parties, one of whom affirms that there is a Will and the other that there is no Will, it seems to me perfectly clear that at all events on an application of the latter party, the powers of section 11 would apply. I think that although, as a matter of fact, where a party is going to propound a Will, it will in general be the better course for him to make an application for probate and get an administrator pendente lite, nevertheless when the Administrator-General does apply, and one party intends to contend that there is a valid Will and the other party contends that there is no valid Will, he comes within that section. Sections 12 and 13 are explained by Mr. Sen as applying only to cases where a person comes forward and unexpectedly propounds a Will. I think there is no reason in sections 12 and 13 which requires a condition of unexpectedness at all. I think the words "before it can be determined who may be legally entitled to succession thereto" include what is perhaps the commonest case of all, namely, a contest between two people, one of whom propounds a Will and the other of whom alleges that there was an intestacy. That being so, I think the application is within the powers of section 11. There is no reason why the power should not be exercised in view of the fact that nobody can suggest a better or more businesslike course.

I should like to say, however, that the express directions in the Will with regard to the selling of these shares should be carefully observed and applied by the Administrator-General. I do not propose to give the Administrator General any special directions in the matter, but I do want to point out to him that his petition is just a little recklessly expressed and might lead persons, who are a little timorous, to suppose that he was going to sell these shares wholesale and convert them into cash. It is not intended that he should do anything of the sort. He has a discretion in the matter, but he must exercise that discretion wisely and carefully and not on large and general principles. The application is allowed. Both parties will get their costs out of the estate. Mr. Mitter will get his costs as between attorney and client.

Application allowed.

JUDGMENT.

KENNEDY, A. J. C.—This applicant was declared a tout by the Joint Judge of Hyderabad in an enquiry held by him under the Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879. He comes here in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am of opinion that we have no power to interfere under that section with the order under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. But I propose in this particular case to give reason why, even if we had full power, we should not interfere.

It is only under the third clause of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, that we should have any power to modify the order before us. The Counsel for the applicant has abandoned his contention that the Joint Judge had no jurisdiction to hold the enquiry. Under that third clause the Court will not interfere, where the trial Court has come to a conclusion to which the revisional Court might have come. Had it been trying the case originally, a Court has every jurisdiction to decide wrongly on the evidence before it. It is only in case where there was some flagrant injustice in the procedure for accumulating evidence, or where the decision was entirely unsupported by evidence, that this Court would be justified in interfering. In the latter case the original Court would not be acting as a judge at all but as a diviner. The Counsel for the applicant says he is unable to urge that the evidence on the record, if believed, is not such on which a Court might conscientiously base an opinion that this applicant was a tout. We do not, therefore, go into the evidence to ascertain whether we on that evidence would have decided in the same way as the Joint Judge has done.

The Counsel for the applicant lays much stress on the refusal of the Joint Judge to summon certain witnesses which the applicant wished to summon there.

It is clear from section 39, Legal Practitioners Act, that the enquiry prescribed is not an enquiry of the nature of a criminal trial and indeed such an enquiry would be by no means fitted for arriving at the truth. The enquiry is far more of the nature of a departmental enquiry and it is enough if it is conducted in such a way that the officer enquiring acts with a substantial justice and gives the person against whom proceedings are being taken an opportunity to show cause.

The complaint of the applicant is that certain witnesses were not summoned. I am of the opinion that there was no obligation on the Joint Judge to summon these particular witnesses, and I do not agree with the ruling of the Punjab Chief Court that the enquiring officer is bound to summon all witnesses called by the person against whom proceedings are being taken.

It is desirable that proceedings of this kind should be disposed of as promptly as possible and as is consistent with justice, and that outsiders should not be exposed to harrasment and vexatious summoning. The enquiring officer, no doubt, is under a serious responsibility in refusing to summon evidence, but in the present case the discretion appears to have been properly exercised. These witnesses were merely to character and to state that the applicant was a clever Munshi and to say that they had never heard that the applicant was a tout. They were all junior Pleaders. Eight witnesses of standing were summoned who might have given precisely the same evidence, but only one was examined. What was the opinion of the Bar in general as to this applicant clearly appeared from other evidence in the papers. I think then that the refusal of the Joint Judge to summon these five witnesses was proper. I, therefore, have no jurisdiction to interfere.

RAYMOND, A. J. C.—The Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879, makes no provision for appeals or applications in revision in respect of an order made under section 36 of that Act. In Madho Ram, In the matter of the petition of (1) it was held that orders under section 36 of Act XVIII of 1879 do not fall within the powers of civil revision conferred by section 622, Civil Procedure Code, and that the High Court could only interfere by virtue of the powers of superintendence conferred upon it by section 15 of the High Courts Act, 24 and 25 Vict., Chap. 104. This decision has been followed in Kedar Nath, In re (2). In Man Singh v. Emperor (3) the Punjab Chief Court held that an order under section 36 of Act XVIII of 1879 cannot be revised either under section 622, Civil Procedure Code, or section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Section 115 of the Code of 1908 under which the present application is made corresponds to section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and hence in view of the above rulings with the reasoning of which I am in concurrence, this application appears to be unentertainable, and must be dismissed.

Even if we had jurisdiction to interfere, I should have declined to do so for reasons given by my learned brother.

Application dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 426—Mischief—Intention to cause wrongful loss, finding as to, necessity of

In order to sustain a conviction under section 426 of the Penal Code, it is essentially necessary to find that the accused had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the complainant, or that he had knowledge that he was likely to cause such loss. A mere finding that wrongful loss was caused is not sufficient [p. 435, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate, Negapatam, in Criminal Appeal No. 32 of 1919, preferred against the order of the 2nd Class Magistrate, Tiruvallur, in Calendar Case No. 14 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. S. Swaminadham, (with him Mr. T. S. Anantharama Iyer), for the Petitioner.—The conviction is bad in law. There was a bona fide dispute between the parties with regard to the ownership of the durg. The Court has not found that the accused acted mala fide. To constitute the offence it is not enough merely to show that wrongful loss was, as a matter of fact, caused to the complainant. It must also be proved that the accused intended to cause the loss or knew that the loss would be caused.

Mr. C. Narasimhachari, for the Public Prosecutor, and Mr. T. Subramanya Ayyar, for the Complainant.—The wrongful loss has been caused and there are circumstances to show that it was not a bona fide dispute between the parties, though there is no express finding.

ORDER.—I think the conviction of the accused for mischief cannot be supported. There is no finding by the lower Court that the accused had any intention to cause any wrongful loss or that he had any knowledge that he was likely to cause such loss. Such a finding is essential for a conviction under section 426, Indian Penal Code. There seems to have been a bona fide dispute as to the ownership of the dung in question, the accused claiming it as his own. In such circumstances it is difficult to hold that the intent or knowledge required is proved, unless the claim is found to be put forward mala fide without any foundation for it—merely as a defence. That does not seem to be the case here. The mere finding that wrongful loss was caused to the complainant by the accused's act is not sufficient to bring it within the scope of section 426, Indian Penal Code.

The conviction and sentence of the accused are set aside and the fine and Court fees, if paid, are directed to be refunded.

Penal Code Act XLV of 1860, s 504- Intentional insult—Offence, what constitutes—Discourtesy and bad manners, whether amount to insult.

In order to constitute an offence under section 504 of the Penal Code, it is necessary that the insult should have been intentionally caused and thereby provocation given with the intention or knowledge that such provocation is likely to cause the person provoked to break the peace or to commit any other offence Mere discourtesy and bad manners do not amount to a criminal offence for which a person can be criminally punished [P 434, col. 1]

Criminal reference submitted by the Sessions Judge, Jhansi, dated the 5th of February 1920.

Mr. G. P. Boys and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for Applicant No. 1.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Rahim Bakhsh and Habib Bakhsh have been convicted under section 504, Indian Penal Code. The former was sentenced to one week's simple imprisonment and the latter to a fine of Rs. 50. They applied in revision to the learned Sessions Judge. He has referred the case to this Court with the recommendation that the conviction of Habib Bakhsh should be set aside and the sentence on Rahim Bakhsh be reduced to a fine of Rs. 300. Rahim Bakhsh has also filed an application for revision in this Court and it is contended on his behalf that the conviction, under section 504, is not justified by law. It appears that Rahim Bakhsh carries on a furniture shop in Jhansi Cantonments. Captain Urquhart, the husband of the complainant, went to him for the hire of the furniture, and some articles were marked on a list which was apparently shown to the accused, Rahim Bakhsh. The following morning a cart was sent to Rahim Bakhsh for the furniture but he sent it back with the intimation, if the statement of Mahboob be true, that he would supply the articles after an hour. When the cart went again to Rahim Bakhsh, he asked the messenger to request his mistress to come and select the furniture. Thereupon Mrs. Urquhart accompanied by Mrs Thomson went to the shop of Rahim Bakhsh. He was at the time seated in a chair with his feet up and did not stand up when the ladies arrived. Mrs. Urquhart in her deposition says that she asked Rahim Bakhsh why he did not send her the furniture. Rahim Bakhsh remained seated in his chair and said, "How can I give you what I have not got?" He was asked to stand up but he did not move and waved the list of the furniture and said. "Why are you offended? I shall not give you any furniture." She says that she got very angry and at the persuasion of Mrs. Thomson left the shop. The facts as proved by the evidence and as found by the Court of first instance are that the man remained seated in his chair when the ladies spoke to him; that he did not get up when he was asked to do so, and that he finally refused to give her any furniture.

Probably his tone was unsatisfactory and it may be that he was regarded as behaving in a rude and insolent manner to Mrs. Urquhart. That could not be sufficient within the meaning of section 504 to constitute intentional insult. Under that section it is necessary that the insult should have been intentionally caused and thereby provocation should be given with the intention or knowledge that such provocation was likely to cause the person provoked to break the public peace or to commit any other offence. It is clear in this case that the accused never intended that the provocation which he might have given to the complainant would lead the complainant to commit a breach of the peace or any other offence, and it cannot be said that he had the knowledge that a lady in the position of the complainant was likely to commit a breach of the peace or any other offence as a result of the provocation he might have caused. His conduct in not getting up from his chair was certainly most discourteous to the lady, but the discourtesy and bad manners did not amount to a criminal offence for which he could be criminally punished. As regards the second accused all he did was to say to the complainant that he would not give her any furniture and that she might get it elsewhere. This certainly did not bring him within the purview of section 504. In my opinion neither of the accused was guilty of the offence punishable under the aforesaid section and neither of them should have been convicted. I set aside the conviction and sentence in the case of both the accused. The fine imposed on the second accused, if paid, should be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

EMPEROR RESPONDENT.

Burma Excise Act (V of 1917), ss. 41 (c), 63 (1) (a)—Offence under s. 41 (c)—Sanction for prosecution by Collector, form of.

A mere order by the Collector sanctioning the prosecution of a person under section 41 (c) of the Burma Excise Act on the report of the District Superintendent of Police is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 63 (1) (a) of the Act The Collector must authorise some particular Excise Officer to make the report or complaint.

Mr A. C. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. M Lutter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Kaung Ki was convicted by the Headquarters Magistrate, Shwebo, of an offence under section 41 (c) of the Excise Act.

Section 63 (1) (a) of the Act expressly provides that no Magistrate shall take cognisance of an offence punishable under section 41 except on the complaint or report of the Collector or of an Excise Officer authorised by him in this behalf.

In the present instance the Collector, on a report from the District Superintendent of Police, sanctioned the prosecution of the applicant but did not pass an order authorising any particular Excise Officer to make a report or complaint

A report was then made to the Magistrate by a Sub Inspector of Police

The provisions of the law must be construed strictly, and in the present instance I must hold that the requirements of section 63 (1) (a) have not been satisfied.

If the Collector did not wish to make a report or complaint himself, it was for him to authorise some particular Excise Officer to make the report or complaint.

A mere order sanctioning the prosecution on the report of the District Superintendent of Police is not sufficient.

For this reason the conviction cannot be maintained and must be set aside.

It is not necessary to go into the facts of the case under the circumstances, but I would point out that there is no evidence that any particular employee of the licensee sold the brandy.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 348 OF 1919.
October 15, 1919.
Present :—Mr. Justice Das.
PIR ALI KASAB AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Security for breach of peace Jurisdiction of Magistrate, essential condition of—"Wrongful act," meaning of—Penal Code Act XLV of 1860., s. 295—Killing of dedicated bull—Offence.

An essential condition of the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to act under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, is that he should have some tangible evidence that some definite wrongful act is contemplated, which act, if committed, is likely to cause a breach of the peace. [p. 439, col.].

The words "wrongful act" in section 107 mean an act forbidden by the Penal Statutes of India, or declared to be penal or wrongful by such Statutes. [p. 439, col.].

The killing of a dedicated bull for the sake of the meat and the value of the skin is not an offence under section 295 of the Penal Code. [p. 439, col.].

Criminal revision against the order of the Officiating District Magistrate of Gaya, dated the 10th September 1919, affirming the order, dated the 5th August 1919, of the Sub Divisional Officer, Jahanabad.

FACTS appear from the order of the Deputy Magistrate, which was as follows:—

"Proceedings in this case have been drawn up on the report of the Inspector of Police, Jahanabad, dated 2nd July 1919. The accused have been called upon to show cause why they should not be bound down to keep the peace, on the ground that they have seriously offended the religious feelings and sentiments of the Hindu public by killing a dedicated bull and are likely to commit similar acts, which are calculated to wound the religious feelings of the Hindu community and to cause serious breach of the public peace and tranquillity.

The facts which have abundantly been proved in the case are these:—On the evening of the 5th June last the accused Nos. 6 and 9 enticed a bull to the house of accused No. 1. The ostensible object was to utilise the bull in covering a cow. A pahar (three hours) after nightfall one or two of the immediate neighbours of Pir Ali heard something which roused their suspicion that the bull had been or was about to be killed. Information was given to the Dafadar who came to the place, and he and others peeped into the Angan of Pir Ali and saw the first eight accused flaying or assisting in the flaying of a bull. They talked among themselves: 'Make haste. They have come to know of it' The Dafadar deputed a Chowkidar to watch in the fields to the south of Pir Ali's house, while he sent another Chowkidar to inform the Arwal Police. Shortly after accused Nos. 1, 2, 7 and 8 were seen hastening towards the south. The Chowkidar who was watching challenged them. Thereupon accused No. 7, who was carrying a basket, threw it down and he and his companions ran away. In the basket were found the head and the hide of the slaughtered bull. Inside the houses of the accused Nos. 1 and 2 were found lumps of meat and marks of blood. The Chowkidar lodged information at the Thana at 1 o'clock on the morning of the 6th June. The bull was a dedicated one and had been dedicated by one Paras Singh. The hide and the head were shown to him and he identified them as having belonged to the bull that had been dedicated by him.

These facts have been proved by the evidence of both Hindus and Muhammadans and cannot be challanged. Well-to do Hindus consider it a meritorious act to dedicate bulls on the occasion of the Sradh of their deceased relations and such bulls are worshipped by the Hindus as Deotas (gods). To kill or even to ill-treat such animals grievously offends their religious feelings. In the present case the evidence shows that as soon as the news of the killing of the bull spread, lots of Hindus began to assume and assumed a threatening attitude, and but for the timely intervention of the Dafadar and the Sub Inspector who came later, there would have been serious riots. To appreciate the gravity of the situation one has only to remember the Bakrid disturbances in Sahabad and Arwal in October 1917.

It may be urged that the accused cannot be bound down for doing something for which they cannot be prosecuted. This contention may or may not be tenable. The accused must, however, be bound down inasmuch as their future conduct is very likely to provoke a disturbance of the public peace. The evidence goes to show that as soon as the accused came to know that they were not going to be criminally prosecuted for killing the bull, they went to the local mosque with musical instruments playing and shouting that they would henceforth kill cows and bulls in open streets and lanes and that the Sala Hindus could do nothing. This fact will convince every one that the accused are not content with killing the bull of Paras Singh, but are determined to kill other bulls and cows, not secretly as they did the bull of Paras Singh, but openly and publicly in utter defiance and disregard of the feelings and sentiments of the Hindus. What the consequence of such acts will cannot be open to doubt. There will surely be a recrudescence of the disturbances of 1917. This must be prevented and the only way to prevent it is to bind the accused down.

All the accused have been proved by evidence to be liable. Accused Nos. 6, 8 and 9 are proved to have enticed the bull to the house of Pir Ali; accused Nos. 1 to 8, both inclusive, are proved to have flayed or assisted in the flaying of the bull; accused Nos. 1, 2, 7 and 8 are proved to have tried to escape with the hide and head of the bull; they are all proved to have uttered the threat that henceforth they would kill bulls and cows in public streets. None of them is, therefore, deserving of being discharged. I must, however, make exception in the case of Yatim Mulahzada. He is a boy of 12 and is not likely to occasion mischief if the others are restrained. I may mention here that accused Nos. 1, 2, and 7 are full brothers, accused No. 8 is the son of accused No. 2 and accused Nos. 3, 4 and 5 are sons of accused No. 1.

For the above reasons I discharge accused No. 9 under section 119, Criminal Procedure Code I am satisfied that it is extremely necessary in order to maintain public peace that the accused Nos. 1 to 8, both inclusive, should be bound down and I accordingly under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, order that they each execute a bond of Rs. 200 with two sesurities of Rs. 200 each to keep the peace for one year and that in default of furnishing such security they undergo simple imprisonment for one year each."

Messrs. Akbari and Khurshed Husain, for the Petitioners.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Jahanabad directing the petitioners under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, to each execute a bond of Rs. 200 with two sureties to keep the peace for one year. Proceedings were taken under the provisions of section 107, Criminal Procedure Code.

It appears that the petitioners enticed a dedicated bull to the house of one of them and slaughtered it secretly and at night for the sake of the meat and the value of the skin. Some of the neighbours discovered the purpose of the petitioners and the Police took up the matter. A case under section 295 and section 429 was started against the petitioners, but they were ultimately discharged on the 7th July last. Meanwhile the Police recommended initiation of proceedings under section 107 of the Code, and the petitioners, having been discharged on the 7th July, were arrested on the morning of 8th July.

The Police report, upon which proceedings were initiated stated that the action of the Muhammadan butchers had created a sensation among the Hindus of the locality and wounded their feelings, and, as it was expected that the petitioners as butchers would not give up their habit but would commit such mischief at any moment which might disturb public tranquillity, they ought to be bound down under section 107 of the Code. Upon this report the learned Magistrate, acting under section 112 of the Code, called upon the petitioners to show cause why they should not be bound down to keep the peace on the grounds that they have seriously offended the religious feelings and the sentiments of the Hindu public by killing a dedicated bull and are likely to commit similar acts, which are calculated to wound the religious feelings of the Hindu community and to cause serious breaches of the public peace and tranquillity.

The first question that arises for my consideration is, what was the justification of the learned Magistrate to take proceedings under section 107 of the Code? The learned Assistant Government Advocate suggests that the Magistrate was informed that the petitioners were likely to do a wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. It is, in my view, an essential condition of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to act under section 107 of the Code that he should have some tangible evidence that some definite wrongful act is contemplated which act, if committed, is likely to cause a breach of the peace. Now, is there a suggestion, either in the Police report or in the notice issued by the learned Magistrate, that a definite wrongful act was contemplated by the petitioners? In my judgment, there is none. In the case of Romesh Chunder Sanyal v. Hiru Mondal (1) it was ruled that where a dedicated bull was killed by certain Muhammadans for the sake of the meat and the value of the skin, there was no offence under section 295, Indian Penal Code. The Allahabad High Court went elaborately into the question in the case of Shahbaz Khan v Umrao Puri (2). The learned Judges expressed their opinion as follows: 'In view of these authorities it appears to us indisputable that under certain limitations the slaughtering of kine by Muhammadans is not illegal. It is the legal right of every person to make such use of his own property as he may think fit, provided that in doing so he does not cause real injury to others or offend against the law, even though he may thereby hurt the susceptibilities of others."

(1) 17 C. 852; 5 Ind. Dec. N. S. 1112.

(2) 30 A. 181; A. W. N. (1905) 64; 5 A. L. J. 147; 7 Cr. L. J. 881.

The Assistant Government Advocate has contended that a wrongful act does not necessarily mean an act forbidden by the Penal Statutes. According to him it means an act not correct or justifiable in fact or morals, in other words, an improper act. I cannot assent to this argument. Once we concede this proposition, there would be no end to the difficulties of our Criminal Courts, difficulties in having to distinguish between right and wrong from the moral standpoint. An act which may seem wrongful not to one individual, to one sect, to one community, may be a highly meritorious act in the estimation of another individual, another sect, another community. Who is to set this standard of right and wrong for our Criminal Courts? If the words "wrongful act" are interpreted as suggested by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, the consequence would be that they would stand absolutely without limit of any kind. In my view, words which are clearly wide in their meaning must be qualified in some way and ought to receive some limitation. That limitation, in my judgment, is to be found in the Penal Statutes of India. The case relied upon by the Assistant Government Advocate, the case of Emperor v. Murli Singh (3), does not help him at all. In that case it was held that persons who performed religious ceremonies in a place not set apart for the purpose and where no such ceremonies had been performed before, and who did so with the deliberate intention of triumphing over, insulting and wounding the religious feelings of their neighbours, committed a wrongful act within the meaning of section 107 of the Code. Clearly such acts are forbidden by the Indian Penal Code. I hold that the words "wrongful act" in section 107 of the Code mean an act forbidden by the Penal Statutes of India or declared to be penal or wrongful by such Statutes.

If I am right in the view which I take of the section, then clearly there was no jurisdiction in the Magistrate to act under section 107 of the Code. To adopt the words of Richards and Tudball, JJ., in the case of Mohammad Yakub v Emperor (4), 'To justify an order under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate must believe that the person against whom he makes the order is about to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity or to do some wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace. In our judgment there was no reason to believe that any of the applicants were about to do any of these things." This was a case where cows were sacrificed quietly and secretly in a mosque and a private house, and the Allahabad High Court set aside the order under section 107 against the petitioners.

I hold that the proceedings against the petitioners were not warranted by law and that consequently the order must be set aside.

I ought to mention that some arguments were advanced by the learned Assistant Government Advocate on the evidence adduced in the case, namely, that the petitioners went to the local mosque with musical instruments playing and shouting that they would henceforth kill cows and bulls in open streets and lanes so that the Hindus could do nothing. I have grave doubts whether this evidence was admissible, inasmuch as the Magistrate clearly did not act on any information of this definite contemplated act on the part of the petitioners. It was argued, however, that this was evidence of conduct in support of the allegations on which proceedings were initiated. I am of opinion that if there was anything in the allegations themselves on which proceedings could be initiated, evidence of subsequent conduct would be admissible in support of those allegations. But if on those allegations the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to act, evidence of subsequent conduct is not admissible in order to confer a jurisdiction when there was none originally. I have come to the conclusion that, in this case, the Magistrate had no tangible evidence that some definite wrongful act was contemplated which act, if commited, might cause a breach of the peace. That being so, he had no jurisdiction to act under section 107 of the Code at all.

I allow this application, set aside the order complained against and direct that the bail bonds be discharged.

Application allowed.

The Martial Law (Further Extension) Ordinance, 1919 (Ordinance No. IV of 1919) is not confined in its application to persons taken in the act of committing one of the offences specified in Regulation X of 1804, or to the persons and offences described in Martial Law Ordinance I of 1919, but extends to all offences committed on or after March 30th, 1919. Section 65, sub-section (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, does not prevent the Indian Government from passing a law which may modify or affect a rule of the constitution or of the common law upon the observance of which some person may conceive or allege that his allegiance depends: it refers only to laws which directly affect the allegiance of the subject, as by a transfer or qualification of the allegiance or a modification of the obligation thereby imposed. [p. 456 col. .]

Observations of Phear, J., in Ameer Khan, In the matter of, 6 B. L. R. 391 and 459 at p. 477, approved

It was argued that Ordinance IV of 1919 contravenes section 65 (3) of the Government of India Act, 1915, which prevents the Indian Government from empowering any Court other than a High Court to sentence to death any of His Majesty's subjects born in Europe, the Ordinance containing no exception in favour of such subjects:

Held, that the Ordinance may properly be described as repugnant to the Act so far as British-born subjects are concerned, but that it is void only to the extent of that repugnancy, i. e., in the case of His Majesty's subjects born in Europe. [p. 446, col.).]

Appeal by special leave from a judgment of a Commission appointed under the Martial Law Ordinances of 1919 and sitting at Lahore.

FACTS.—All material facts of the case are set out in their Lordships' judgment, which reproduces the Ordinance under consideration. The sole question on this appeal was as to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, i.e., whether it was competent to try the appellants for the offences of which they were convicted.

Sir John Simon, K. C. (with him Sir R. Auckland, K. C., Messrs. Dube and Palat and, for the Appellants.—The Commission had no power to try appellants. None of them were taken in the act, or till after April 12, 1919. There may have been a very proper case for investigation, but Ordinance IV of 1919 did not apply. Ordinance I of 1919 was passed with retrospective effect under date April 14, 1919. An order of the Governor-General in Council of the 13th April, proclaiming Martial Law, had suspended the functions of the ordinary Criminal Courts in the cases of persons taken in the act of committing the offences enumerated in the Bengal State Offences Regulation 1804, which had been extended to the Punjab by Act IV of 1872: it provided that such persons were to be tried by Courts-Martial. Next day Ordinance I of 1919 was passed. The present accused were not persons covered by that Ordinance, nor do the offences charged against them fall within it. But after they had been arrested Ordinance IV of 1919 was enacted, and the question is what is meant by the words "any offence" in that Ordinance. There are two views possible. The narrower, and as we submit the correct construction, is that the Ordinance merely puts back the date of Ordinance I from April 13 to March 30. The virtue of this construction is that the Ordinance would be valid.

(SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS referred to the preamble, "offences other than those specified.")

The wider construction is that (subject of course to general or special orders of the Local Government) the Commission may try any person for any offence: as was put by a member of the Board when leave to appeal was granted, they might try a small boy for stealing apples If this be the true construction, we submit that the Ordinance is completely ultra vires: that it is an invalid piece of subordinate legislation. The legislative powers of the Government of India are derived from section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and are subject to the limitations imposed by that section. Subordinate legislation is bad in toto if by its terms it exceeds its authority. Comyns, in his Digest under "By law," says (Chapter 7), "a By law, void in part, is void for the whole:" also, that "a By-law, being intire, if it be unreasonable in any particulars, shall be void for the whole." The test is whether the legislation as a whole is good, subject to this, that if there is a separable part which is good, it may stand.

Rex v. Company of Fishermen of Faversham (1).

Here the Legislature have purported, contrary to section 65 (3) of the Government of India Act, 1915, to empower a new Court to sentence people to death.

[LORD MOULTON: Does not that exception refer only to European British subjects?]

The provisions as to the validity of Indian laws are contained in section 84: this section 2 of the later Act adds some words at the end of section 84. I submit they do not apply, This is a question of legislative power: you have two conflicting powers: I submit the Ordinance is not repugnant to the Act, but simply waste paper, invalid. Section 52 of the Act of 1916 has no greater force than the corresponding provisions of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865 (sections 2, 3): it was enacted only because the Colonial Laws Act did not apply to India.

Further the whole Ordinance was invalid because it conflicted with section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915. The Governor General of India in Council was not competent to alter the constitution at law on which the allegiance of the subject depends. It was difficult to conceive of anything more fundamental than that the person charged with an offence should have the opportunity of being tried by the ordinary course of law:

the principle was recognised as far back as Magna Charta. This was not the case of people taken in open rebellion and tried during such rebellion; they were arrested as well as tried when the state of rebellion was over and the ordinary Courts of law were sitting and the Governor General in Council was not competent to deprive them of their constitutional right to be tried by those Courts.

Sir R. Auckland followed.

The Attorney General (with him the Solicitor General, Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown), for the Respondent:—The Commission had power to try the accused for the offences with which they were charged. Ordinance IV of 1919 enacted that such a Commission should have jurisdiction to try any person for any offence committed after March 30, 1919: there was nothing in it to limit it to the classes of offences which fall under the earlier Ordinance. The preamble, with the words "offences other than those specified," is inconsistent with any such limitation. Ordinance IV of 1919 may be void in the case of European British subjects, but that does not make it void in the case of others with regard to whom there is no repugnancy: this is the very case which section 2 of the Amending Act was designed to meet. The Commission were acting within their jurisdiction and there was ample evidence to support their findings.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal by special leave from the judgment, dated the 2nd June 1919, of a Commission appointed under the Martial Law Ordinances of 1919 and sitting at Lahore. By that judgment twenty of the twenty-one appellants were convicted of offences under section 121 of the Indian Penal Code, that is to say, of waging or attempting to wage war against the King or abetting the waging of such war, and were sentenced to death and forfeiture of property; but it is understood that as to some of them the death sentence has since been commuted. The remaining appellant, Ghulam Hassan, son of Makham, was convicted of an offence under section 412 of the same Code, that is to say, of receiving stolen property from dacoits, and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years. The question raised on the appeal is as to the competency of the Commission to try the appellants for those offences.

The facts may be stated as follows: At the end of March and during the first days of April 1919 there was serious unrest in certain parts of the province of the Punjab and this unrest culminated on the 10th April in the outbreak of open rebellion at Amritsar in that province and elsewhere, and the offences of which the appellants have been found guilty were committed at Amritsar on that date. The occurrences of the 10th April are stated in the judgment of the Commissioners as follows:—

"On April 10th, 1919, about noon, after the arrest of Kitchlew and Satyapal, disorder broke out in Amritsar, in the course of which an attempt was made to invade the Civil Station by a mob which had to be turned back by fire from troops and police. Shortly after this a mob attacked the National Bank situated in the City, brutally murdered Mr. Stewart, manager, and Mr. Scott, assistant manager, sacked and burnt the bank, and looted the godown, which contained cloth and other goods to the value of several lakhs of rupees. The Chartered and Alliance Banks were subsequently sacked. A Mission Hall, Church and the Religious Books Society's Depot were also attacked and burnt by the mob. There was no reason why these institutions should have been singled out by the mob or their leaders except that, as the evidence shows, they were out to destroy the visible manifestations of British connection with the country."

It was proved that the appellants, with the possible exception of Ghulam Hassan, were members of the mob and took an active part in the attack on the National Bank, and there was evidence that some of them took part in the actual murder of the manager and assistant manager. Bugga and Ratan Chand appear to have been the ringleaders. Ghulam Hassan was found in possession of property looted from the Bank. Bugga was arrested on the 12th April and the other appellants on subsequent dates. None of them were taken in arms or in the act of committing the offences with which they were charged.

On the 13th April the Governor-General in Council, acting under the Bengal State Offences Regulation X of 1804 (which was extended to the Punjab by the Punjab Laws Act, 1872), made an order whereby, after reciting that he was satisfied that a state of open rebellion against the authority of the Government existed in the districts of Lahore and Amritsar, he suspended the functions of the ordinary Criminal Courts within those districts as regards the trial of persons of the classes referred to in the Regulation taken in arms in open hostility to the British Government or in the act of opposing by force of arms the authority of the same, or in the actual commission of any overt act of rebellion against the State, or in the act of openly aiding and abetting the enemies of the British Government within those districts, and established Martial Law within those districts; and by the same order he directed the immediate trial by Courts Martial of all such persons. Similar orders were subsequently made in respect of the districts of Gujranwala and Gujrat.

On the 14th April the Governor-General, acting under section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915, made and promulgated the Martial Law Ordinance No. I of 1919 whereby it was provided that every trial in the districts of Lahore and Amritsar held under the Bengal State Offences Regulation, 1804, should, instead of being held by a Court-Martial, be held by a Commission consisting of three persons appointed in this behalf by the Local Government. It was provided that at least two members of every such Commission should be persons who had served as Sessions Judges or had such others legal qualification as therein mentioned. It was also provided that a Commission should have the powers of a general Court-Martial under the Indian Army Act, 1911, and should follow so far as might be the procedure prescribed by that Act, but power was reserved to the Local Government to direct that the Commission should follow the procedure of a summary general Court Martial. The finding and sentence of a Commission not to be subject to confirmation by the military authorities. Section 7 of the Ordinance was as follows:—

"7. Save as provided by section 6, the provisions of this Ordinance shall apply to all persons referred to in the said Regulation who are charged with any of the offences therein described, committed on or after the 13th April 1919."

By subsequent Ordinances the provisions of the above mentioned Ordinance No. I of 1919 were extended to Gujranwala and Gujrat, and power was given to impose a minor punishment in lieu of the death sentence.

In pursuance of the above mentioned Ordinance No. I of 1919, the Local Government of the Punjab duly appointed a Commission, consisting of Lieutenant Colonel A. A. Irvine, C. I. E., District and Sessions Judge; F. W. Kennaway, Esq., I. C. S., District and Sessions Judge; and I. C. Lall, Esq.

From the above statement it is clear that the appellants could not, if no further step had been taken, have been brought before the Commission for trial. They had not been taken in the act of committing any of the offences referred to in Regulation X of 1804, and the offences with which they were charged were committed before the 13th April 1919, the date mentioned in section 7 of the Ordinance. But on the 21st April, 1919, the Governor General, acting under section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915, made a further Ordinance (referred to as Ordinance No. IV of 1919) in the following terms:

"GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

"LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

"NOTIFICATION.

"Simla, the 21st April, 1919.

"An Ordinance further to extend the application of the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919.

"WHEREAS an emergency has arisen which renders it necessary to provide that Commissions appointed under the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, shall have power to try persons and offences other than those specified in the said Ordinance:

"Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915, the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

"Ordinance No. IV of 1919.

"Short Title.

"1. This Ordinance may be called the Martial Law (Further Extension) Ordinance, 1919.

"Commissions under Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, to try such cases as the Local Government may direct.

"2. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, the Local Government may, by general or special order, direct that any Commission appointed under the said Ordinance shall try any person charged with any offence committed on or after the 30th March, 1919, and thereupon the provisions of the said Ordinance shall apply to such trials accordingly, and a commission may pass in respect of any such offence any sentence authorised by law.

"CHELMSFORD,

"Viceroy and Governor-General.

"H. M. SMITH,

"Offg. Secretary to the Government of India"

On the 22nd April the Governor-General in Council made a further order under Regulation X of 1804, whereby after reciting that he was satisfied that a state of open rebellion existed in the districts of Lahore, Amritsar, Gujranwala and Gujrat, he suspended the functions of the ordinary Criminal Courts in those districts in so far as trials held before Commissions in accordance with the provisions of Martial Law Ordinance No. IV of 1919 were concerned.

The Local Government of the Punjab was instructed by the Government of India that the Commissions appointed under Ordinance No. IV were to be used only for the trial of offences arising out of the recent disturbances.

The appellants having been charged with offences under various sections of the Penal Code, including sections 121, 302 and 412, as having been committed on the 10th April, the Local Government, acting under Ordinance No. IV of 1919, directed that they should be tried by the Court of Commissioners appointed under Ordinance No. I sitting at Lahore with the powers of a summary general Court-Martial, and convened the Commissioners for that purpose. The trial accordingly took place on the 29th May and the following days, and judgment was pronounced on the 2nd June. The Commissioners, while convicting the appellants (other than Ghulam Hassan) of an offence under section 121, added that certain of the accused could also be convicted under section 302, i. e., for murder, but that they saw no necessity to discriminate, especially as in circumstances like those before them there was only one possible penalty for the offence or offences committed. Thereupon special leave was obtained from the Board to present this appeal.

Before the hearing of the appeal it was suggested by Counsel for the appellants that Ordinance No. IV of 1919 was capable of being construed as intended only to extend the operation of Ordinance No. 1 to offences committed before the 13th April, but not earlier than the 30th March, and accordingly that this Ordinance (like Ordinance No. 1) applied only to persons taken in the act of committing one of the offences specified in Regulation X of 1804. In their Lordships' opinion the Ordinance cannot be so construed. It is introduced by a recital that an emergency has arisen which renders it necessary to provide that Commissions appointed under the earlier Ordinance shall have power to try persons and offences other than those specified in that Ordinance, and it empowers a Commission to try any person charged with any offence committed after the specified date, and to pass in respect of such offence any sentence authorised by law. It would be difficult to find words indicating more clearly that the operation of the Ordinance is not to be confined to the persons and offences described in the earlier Ordinance.

It was then argued that, if Ordinance No. IV applied (subject to the direction of the Local Government) to any persons and to any offence known to the law, it was invalid by reason of the provisions of section 65, sub sections (2) and (3) of the Government of India Act, 1915; and this contention, upon which the argument for the appellants mainly rested, must now be examined.

Section 65, sub section (2), when read with section 72, prevents the Governor General from making—

"any law affecting the authority of Parliament, or any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom, or affecting the sovereignty or dominion of the Crown over any part of British India."

It was contended that the Ordinance under consideration, by depriving British subjects in India of the right to be tried in the ordinary course by the established Courts of Law, affected the unwritten laws or constitution whereon the allegiance of His Majesty's subjects in India depends, and was accordingly invalidated by the sub-section last referred to; and reference was made to Calvin's case (2) and to the maxim "protectio trahit sub ectionem, et subjectio protectionem." It is not easy to understand how the substitution for the ordinary Indian Courts—which are themselves of statutory origin—of another tribunal of a judicial character, can be said to affect in any way the unwritten laws or constitution of the country; but, apart from this observation, the argument appears to rest upon a misconception as to the meaning and effect of the sub section. The sub-section does not prevent the Indian Government from passing a law which may modify or affect a rule of the constitution or of the common law upon the observance of which some person may conceive or allege that his allegiance depends. It refers only to laws which directly affect the allegiance of the subject to the Crown, as by a transfer or qualification of the allegiance or a modification of the obligations thereby imposed. In the case of Ameer Khan, In the matter of (3), the meaning of a similar provision in the Act of 1833 (3 and 4 Wm. IV, c. 85, section 43) was discussed at length, and Mr. Justice Phear stated his opinion as follows:—

"But I think it right to say that in my judgment the words, 'whereon may depend, etc.,' do not refer to any assumed conditions precedent to be performed by or on behalf of the Crown as necessary to found the allegiance of the subject, but to laws or principles which prescribe the nature of the allegiance, viz, of the relations between the Crown on the one hand and the inhabitants of particular provinces, or particular classes of the community, on the other; and obviously such laws and principles as these are not touched by the local Acts which are impeached before us."

Since that judgment was pronounced the provision so interpreted has been re-enacted substantially in the same terms in the Acts of 1861 and 1915; and many Statutes and Ordinances have been passed in India which were similar in effect to the regulation then under consideration If their Lordships were to adopt the argument now pressed upon them, they would be casting doubt upon a long course of legislation and judicial decision which must be presumed to have been known to and in the view of the Imperial Parliament when the Act of 1915 was passed. [See Queen v. Burah (4).] Reference may also be made to the recent case of Annie Besant v. Advocate General of Madras (5), where a like argument was rejected by the Board. This argument, therefore, cannot prevail.

Turning now to section 65, sub section (3), of the Act of 1915, that sub section is as follows:—

"The Governor General in Legislative Council has no power, without the previous approval of the Secretary of State in Council, to make any law empowering any Court, other than a High Court, to sentence to the punishment of death any of His Majesty's subjects born in Europe, or the children of such subjects, or abolishing any High Court."

Upon this enactment it was argued that Ordinance No. IV, if it subjects any person whatever to be tried for his life by a Commission in lieu of the ordinary Courts of Law or Courts-Martial, is an infringement of the provision which prevents the Governor-General in Council from empowering any Court other than a High Court to sentence to death any of His Majesty's subjects born in Europe, and accordingly that the Ordinance is void not only as to persons falling within sub-section (3) but altogether. The answer to this contention is to be found in section 2 of the Government of India (Amendment) Act, 1916, which provides that there shall be inserted at the end of section 84 of the Act of 1915 the following words:—

(2) (1608) 7 Co. Rep. 5.

(3) 6 B. L. R. 392 and 459 at p. 477.

(4) (1878) 3 A. C. 889 at p. 907.

(5) 52 Ind Cas 209; 45 I A 178; 37 M. L. J. 199; 20 Cr L. J. 593; 17 A. L J. 925; 23 C. W. N 986; 21 Bom L. R. 867; (1919) M. W. N. 555; 10 L. W 45; 26 M. L. T. 408; 1 U. P L R. (P. C.) 74; (1919) 35 T. L. R. 500; 20 Cr. L. J. 593; 43 M. 148 (P. C.).

'A law made by any authority in British India and repugnant to any provision of this or any other Act of Parliament shall, to the extent of that repugnancy, but not otherwise, be void."

It appears to their Lordships that if the Ordinance in question in this case contravenes section 65 (3) of the Act of 1915, it may properly be described as "repugnant" to that section so far as British born subjects are concerned, and if so it is void to the extent of that repugnancy, but not otherwise. This argument, therefore, also fails.

For the above reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal fails and should be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 253 OF 1919.

July 18, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Bevan Petman.

GOKAL CHAND AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133, scope of—Lawful trade, whether can be prohibited—Manner of carrying on trade, whether can be restricted—Order proceeding on grounds not covered by notice, legality of.

Section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code relates to an existing state of affairs and not to the possibility of future results [p. 447, col. 2]

Clause (3) of section 133 deals only with occupations or trades which are in themselves injurious to health or physical comfort and has nothing to do with trades which in themselves are innocuous, but in the course of which the manager, or plier, of them commits a public nuisance [p. 447, col. 2.]

The provisions of Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code should be worked so as not to become themselves a nuisance to the community at large, and although every man is bound so to use his own property that it may not work legal damage or harm to his neighbour, yet no one has a right to intertere with a free and full enjoyment by another of his property except on clear and absolute proof that such use is producing such legal damage or harm and, therefore, a lawful and necessary trade such as the manufacture of bricks should not be interfered with unless it is proved that it is injurious to the health, or physical comfort, of the community. [p. 447, col. 2.]

An order under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code which proceeds on grounds not covered by the notice issued to the accused is illegal. [p. 447, col. 2]

Revision from the order of the Honorary Magistrate, 1st Class, Naushera Nargli, District Amritsar, dated the 4th February 1919.

Bakshi Tek Chand and Mr. Har Gopal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Mul Chand, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected Criminal Revision No. 337 of 1919 can be dealt with together. On the complaint of the Principal of the Khalsa College situate in the suburbs of Amritsar, a notice was issued by a Magistrate under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, to the petitioners in the following terms:—"Whereas the letter received from the Principal of the Khalsa College and the correspondence of the District Magistrate show that you have dug out pits around the Khalsa College for the preparation of bricks, that this is likely to be injurious to the health of the residents of the Khalsa College, and that it is apprehended that the stagnation of foul water in the pits will affect their health, you are directed to appear in the Court and show cause why proceedings under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be taken against you, because the above act of yours is a public nuisance to the residents of the Khalsa College."

In reply to this notice the petitioners put in the following written statement: "The land belongs to Zamindars who sold only the earth to us on payment of the price thereof. It is not our duty to fill in the pits."

This was apparently regarded as a complete reply to the notice with regard to the existing pits, and consequently another notice was issued in the following terms:—"You have dug pits by excavating land around the Khalsa College. The water stagnates in them and causes a bad smell. This is a nuisance to the residents of the Khalsa College. In future you should not dig pits around the Khalsa College. If you do not refrain from doing so you will be dealt with according to law." The defence of the petitioners to this second notice was the same as that raised to the first.

In spite of the very limited terms of the notice, which relates to the smell caused by stagnating water and similar results if further pits are dug, I find that the proceedings were continued on totally different lines. Only one witness was produced on behalf of the complainant, and his evidence relates to the likelihood of the health of the residents of the Khalsa College suffering from smoke from the kilns and to malaria due to the breeding of mosquitoes in stagnant water in pits within half a mile of the College It will be seen that this evidence is not relevant to the notice issued to the petitioners. The petitioners, however, raised no objection and proceeded to meet the new case in so far as the stagnant pools were concerned.

The Magistrate, disregarding the only issue raised by his notice and the evidence for the complainant, which was limited to half a mile, and the evidence of the petitioners, held that the pits excavated by the petitioners in the course of making bricks are filled with water in the rainy season and become a centre of malaria and other fevers, and that the working of the kilns gives out clouds of smoke which are very injurious to the health and life of the students and other residents of the Khalsa College, and directed the petitioners not to excavate in future any fresh or new pits within a radius of a mile of the College.

Whatever sympathy every one has with the Principal of an important College in his laudable efforts to do everything possible in the interests of the students of that College, the law must be observed and the rights of others must be regarded and safeguarded. It was under these circumstances that I gave two opportunities for the matter to be amicably settled, especially in view of the offer of the petitioners to so conduct their business as to leave no pits and to arrange that no water should accumulate and stagnate. These offers have been rejected and I am informed that the Principal desires a judicial decision.

The order of the Magistrate cannot be maintained. It is erroneous for many reasons. Not only does the order proceed on grounds not covered by the notice issued and, therefore, fatal to its validity, but there is obviously no justification for the order directing no pits to be dug within a radius of a mile when, according to the evidence of the witness for the complainant and of Colonel Smith, Civil Surgeon of Amritsar, a witness for the petitioners, a radius of half a mile was sufficient to obviate any danger from mosquitoes. The Magistrate justifies the radius of a mile on a certificate given by the Civil Surgeon, wherein he states that he would like to see the brick kilns a mile away, but the certificate relates to smoke from a certain kiln, and therein it is stated that smoke half a mile away could not be injurious to health. The Civil Surgeon was examined as a witness and was not questioned with regard to his certificate. The certificate itself was not under the circumstances evidence in the case. It could only have been used to corroborate or contradict the witness, and in the latter case only when his attention was drawn to it. This was not done. In fact, he was not cross examined at all.

There is no evidence on the record that as a matter of fact the residents of the College have suffered from malaria fever, still less that the cause was due to the pits made by the petitioners. On the other hand, there is ample evidence that there are a number of pits belonging to the College itself and to others far closer to the College buildings, including the boarding houses, in which water accumulates and which have not been filled up. There is also a pond in the College grounds into which all the water used to wash clothes flows and accumulates. It is somewhat extraordinary in view of the complaints made that the pits in the premises of the College have not been filled up. more especially as a witness for the petitioners, who was not even cross examined and whose evidence stands uncontradicted and unchallenged, states that malaria bearing mosquitoes cannot be bred in exposed pits where there is no vegetation and no shade as in the case of the pits of the petitioners, whilst they are likely to be produced in the College pits which have vegetation and shade. This opinion the witness fortifies by a report of Major Gill, an expert in malaria.

It is, therefore, clear that on the present record it has not been proved that the water in the pits dug by the petitioners has caused, or can cause, malaria, or any injury to health.

The notice on which action was taken did not relate to existing pits, and the order now sought to be revised forbids the digging of pits in the future. It is obvious, however, that the mere digging of pits cannot, ordinarily, be injurious to health. The objection apparently is to the collection and stagnation of water. It is conceivable that earth can be dug for the manufacture of bricks and the collection of stagnant water avoided by various means, and, therefore, the order if justified by the evidence, which in my opinion it is not, should have been directed against the stagnant water and not the digging of pits. Consequently the offer of the petitioners in this Court would have apparently met all objections, however unproved or unfounded, and it would have been for them to carry out any agreement come to. This offer the Principal has not seen fit to accept

The notice to the petitioners did not state that their trade or occupation of manufacturing bricks was injurious to health so as to bring the case within the terms of section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, nor has this been alleged. At most it could be contended, on the present record, that their mode of carrying out their trade, or occupation, may be in some respects objectionable. This, however, is not sufficient to bring the case within section 133. As pointed out in Moti Shah v. Crown (1), "the Magistrate could not, we think, interfere under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, to suppress a lawful and unobjectionable trade, merely upon the ground that it was being so worked as to be injurious to the health of the neighbourhood." In the present case there is no evidence that the manufacture of bricks is itself injurious to health or that the petitioners were so working that the health of anyone was being injured.

In Mrs. Foreiro v. Empress (2) it was held that section 133 (3) deals only with occupations or trades which are in themselves injurious to health or physical comfort and has nothing to do with trades which in themselves are innocuous but in the course of which the manager, or plier, of them commits a public nuisance. In Shadi v. Empress (3) it was held that the provisions of Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code should be worked so as not to become themselves a nuisance to the community at large, and that although every man is bound so to use his own property that it may not work legal damage or harm to his neighbour, yet no one has a right to interfere with a free and full enjoyment by another of his property except on clear and absolute proof that such use is producing such legal damage or harm and, therefore, a lawful and necessary trade such as tanning should not be interfered with unless it is proved that it is injurious to the health, or physical comfort, of the community. There is no such proof in the present case.

It is also clear that section 133 relates to an existing state of affairs and not to the possibility of future results.

The powers given under section 133 are of an exceptional nature. The rights involved in the present case are important, and the case was essentially one in which, if the residents of the College considered themselves aggrieved, they should have taken action in the Civil Courts to abate the alleged nuisance, and this can still be done. The fact that the College was built many years ago in its present position in order to have open country all round and plenty of fresh and pure air is beside the point and no ground for ignoring the legal right of others. It was open to the College authorities to acquire the surrounding country or make agreements, for a consideration, restricting its use. Brick-kilns have existed in the locality for very many years.

For the reasons stated above I accept the revision and set aside the orders of the Magistrate.

Revision accepted.

The appellant having applied, pending the disposal of the appeal, for stay of the sentence passed by the lower Court, their Lordships made the following

ORDER.

HEATON, J.—We are dealing with an interlocutory matter that arises out of an appeal filed under clause 2 of section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907. The appellant was sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment. He has appealed.

There is no doubt that the appeal lies and not unnaturally he wants the sentence of imprisonment suspended until the appeal is disposed of. Otherwise he stands a very good chance of serving out the entire term of imprisonment before the appeal is heard. It has, however, been objected—and this is the only point that seems to me really to need attention—that we have no power to suspend the imprisonment or release a person on bail. That argument, however, I think, is mistaken. Clause 2 of section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act tells us that in dealing with this appeal we are to follow the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. At least that is the effect of what that clause says. Now under the Civil Procedure Code we have power to stay proceedings under an order appealed from. That, I think, is quite plain from rule 5 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, and all we are asked to do is to stay proceedings under the order appealed from. We do this by making an order which will secure the release of the appellant from jail on such terms as may be provided. We leave the terms to be settled by the District Judge, who will direct what security should be taken from sureties to secure the surrender of the appellant, should he hereafter be called upon to surrender.

The District Judge will make out an order to the jailor directing the release of the appellant when security to his satisfaction has been furnished.

Costs of this matter will be costs in the appeal.

PRATT, J.—I concur. In regard to the argument that Order XLI, rule 5, does not apply because there is no decree to be executed, it seems to me that the provisions in that rule which provide for stay of proceedings under an order are applicable. For instance an order of arrest before judgment under Order XXXVIII, rule 4, would be appealable under section 104 (h) of the Civil Procedure Code and it could not be contended that the Court of Appeal in such a case would not have the power to stay further proceedings either by suspension of the sentence or directing the release of the appellant on his giving the bail. That this provision of the Civil Procedure Code would be applicable was apparently the view expressed by Bayley, Acting C. J., in Hormarji Ardesir Hormarji, In the matter of (1).

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, suit under—Plaintiff not having interest—Joinder of other plaintiffs with requisite interest—Suit, whether maintainable.

A suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code was instituted by a person who was found to have no interest such as that required by the section. Two other persons who had the requisite interest obtained the sanction of the Collector and were added as plaintiffs. It was objected that the suit as laid was not maintainable:

Held, that the suit had been properly instituted and was maintainable.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 61 of 1917 (Original Suit No. 47 of 1917 of the District Court).

Mr. K. N. Kumaraswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar and P. R. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One of the plaintiffs in this suit, which was instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, was found to have no interest such as that required by this section. Thereupon two other men who had the requisite interest applied to the Collector and obtained sanction to institute this very suit. They were then added as third and fourth plaintiffs. Objection was, however, taken by the defendants to the effect that the suit was bad as laid and must be dismissed and that the requirements of section 92 were not satisfied by adding the 3rd and 4th plaintiffs in the same suit. The learned Subordinate Judge heard the objection, discussed it and came to the conclusion that the suit was not properly instituted and dismissed it. There is a ruling of this Court in Ramayyangar v. Krishnayyangar (1), which could cover the present case, but, it was argued that in the old Code no such clause as that in the sub paragraph 2 of section 92 occurred in section 539 and that the latter paragraph makes a difference. We find, however, that the ruling in Ramayyangar v. Krishnayyangar (1) has been followed in some very recent cases of this Court decided under the new Code. One of them is a decision of Oldfield and Bakewell, JJ., in Appeals Nos. 310 and 373 of 1918 and the other is the judgment of Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., in Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 892 and 893 of 1919 [Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi v. Advocate-General of Madras (2)]. On the other hand there is a ruling of the Bombay High Court in Darves Haji Mahamad v. Jainudin (3) contrary to the view taken in these cases. And the Allahabad High Court seems to have taken the same view of the law as the Bombay High Court. But the matter being purely one of procedure, we think, we ought to follow the rulings of this Court. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the case will be remanded to him for disposal on the merits, the memorandum of objections being allowed.

Costs of the memorandum of objections will abide the result. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Provident Funds Act (IX of 1897), s. 4—Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16, 43—Provident fund, whether "property"—Provident fund received and paid over by insolvent—Fraudulent transfer.

NAGINDAS v. GHELABHAI.

By virtue of section 4 of the Provident Funds Act, neither the Receiver nor the creditors of an insolvent have any right to money drawn by the insolvent from his compulsory deposit in a Railway Provident Fund. There can, therefore, be no fraudulent dealing in respect of such money such as is made punishable by section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 452, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Surat, in Miscellaneous Insolvency Application No. 14 of 1915.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, J.—The appellant in this case appeals against an order of the District Judge of Surat sentencing him to three months' simple imprisonment under section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907).

The facts are shortly as follows: The appellant Nagindas was in the employ of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. On November 3rd, 1909, he was adjudged an insolvent under section 16 of the Act, and a Receiver was appointed. In January 1918, he resigned this appointment with the Railway Company and drew from them a sum of Rs. 2,000 odd which stood to his credit in the books of the Railway Provident Fund. This money was not paid over to the Receiver, and in the lower Court it was alleged that Rs. 1,600 out of this sum had been paid by the insolvent to his wife. It is with reference to this transaction that the learned District Judge has held him guilty of a fraudulent act within the meaning of section 43 (2) of the Act.

The reasoning of the learned District Judge may be summarized as follows: The protection afforded to the monies in the Provident Fund by section 16 (2) (a) of this Act ceased as soon as these monies came into the hands of the insolvent, and they forthwith vested in the Receiver and became divisible among the creditors as provided by section 16 (4). But in accordance with the doctrine in Cohen v. Mitchell (1) the insolvent was entitled to retain the money received from the Provident Fund unless and until the Receiver intervened, and had he merely retained it he would not have been guilty of any fraud. But he had advanced a false story to prove that the money had been paid to his wife in satisfaction of a legal claim. This allegation amounted to a fraudulent transfer punishable under section 43.

The case of Cohen v. Mitchell (1) is not a decision on the Provincial Insolvency Act but on the English Bankruptcy Act (46 & 47 Vic. c. 52), and the decisions on which the learned District Judge has relied for extending the applicability of the doctrine therein laid down to the case before him are decisions in cases arising in the presidency towns prior to the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. These cases are governed by the provisions of the Indian Insolvency Act of 1848. It is, therefore, necessary in the first instance to examine the terms of the relevant Statute.

It is not disputed that the deposit with which we are now concerned was a compulsory deposit as defined in section 2 of the Provident Funds Act, 1897, and it is clear that at the date of the adjudication order it was not at the disposal of the insolvent for his own benefit. Therefore, it was not at that date "property" within the definition contained in section 2 (1) (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and did not, therefore, vest in the Receiver under section 16 (2). But, apart from the provisions of section 4 of the Provident Funds Act, 1897, it became "property" as soon as the money was paid to the insolvent, and was thus property acquired by him after the date of the order of adjudication. Under section 16 (4) such property "shall forthwith vest in the Court or Receiver and shall become divisible among the creditors in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2), clause (a)." At first sight it would appear that these words in their literal construction are free from any doubt.

But there are grounds for holding that these words should not be literally construed. In Cohen v. Mitchell (1) the Court declined to follow the literal construction of sections 44 and 54 of the English Bankruptcy Act on the ground of inconvenience, and the Courts in India in dealing with the analogous provisions of section 7 of the Indian Insolvency Act (11 & 12 Vic. c. 21) have allowed themselves the same measure of freedom [see Alimahmad v. Vadilal Devchand (2)].

(1) (1893) 25 Q. B. D. 232; 59 L. J. Q. B. 409; 63 L. T. 208; 38 W. R. 351; 7 Morrell 207.

(2) 53 Ind. Cas. 197; 21 Bom. L. R. 342; 43 B. 380.

Acts are in pari materia, and the considerations which have led the Courts to reject a literal construction are equally present in the case of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Nor is there so great a difference between the words employed by the Legislature as to permit of any distinction. It must, therefore, follow that in the present case also the doctrine in Cohen v. Mitchell (1) is applicable.

But it remains to consider the effect of section 4 of the Provident Funds Act, 1897. So far as the section bears upon the facts of this case it runs as follows: "Neither the Official Assignee nor a Receiver appointed under Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be entitled to or have any claim on any such compulsory deposit (i. e., any compulsory deposit in any Railway Provident Fund)." By virtue of section 59 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the reference to Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure must, for the purposes of this case, be construed as applying to section 16 of the former Act. What then is the force of the words "shall be entitled to or have any claim on any such compulsory deposit?" We are not here concerned with cases of attachment under a decree or order of a Court, and it is unnecessary to refer to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to which reference is made in section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. We have a specific provision applying directly to the case of a Receiver appointed under that Act. The question is whether the learned District Judge is right in holding that the protection afforded by the section ceases when the money comes into the hands of the depositor. In my opinion that is too restricted a construction. The words used are very wide. No Receiver has any claim on such compulsory deposits. If that is so, how can he claim to receive the money when it is paid into the hands of the depositor? The case of Official Assignee of Madras v. Mary Dalgairns (3) is here in point. That decision was prior to the amendment of the Provident Funds Act in 1903 whereby clause 2 was added to section 4, and is, therefore, a decision as to the effect of clause (1) of the section. It was held that the effect of clause (1) was to deprive the Official Assignee of the right which had otherwise vested in him to receive the sum standing to the credit of the insolvent on the insolvent's retirement from the service. That decision is with reference to section 7 of the Indian Insolvency Act, but it is equally applicable to the present case. In my opinion that decision is correct and should be followed. The result is that neither the Receiver nor the creditors have any claim to the money drawn by the insolvent, and, therefore, there could be no fraudulent dealing such as is made punishable by section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to determine whether on the basis of the findings of the District Judge any fraudulent dealing is established. It may, however, be remarked that it is difficult to reject the defence specifically pleaded by the insolvent that he was under a bona fide belief that the amount was not attachable and consequently did not vest in the Receiver. Even if it be assumed that the learned District Judge has correctly apprehended the law, the point is surrounded with so much doubt that the insolvent may well have entertained a bona fide belief that the amount in question was entirely at his disposal.

For these reasons I would set aside the order of imprisonment. The respondent to bear the costs throughout. The bail bond to be discharged.

MRITUNJAY BANARJI—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2), 47

SAURENDRA NATH MITRA v. MRITUNJAY BANARJI.

—"Decree"—Sale proclamation—Order rejecting application as to valuation, whether decree—Decision under s. 47, when amounts to "decree."

An order made in execution proceedings rejecting a petition objecting to the valuation given by a decree-holder for the purposes of a sale proclamation is not a "decree" within the meaning of section 2 (2), Civil Procedure Code, and is, therefore, not appealable. [p. 454, col 1.]

In order that a decision under section 47 of the Code may be included within the definition of "decree" and be appealable, it must in some way determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In my opinion the memo. of appeal ought to be rejected. The judgment-debtor filed a petition in objection to the valuation given by the decree-holders for the purpose of sale proclamation. The petition in objection was filed on the 22nd January 1920. It was then ordered in the presence of the petitioner that the decree-holders should be informed and that the matter should be put up for hearing on the 31st January, i. e., roughly in about a fortnight's time. The judgment-debtor, therefore, had plenty of notice that on the 31st of January his application would be heard and he ought to have taken proper steps to get his witnesses before the Court. He, however, did nothing, and in due course, that is on the 31st of January, the matter came up before the Subordinate Judge, and at that late period the judgment-debtor prayed for time to serve notice upon his witnesses. It is obvious he should have taken steps to do that at a much earlier period, and the Judge very properly rejected the application which he described as frivolous, and the petition in objection to the sale proclamation was accordingly rejected.

Now, the first point which has been taken before us is that the judgment-debtor is entitled to appeal from that order made in execution on the ground that it is a decree within the meaning of the definition in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that this being a determination of a question under section 47 of the Code, it is appealable as a decree. Before the present Civil Procedure Code came into operation, there were certain cases in the Calcutta High Court in which it was decided that any question determined under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code was appealable. One of the principal cases in which that decision was come to is Ganga Prosad v. Raj Coomar Singh (1). That view was dissented from by the Madras High Court in the case of Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (2), and when the matter came up again before the Calcutta High Court in the year 1911, that Court in the case of Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (3), after reviewing the authorities on the subject, came to the conclusion that the Mardas High Court was right and that the previous decision in Ganga Prasad v. Raj Coomar Singh (1) was wrong. The question for determination in that case was very similar to the question for determination in this. There an order had been made by the executing Court by which the value of property directed to be sold under a decree had been assessed at a certain figure according to the statement of the decree-holder. A preliminary objection was taken upon the hearing of an appeal from that order on the ground that it was not a case falling within section 47 of the Code, and that it was not a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code, and consequently was not appealable. Now the learned Judges pointed out, following the earlier case of Bekary Lal v. Kedar Nath Mullick (4), that an interlocutory order in the course of execution proceedings which decides, for instance, a point of law arising incidentally or otherwise is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of 1882, and that it was reasonably plain from the terms of section 2 that an order to be a decree must conclusively determine the rights of the parties, and that if any other view were adopted, the result would be that an appeal might be preferred against every order in the course of execution proceedings, and that this could hardly have been contemplated by the framers of the Code. The only question is whether under the present Code any wider interpretation is to be given to section 2, sub-section (2), which defines "decree" and states that it shall be deemed to include the determination of any question within section 47. In my opinion these words must be limited by the words which immediately precede and unless the decision appealed from is one which in some way determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, it cannot be included under the definition of decree. In the present case this is merely an interlocutory order and although it may be true to say that the Judge acts judicially in coming to the conclusion about valuation, that does not in itself make his determination a decree within the meaning of the section, and I think that this order is not appealable.

We are asked by the learned Vakil who appears for the appellant to treat the matter as an application in revision. It is perfectly clear from what I have just stated at the beginning of my judgment that there is no ground whatever for supposing that he will make out a case in revision, if we were to allow him to serve notice upon the opposite party and to have the matter discussed. The facts are perfectly clear and there is no conceivable ground that I can see on which the Court would in fact have any powers in revision. For these reasons, I think, this memorandum of appeal should be rejected and that the application in revision should also be rejected.

COOTTS, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar, dated the 23rd December 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Hissar, dated the 9th July 1918, dismissing plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant Sheo Ram, one of the proprietors of the village of Majod, has built a kacha house on the village common land, and some of the other proprietors sue for an injunction for its demolition. The suit was dismissed by the first Court, but the Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal has given the plaintiffs a decree. Sheo Ram has filed a second appeal in this Court.

The Senior Subordinate Judge says that the plaintiffs need not prove that the building erected by the defendant causes special damage. This is no doubt the view taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Bahadur Pal v. Ram Shankar Prasad Pal (1) and also in some rulings of this Court, such as Ohuhar Singh v. Dhaunkal Singh (2), and the proposition laid down in paragraph 235 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law that a proprietor may be restrained by his co-sharers from appropriating a vacant site to his own exclusive use is inconsistent with the proposition that the co-sharers cannot eject him without proving special damage. But, on the other hand, it was held in Hidayat Ali Khan v. Basit Ali Khan (3) that proof of special damage is necessary and the same view has been taken in more recent rulings, such as Ram v. Pir Baksh (4) and Majju v. Teja Singh (5) and Lakhu v. Hanwanta (6) and appears now to be generally accepted by this Court.

The Senior Subordinate Judge, while holding that special damage need not be proved, says at the same time that the special damage in this case is obvious, because if the defendant builds a baithak for the use of guests and strangers, it may cause inconvenience to the village women in taking water from the well, which is near, besides interference to the villagers in other ways. His opinion, however, on this point is only conjectural and is not borne out by evidence.

Want of proof of special damage is a sufficient reason for refusing an injunction, and another reason is the delay on the part of the plaintiffs in bringing the suit. They raised no objection to the building of the house at the time, and it was only after 5 or 6 years that they instituted their suit. Their conduct shows that they acquiesced in the building of the house by the defendant, and they are not now entitled to ask for its removal.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the first Court dismissing the suit. The plaintiffs will pay the defendant Sheo Ram's costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 3, 8, 9, O. XVII, r. 2, O. XXXII, r. 3—Suit against several defendants—Minor defendant—Dismissal for default, effect of—Minor not represented by guardian—Subsequent suit against minor, whether barred.

Where there are several defendants to a suit, the consequences of an order of dismissal for default need not necessarily be the same against all. If the suit is dismissed as against some under rule 8 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code and as against the rest under rule 3 of the same Order, a subsequent suit on the same cause of action would be barred as against the former but not against the latter. [p. 456, col. 1.]

The provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3, of the Civil Prcedure Code are imperative and without complying with those provisions the Court cannot make any decree between the plaintiff and a minor defendant. [p. 456, col. 2.]

Where a suit was dismissed for plaintiff's default in the presence of the major defendants and there was no appearance on behalf of the minor defendant, no guardian ad litem of the minor having been appointed:

Held, that a subsequent suit against the minor on the same cause of action was not barred, inasmuch as, (a) the order of dismissal as against the minor must be taken to have been made under Order IX, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code and not under rule 8 and (b) the minor not being properly represented in the suit, no binding order could be made as between him and the plaintiff. JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, J.—The only question for our decision is whether the lower Court has rightly held that this suit is barred by the decision in Suit No. 185 of 1915 of the same Court. That the present plaintiff is the representative-in-interest of the plaintiff in that suit is not denied. The then defendants were three in number, and the present defendant was one of them. The question is, what is the nature of the order disposing of that suit and what is its effect. The terms of the order made clearly show that the Judge who made that order dismissed the suit for plaintiff's default. The order was made at an adjourned hearing and the Court must be taken to have acted under Order XVII, rule 2, and to have based its order on the provisions of Order IX. It was argued that Order XVII, rule 3, applied but that is not so. The terms of the order show that the suit was dismissed on account of plaintiff's default and on no other ground. The decision in Chandramathi dasi v.

Narayanasami Aiyar (1) appears to contain a correct exposition of the relative scope of sections 157 and 158 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, and that decision is equally applicable to rules 2 and 3 of Order XVII. As Order XVII, rule 2, applies, we must refer to Order IX for the authority to dismiss the suit.

So far as the first two defendants were concerned, Order IX, rule 8, clearly applies. They were present and plaintiff was absent. But they are not parties now and the question is how the case stands as between plaintiff and defendant No. 3. I find it difficult to follow the lower Court in holding that for the purposes of rule 8 of Order IX it is sufficient if one or some of several defendants appear. It is necessary, as I read the law, to take the case of each defendant on its own merits. Here the order itself is merely one dismissing the suit, and so far as the present defendant is concerned may be referred to Order IX, rule 3, just as readily as to Order IX, rule 8. In the one case a subsequent suit is barred, in the other it is not barred. In the case of several defendants the consequences of an order of dismissal need not necessarily be the same against all. The present defendant was absent and prima facie, therefore, the order of dismissal as between him and the plaintiff would not bar a subsequent suit.

But there is a further fact which requires consideration. The present defendant was (and is) a minor. In the previous suit he was at the time represented by a proper guardian ad litem, the Nazir of the Court. At the date when the suit was dismissed, the Nazir's appointment had terminated and no guardian had been appointed. A minor defendant is a party to a suit in the eye of the law, but without the appointment of a guardian it was not possible for him to appear. It was in fact, owing to the absence of any guardian, that the suit stood adjourned. The Nazir's appointment was cancelled because the plaintiff failed to furnish him with funds as directed by the Court, but the suit was not dismissed owing to plaintiff's failure in this respect. At the date of the dismissal there was no guardian and the minor defendant was not, therefore, represented. Now the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3, are imperative, and without complying with those provisions the Court could not make any decree as between the plaintiff and the minor defendant. As between these parties, therefore, any order is (in my opinion) a nullity. And the second suit cannot, therefore, be barred.

I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Court and remand the suit for a disposal on the merits. Costs to be costs in the cause.

SHAH, J.—I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

The facts connected with the previous suit filed by Devchand and his son Diga in 1915 have been accurately stated in the judgment of the lower Court. It is clear on those facts that the order dismissing the suit for default is referable to Order XVII, rule 2, and not to rule 3 of that Order. By the provisions of rule 2, the order must be taken to have been made under Order IX, rule 8, as regards defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in that suit, who were present on the date of the order.

The important question is as to what is the effect of that order on the present suit. In order to determine that it is necessary to consider whether the adopted boy was effectively made a party to the suit of 1915. On the admitted facts I am of opinion that he was really not a party to that suit at all at the date of its dismissal. He was joined as defendant No. 3 to the suit, but the first guardian for the minor proposed by the plaintiffs in that case was not accepted by the Court. Ultimately the Nazir of the Court was appointed the guardian ad litem of the minor. But in consequence of the plaintiffs in that suit having failed to supply the necessary funds to the Nazir, his appointment as the guardian ad litem was cancelled by the Court. The suit was then adjourned to enable the plaintiffs to propose another guardian. They proposed Laxmibai the then defendant No. 2, but she refused to act as such. On the date of the dismissal of the suit in fact there was no guardian of the minor for the suit, as required by the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was not possible for the minor to appear on that day. Under those circumstances I am of opinion that really he was not a party to the suit at all on that day: and it is clear that no order binding on the minor could have been made in the suit. The order of dismissal must be held to be an order made on the footing that the only defendants in that suit were defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (i. e., the natural father and the adoptive mother of the adopted boy). On this footing I think that the previous suit is no bar to the maintenance of the present suit. Order IX, rule 9, provides that the plaintiffs shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. The order of dismissal affects the parties to the suit and cannot be held to apply to a fresh suit which is filed against the adopted boy who was not a party to that suit. It is urged for the respondents that the rule refers to the same cause of action and does not require that the parties to the fresh suit should be the same in order that the bar created by the rule may take effect. No authority is cited in support of this proposition; and I am not prepared to hold that the rule bars a suit against a person, who was not a party to the suit dismissed for default under rule 8.

Apart from that consideration, I am not satisfied that the cause of action in the present suit is the same as that in the previous suit. The previous suit was against the natural father and the adoptive mother of the adopted boy. Any order in that suit could not have affected the adopted boy. No doubt the principal allegation in the plaint related to the invalidity of the adoption. But there were further allegations made against the defendants in that suit, which were personal to themselves as to their fraudulent and deceitful acts and intent. The relief was claimed against them only. Even assuming that the allegations other than those relating to the invalidity of the adoption were not material, I am unable to hold that the cause of action against the adoptive mother and the natural father, if any, is the same as that against the adopted boy. In the present suit neither the natural father nor the adoptive mother is a necessary or a proper party; and though there may be apparent similarity between the two causes of action, and though the ground covered by the evidence necessary to prove the material allegations in both the suits may be common to a large extent, I feel clear that the cause of action, if any, against the natural father and the adoptive mother is quite distinct from that against the adopted boy.

I am, therefore, of opinion that rule 9 is no bar to the present suit.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT NO. 1708 OF 1919.

DHANRAJ GANPATROY—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 14, O. XI, r. 15—Documents on which plaintiff relies—Defendant, right of, to inspect documents.

A defendant is not entitled, as of right, to inspect documents relied on by the plaintiff and of which a list under rule 14 of Order VII of the Civil Procedure Code is annexed to the plaint, as such documents are not documents referred to in Order XI, rule 15, of the Code [p. 458 col. 1.]

Mr. B. L. Mitter, for the Plaintiff.

Babu O. C. Ganguly, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the defendant for an order that the plaintiff firm do give inspection of the documents mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint of documents relied on in the plaint. The plaintiff firm offered inspection of the sowdah which is the only document actually referred to in the plaint, but denied the right of the defendant to inspect the documents in the list attached to the plaint of documents relied on by them until the defendant had filed his written statement.

The application for inspection was made in reliance on Order XI, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that every party to a suit shall be entitled at any time to give notice to any other party in whose pleadings or affidavits reference is made to any document to produce such document for the inspection of the party giving such notice or of his Pleader and to permit him or them to take copies thereof.

Order VII, rule 9, provides that the plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint or annex thereto a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it and Order VII, rule 14 (1), provides that when a plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power, he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint, and sub-section (2) provides that where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint.

Now, it seems to me that these rules make a distinction between documents sued upon and documents relied on. Of the 1st the plaintiff must give inspection and produce either the original or a copy when the plaint is presented, of the 2nd neither production at the time of presentation of the plaint is required nor delivery of the document or a copy. The list added or annexed to the plaint is not part of the pleading, and it is not verified as it would have to be were it part of the pleading and it does not, I think, fall within Order XI, rule 15, and consequently the defendant is not entitled to inspection as of right which is what he claims here. Moreover, the fact that the list is to include documents whether in the possession or power of the plaintiff or not, points to the fact that it cannot have been intended that inspection should be given of documents in the list. Reliance is placed by the defendant on Ram Dyal Saligram v. Nurhurry Balkrishna (1) which is a decision in his favour. In that case reliance is placed on Quilter v. Heatly (2) which is a decision under Order XXXI, rule 14, of the English Rules which corresponds to our Order XI, rule 15. Both these rules refer to documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits, but the documents in the list referred to in Order VII, rule 14, are not, in my opinion, documents referred to in the pleadings within the meaning of those rules. I am unable to agree with the decision in Ram Dyal Saligram v. Nurhurry Balkrishna (1) (ubi supra) and I do not think the defendant is entitled to the order which he seeks. The application is dismissed with costs. I certify for Counsel.

Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Pleadings—Suit by owner for declaration of rightful possession, whether cognizable by Civil Court—Defendant obtaining possession pending suit—Amendment of plaint, whether should be allowed.

The question of jurisdiction has to be decided entirely on the allegations in the plaint. [p. 459, col. 1.]

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they were in rightful possession of the land in suit, alleging that the land belonged to them and that the defendant had made a claim on the ground that he was the heir of a deceased occupancy tenant, while as a matter of fact he had no title to the land. The first Court decreed their claim, holding that the occupancy rights were extinct and that the defendant had no rights therein. On appeal the District Judge, finding that the defendant had since obtained a decree from a Revenue Court restoring him to possession as an occupancy tenant, held that the defendant was in legal possession and that the declaratory suit could not proceed. Plaintiffs filed a second appeal to the High Court;

Held, (1) that on the allegations in the plaint the suit was cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 459, col. 1.]

(2) that the locus standi of the plaintiff to ask for relief from a Civil Court had in no way been affected by the subsequent decree obtained by the defendant in a Revenue Court; [p. 459, col. 1]

(3) that as the plaintiffs had lost possession during the pendency of the suit, they ought to have been allowed to amend their plaint and ask for possession. [p. 459, col. 1.]

Mr. Badr-ud Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case stated that they were in possession of the land in suit which belonged to them and that the defendant had made a claim on the ground that he was the heir of a deceased occupany tenant while, as a matter of fact, he had no title to the land. They sued, therefore, for a declaration that they were in rightful possession. The first Court held that the occupancy rights in the land were extinct and that the defendant had no rights therein. The suit was, therefore, decreed. On appeal the District Judge, who ascertained that the defendant had obtained a decree from a Revenue Court restoring him to possession of the land as an occupancy tenant, considered that the first Court should not have allowed the declaratory suit to proceed, especially as in the meanwhile the defendant had taken out execution and was then in legal possession of the land. The appeal was, therefore, accepted and the suit dismissed. Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred and has been argued before us by Mr. Badr ud-Din Kureshi.

Counsel contends that on the facts found by the first Court his client was entitled to the declaration asked for and that his locus standi to ask for relief from a Civil Court had in no way been affected by the subsequent decree obtained by the defendant in a Revenue Court. He urges further that as in the meantime the plaintiffs had lost possession of the land, they should have been allowed to amend their plaint and ask for possession. He also urges that even without any amendment the Court itself could have changed the nature of the relief granted. We agree with these contentions, which have in no way been answered by Counsel for the respondents who merely questioned the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to deal with the suit. The question of jurisdiction, however, has to be decided entirely on the allegations in the plaint, and upon these allegations the present suit was clearly cognisable by a Civil Court. The plaintiffs urged that they were the owners of the land and that the defendant had no connection therewith except as a trespasser.

We accept the appeal and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the lower Appellate Court for a decision on the merits after allowing the plaintiffs to amend their plaint by altering the suit from a declaratory suit to one for possession. Costs will be costs in the cause, and the stamp on appeal will be refunded.

Hindu Law—Temple—Manager, whether entitled to remove image to new temple—Ruinous condition of temple, effect of.

The fact that a public temple is in a ruinous condition would not entitle the manager of the temple to remove the image from the temple and instal it permanently in a new building, especially where the removal is objected to by a majority of the worshippers. [p. 460, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by certain villagers with leave under Order I, rule 8, for a declaration that the temple of Ganpati in question was a public temple and for an injunction restraining the defendant from removing the image of Ganpati to another adjoining building put up by him. The plaintiffs, who represented the villagers, alleged that this was an old temple of Ganpati which was not the private property of the defendant, that the defendant was about to remove the image to another building which he had no right to do and which, they alleged, was contrary to their sentiments and religious belief. The defendant pleaded that the temple was a private temple, that he had been in management of the temple for many years, that the temple building was in a dilapidated condition and that he had put a new building on his own land where he wanted to instal the image after removing it from the old temple. He contended in effect that as the manager of the temple he had a right to do so.

The trial Court found that the temple was a public temple, that the defendant was the manager of the temple and that in view of the omission of the villagers to effect the necessary repairs in the old building which was in a dilapidated condition, the defendant was justified in putting up a new building for the location of the image. It was found that the land on which the new building was put up by the defendant belonged to him; but in the course of the proceedings the defendant expressed his willingness to dedicate the land with the building to the temple and agreed to treat the old building and the new building on the same footing as a public temple. The trial Court incorporated this undertaking on the part of the defendant in the decree and refused to grant the injunction which the plaintiffs had prayed for. In appeal the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the defendant had no right as manager to remove the image from the present temple to the new building. In view, however, of the fact that the existing temple had fallen into disrepairs, the plaintiffs agreed to deposit Rs. 1,500 with a view to effect the necessary repairs, and a decree on that basis was passed restraining the defendant from removing the image to the new building.

In the appeal before us it has been urged on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiffs have taken up an unnecessarily obstructive attitude and that in view of the fact that he is willing to dedicate the new building to the temple there should be no objection to the image being installed in that building. On the other hand the plaintiffs urge that the defendant has been actuated by an indirect motive in thus removing the image from its present position to a building which has been erected by him. We are not, however, concerned in this litigation with the motives of either side. It may be that the defendant has acted only in the interest of the temple in putting up a building on his own land with the intention of removing the image to that building and of duly installing it in that building. It may be that the plaintiffs have not been so far diligent in seeing that the present building was properly repaired and that they may have some animus against the defendant in refusing his offer to dedicate the new building to the temple. We are concerned in this appeal only with the question of law which has been raised on behalf of the defendant that as a manager he is entitled to remove the image and to instal it in the new building. It is common ground now that the existing temple is an ancient public temple. It is also common ground that the defendant has been the manager of this temple for a number of years. It is not disputed that the existing building is in a ruinous condition and that it may be that for the purpose of effecting the necessary repairs the image may have to be temporarily removed. Still the question is whether the defendant as manager is entitled to remove the image with a view to its installation in another building which is near the existing building. Taking the most liberal view of the powers of the manager, I do not think that as the manager of a public temple he can do what he claims the power to do, viz., to remove the image from its present position and to instal it in the new building. The image is consecrated in its present position for a number of years and there is the existing temple. To remove the image from that temple and to instal it in another building would be practically putting up a new temple in place of the existing temple. Whatever may be the occasions on which the installation of a new image as a substitute for the old may be allowable according to the Hindu Law, it is not shown on behalf of the defendant that the ruinous condition of the existing building is a ground for practically removing the image from its present place to a new place permanently. We are not concerned in this suit with the question of the temporary removal which may be necessary when the existing building is repaired. The defendant claims the right to instal it in the new building permanently, and I do not think that as a manager he could do so, particularly when he is not supported by all the worshippers of the temple in taking that step. I am clearly of opinion that the view which the District Judge has taken in this case of the powers of the manager is right and that the decree passed by him under the circumstances is correct. In coming to this conclusion I have not overlooked the fact that in the appeal before us some of the villagers have supported the defendant in the position which he has taken up.

I would confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal.

The appellant to pay the costs of the plaintiffs-respondents. The other respondents who have been added here on the applicatson of Mr. Sathaye must bear their own costs.

CRUMP, J.—I concur.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 18th April 1914 one Bundu instituted a suit against three brothers, Ferczs Din and Gul Muhammad majors and Ata Muhammad minor through Ferczs Din guardian ad litem. A decree for Rs. 250 was passed on 16th July 1914. On the 16th December of the same year execution was taken out and a house belonging to the three brothers was attached. It was mortgaged at the time for Rs. 1,650 and the rights of redemption were sold in April 1915 to the son of Jan Muhammad, the defendant in the present case. As the purchase money was not duly paid, the sale was not confirmed. The decree-holder then transfereed his rights in the decree to Jan

Muhammad and the house was again brought to auction and bought by Jan Muhammad in November 1915. On the first occasion, the highest bid for the rights of redemption was Rs. 600 and on the second occasion Rs. 520. Notice of the transfer of the decree to Jan Muhammad was served on Feroze Din for himself and as guardian of his two minor brothers, Gul Muhammad and Ata Muhammad. It must be noticed especially that a mistake was made in describing Gul Muhammad as a minor. On 2nd December 1915 Gul Muhammad and Ata Muhammad sued for a declaration that the execution proceedings were not binding against them owing to the misdescription of Gul Muhammad and as Feroze Din took no effective steps to represent his minor brother Ata Muhammad in the execution proceedings. The Court first held that the suit did not lie as action should have been taken under section 47. On review, however, it, for some reason which is not clear, allowed an amendment, to the plaint praying that the decree also should be declared null and void. It then proceeded to hold that Gul Muhammad was actually a major at the time of the suit and execution, that he was prejudiced by not receiving notice of the sale, that the minor judgment-debtor was not properly represented and that the house had been sold for a wholly inadequate price. It declared the execution proceedings not binding against the plaintiffs. Against this decision an appeal was presented to the District Judge, who held that the decree itself was binding upon the plaintiffs and that this suit was not maintainable in view of the provisions of section 47 and Order XXI, rule 92 (3), Civil Procedure Code. The appeal was accepted and the suit dismissed, and against this decision an appeal has been preferred by the plaintiffs whose case has been argued at great length by Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain.

The learned Counsel did not seriously contend that the decree itself was not binding upon the minor plaintiff. Indeed no such contention was possible, as Feroze Din and Gul Muhammad both appeared in and defended the original suit. Counsel's main contentions are that in the case of Gul Muhammad he was entitled to receive notice of the transfer of the decree under Order XXI, rule 16, and that the failure of the transferee to give such notice rendered all subsequent proceedings void and inoperative against him. In the case of Ata Muhammad Counsel urges that Feroze Din did not appear in these proceedings and that the minor's interests were not properly protected. On the latter point Counsel referred to numerous decisions, such as Ahmad Ali Shah v. Mir Shah (1), Lalla Sheo Ohurn Lal v. Ramnandan Dobey (2), Abdul Goffur v. Sona Bibi (3) and Oursandas Natha v. Ladkuvahu (4), which are authorities that a minor is not bound by a decree where his guardian has been guilty of negligence in allowing it to be passed against him. They are in no way applicable to the present case, as they deal with the duties of a guardian in original suits, not in execution proceedings, and cannot be made applicable by way of analogy. As for Feroze Din's alleged negligence in the execution proceedings, it may be noted that execution was taken out within a year and no notice was, therefore, necessary to the judgment-debtors. If the first sale had been confirmed, the minor plaintiff could have no possible ground of complaint. The mere fact that notice on Feroze Din as guardian was necessitated by Order XXI, rule 16, has no material bearing on the case. There was no irregularity in the sale proceedings and when it is obvious that Feroze Din and Gul Muhammad were unable to raise the money to satisfy the decree, I cannot see what objection the minor can raise to the sale.

The case of Gul Muhammad stands on a somewhat different footing. The provisions of Order XXI, rule 16, that notice shall be given to the judgment-debtor of the transfer of a decree are of a mandatory nature and Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain refers to two authorities, Gulzari Lal v. Daya Ram (5) and Kassum Goolam Hussein v. Dayabhai Amarsi (6), that a Court has no jurisdiction in execution proceedings where the provisions of this rule have not been complied with. He urges further that the provisions of Order XXI, rule 22, are identical and that it is settled law that where the required notice is not given under that rule, a subsequent sale is void for want of jurisdiction, [Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (7)]. He further urges that a suit was maintainable as Gul Muhammad, not having been made properly a party to the execution proceedings, could not apply under section 47 and that Order XXI, rule 90, was equally inapplicable, as Gul Muhammad could not apply to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it. He further urged that under the present Civil Procedure Code the Court was competent to treat the suit as a proceeding under section 47. As against this argument Mr. Sheo Narain contends that the law as laid down in Kassum Goolam Hussein v. Dayabhai Amarsi (6) is not applicable in the present case, as a legal attachment had already taken place and as subsequent proceedings were in continuation thereof. He refers to cases where proper notice had not been received by all the judgment-debtors or their representatives, e. g., Kunhammad v. Kutti (8) and Ramachari v. Duraisami Pillai (9). The object of rule 16 of Order XXI is to prevent a judgment-debtor settling with a person who is no longer a decree-holder while the object of rule 22 is to give information to the judgment-debtor of a far more important description. He next urges that inspite of the misdescription of Gul Muhammad as a minor he was still a party to the suit and that his objections could only be made under section 47 or Order XXI, rule 90. He refers to authorities that an order under rule 92 confirming a sale must be an order aginst a judgment-debtor. He finally urges that the present suit was not instituted in the executing Court and could not have been so instituted on account of want of jurisdiction and that, therefore, no question arose of treating the suit as a proceeding under section 47.

As for the question whether the neglect of the mandatory directions contained in Order XXI, rule 16, renders all subsequent proceedings void even where a legal attachment has already taken place and the property is in custody of the law, I might be inclined to agree with Mr. Sheo Narain's contentions if the matter were res integra. It has, however, been decided in a Division Bench judgment of the Bombay High Court that the failure to comply with the directions of the rule makes subsequent proceedings void. In the present case Gul Mohammad undoubtedly knew of the transfer of the decree to Jan Mohammad, as not only was notice issued to his guardian but he was lying in the attached house at the time. In these circumstances I doubt if he can equitably raise an objection on account of want of personal service on him under rule 16. In all other respects the circumstances are very similar to those dealt with in Ramachari v. Duraisami Pillai (9). It is not, however, necessary for me to determine this point, as I consider this case undoubtedly barred by the provisions of section 47. The decree was against Gul Mohammad personally and a legal attachment had taken place. The remainder of the proceedings which were undobtedly within his knowledge were proceedings which directly affected him as a judgment-debtor, and the question of the irregularity or illegality of the notice issued under rule 16 and its effect was one arising between the parties to the suit and could have only been properly determined under section 47. The second sub-section of this section could not in any way assist him as the Subordinate Judge before whom the original suit was instituted was not the executing Court.

I agree that a separate suit did not lie and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah.

Mr. Shivanandan Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the defendants have no title to the land in dispute, 2 acres 91 decimals in area, by virtue of their purchase at the certificate sale which was a nullity, and prayed for recovery of possession of the same, and also claimed mesne profits. The facts of the case will have to be shortly stated. A holding, consisting of 2 acres 91 decimals and carrying a rental of Rs. 9-9-6, was owned by one Bihari Sahu. After his death, Ramgulam and Raghubir were recorded in the landlord's sherista as the tenants of the holding. On the 16th of September 1914 the holding was attached in execution of a money decree, obtained on the basis of a handnote against Ramgulam, Jadunandan and Raghubir. On the 5th of January 1915 the property was sold in execution of this decree and was purchased by the plaintiffs. On the 8th of January 1915 the sale was made absolute. It appears that the Mouza in which the disputed land lies is khas mahal estate. The ledger for 1908-1909 shows that a holding of 7 bighas 1 katta and 6 dhurs was recorded against Bihari Sahu. In 1910 the names of Ramgulam and Raghubir were recorded in respect of the holding. There being arrears of rent in respect of this holding, a certificate for the rental of 1910—1914 was issued against Ramgulam only. A copy of this certificate, with the notice under section 7 of the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, was served on Ramgulam only. The sale was held, but the sale certificate shows that only 2 acres 91 decimals was sold and purchased by defendants Nos. 1 to 4. It has been found by the Courts below that this 2 acres 91 decimals is the land in dispute and is a part of the holding of 7 bighas 1 katta and 6 dhurs. It is obvious, therefore, that this is a case of competition between two purchasers, and the main question is, whose purchase is to prevail, whether the purchase of the plaintiff under the money decree or of the defendants' as purchasers at the certificate sale? It is conceded that if the defendants' purchase was in execution of a rent decree, in that case they will have the priority. Therefore, it is necessary to see what actually passed at the certificate sale, whether the right, title and interest only of the certificate-debtor or the holding itself. The holding which was in arrears was 7 bighas 1 katta 6 dhurs standing in the name of Ramgulam and Raghubir. But the certificate was issued against Ramgulam only; and what is more important is that the sale certificate shows that only 2 acres 91 decimals was sold. This means that the arrears due in respect of a whole holding were realized by the sale of a part of it. As a matter of fact, it was urged before me that this holding of 2 acres 91 decimals was not even part of the 7 bighas 1 katta 6 dhurs but the finding of the Appellate Court is quite clear on that point, and I must take it that 2 acres 91 decimals formed part of 7 bighas 1 katta 6 dhurs. In the case reported as Ram Kinkar Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Chowdhury (1) it has been held that if the decree-holder in execution of the decree chooses to sell part of a holding though the decree was against the whole, the decree loses the character of a rent decree, and, therefore, the purchase of the defendants was in effect in execution of a money decree. Then, it appears that, though the decree was against the whole holding of 7 bighas odd kattas which stood recorded in the names of Ramgulam, Raghubir and Jadunandan, only Ramgulam was made a party and it has been held in the cases reported as Jogeswar Rai v. Kesho Persad Singh (2), Krishna Das Roy v. Kali Tara Chowdhurani (3), Beradar Singh v. Bacha Mahto (4), that, if all the tenants are not made parties, the decree will not be a rent decree but will be a money decree. Therefore, on that ground also, the plaintiff's purchase will prevail. Under section 26 of the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act what the defendants purchased at the certificate sale was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor at the time of the sale. It was urged by the learned Vakil, appearing on behalf of the appellant, that even if the decree is found to be a money-decree he will have priority, because notice under the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act was prior to the attachment under the money decree. There is no force in the argument, and section 26 is a complete answer to it. The certificate sale took place on the 17th April 1915, while the sale under the money decree took place on the 5th of January 1915. It was next contended that Ramgulam was sued not only in his individual capacity but in his representative capacity and the cases reported as Jeo Lal Singh v. Ganga Pershad (5), Nitayi Behari Saha Paramanik v. Hari Govinda Saha (6), Radha Pershad Singh Bahadur v. Ram Khelawan Singh (7) and Jagat Chandra Dutt v. The Collector of Chittagong (8) were referred to. In my opinion these cases do not in the least help the appellant. To begin with, Ramgulam, it appears, was the nephew and, therefore, a junior member of the family and, as such, could not be sued in his representative capacity at all. Secondly, there is no indication at any stage that he was sued in his representative capacity. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge rightly dismissed the appeal of the appellant. I uphold his findings and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SARDHA—DEFENDANT

LAKHU—PLAINTIFF

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77 (3) (d), (c)—Occupancy rights, creation of, by widow—Reversioner, suit by, to contest alienation—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A suit by a reversioner to contest the validity of the creation of occupancy rights by the widow of the last male owner is cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 466, col. 1.]

Case referred, under section 100 of the Punjab Tenancy Act of 1887, by the District Judge, Kangra, with his letter No. 412, dated the 12th March 1920, for orders of the High Court.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit was for the recovery of possession of 30 kanals 14 marlas on the ground that it was his ancestral property. He stated that his predecessor-in title, one Rirku, had left a widow, Musammat Gandho, and that the land in suit was in possession of her brother, the defendant. He stated that the defendant was in reality a non-occupancy tenant, and that anyhow if Musammat Gandho had created occupancy rights in his favour, such alienation by her was not binding against him. The defendant produced a document by which Musammat Gandho created occupancy rights in his favour. The suit coming on appeal before the learned District Judge, that officer was of opinion that it was cognizable only by a Revenue Court, falling under section 77 (3) (d) or (3) (c) of the Tenancy Act, and the Judge, therefore, referred the case under section 100 of that Act with a recommendation that the Munsif's decree might be registered as that of an Assistant Collector, 1st grade, RAGHUNATH CHATTERJI v. JUTHU CHATTAR.

I do not agree with the opinion of the District Judge, as the suit was in no way one by a landlord to eject a tenant, nor was it one by a landlord to prove that a tenant had no right of occupancy. The plaint, though not happily worded, was clearly to the effect that the defendant was either a trespasser, or else was in occupation under an alienation from Musammat Gandho which had no legal effect against him. In other words, again, that he was a trespasser. He did not admit that there had been any valid creation of occupancy rights. The learned District Judge pointed out that the plaintiff admitted that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between Musammat Gandho and the defendant, and he considered that the plaintiff merely stood in the shoes of Musammat Gandho and was her successor-in interest. As a matter of fact the land being ancestral, the plaintiff did not derive his rights to possession through Musammat Gandho, but through the common ancestor, and the whole point of his case rightly or wrongly is that he is in no way bound by the actions of Musammat Gandho. The suit, therefore, appears to me clearly cognizable by a Civil Court, and in fact to be precisely on the same footing as the cases dealt with in Ishar v. Sundar (1), Bhagwana v. Balik Ram (2). In neither of these cases was there even any suggestion that a suit to contest the validity of the creation of occupancy rights was cognizable by a Revenue Court.

I, therefore, return the records of the case to the District Judge for disposal of the appeal.

Case sent back.

JUTHU CHATTAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding—Joint tenants—Surrender by one tenant of his share, validity of—Appeal, second—Finding of fact based on no evidence, whether binding.

A surrender by one of several joint tenants of an occupancy holding of his share in the holding is valid [p. 457, col. 2]

Where a finding of fact is arrived at by a wrong construction of the pleadings, and upon no evidence, the finding is liable to be set aside in second appeal. [p. 468, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Purulia (Manbhum).

Mr. Harihar Prasad Sinha for Mr. Mritunjoy Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They brought a suit out of which this appeal has arisen in the Court of the Munsif of Purulia for recovery of possession of the lands in suit after a declaration of their title thereto.

The lands in suit are alleged to have been settled with four persons, Juthu Chatar, Golam Chatar, Shridan Chatar and Nabin Chatar, by means of a lease, dated the 12th Magh 1296 (corresponding to the 24th of January 1890). Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the sons of Golam Chatar, defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the sons of Shridan Chatar and defendant No. 6 is the son of Nabin Chatar.

The plaintiffs' case is that the aforesaid four persons who originally took the lease had four equal shares in the lands, the annual jama of which was Rs. 3 12 for the entire lands, and that they were holding the lands separately by dividing them in accordance with their shares for the purpose of cultivation, that defendants Nos. 2 to 5 being unable to pay rent for their shares of the land and to cultivate the same for want of money, surrendered their 8-annas share, the annual rental of which was Rs. 1-14, to the plaintiffs by a registered deed of relinquishment, dated the 4th March 1916, and thus the plaintiff became entitled to khas possession of half his share of the land covered by the original lease of 24th January 1890 described in schedule I to the plaint. The lands surrendered by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are described in schedule II to the plaint.

The plaintiffs allege that when they went to take possession of the land in schedule

II in Asadh 1323, the defendant No. 1 resisted them by force and prevented them from taking possession of the same.

The defendants Nos. 2 to 5 filed written statements supporting the claim of the plaintiffs and admitting that they had willingly surrendered the lands on account of their inability to cultivate them and to pay rent therefor. The defendant No. 6, who has 4-annas share in the lands originally leased, also filed a written statement supporting the case of the plaintiffs.

The defendant No. 1, having 4 annas share only, resisted the plaintiffs' claim and filed a written statement. The defendant in his long written statement set up the title of a third person as the proprietor of the land and impugned the title of the plaintiffs and stated that the kabuliyut of the 24th January 1890 in favour of the plaintiffs' ancestor was executed through coercion. The defendant further pleaded that the surrender, if any, of a portion of the entire lands leased is invalid and the plaintiffs cannot acquire any title by virtue of the alleged partial surrender.

In paragraph 10 of the written statement the defendant set up a ladawi or surrender by defendants Nos. 4 and 5, in his own behalf, of their share in the lands in dispute, by means of a deed executed on the 14th day of Jestha 1322.

Upon the pleas taken by the defendant, five issues were framed in the Court of first instance. We are concerned here only with Issue No. 4.

This issue is in the following terms:—

"Have the plaintiffs any title to the land in suit?"

The Munsif held that the plaintiffs are the landlords of the lands covered by the lease, dated the 24th January 1890; that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are co-tenants of the lands; that all the co-sharers had divided the lands according to their shares; that the lands in schedule II fell to the shares of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and that then the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 surrendered the lands in schedule II in favour of the plaintiffs. The Munsif was further of opinion that even if the lands were undivided and defendants Nos. 2 and 5 were joint tenants thereof with defendants Nos. 1 and 6, the surrender of their undivided shares in favour of the landlords was valid. In support of this proposition the Munsif relied upon a decision of Banerjee, J., in Peary Mohun Mondal v. Radhika Mohun Hazra (1), which was upheld in Letters Patent Appeal by Maclean, C. J., sitting with Bodilly and Mookerjee, JJ. The Munsif has relied also upon the case of Ganga Chandra Choudhury v. Alak Chand Saha (2).

On appeal the District Judge set aside the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiffs' case. The learned District Judge concludes his judgment in the following words:—"On these two findings of fact then (1) that there was no such surrender as alleged, but rather a transfer for consideration which is illegal under section 47 of the Chhota Nagpur Tenancy Act, and (2) that the tenancy is a joint and undivided one, the plaintiffs' case must fail." As to the second ground, the learned Judge is apparently of opinion that a surrender by a co tenant of his share in an undivided holding is invalid. In this view of the law he is clearly wrong. He has tried to distinguish the case of Ganga Chandra Choudhury v. Alak Chand Saha (2) on the ground stated by him that it "was a case of one raiyat surrendering a portion of his whole holding." But I fail to see any distinction in principle between the right of a tenant of an entire holding surrendering a portion of it and that of a co-tenant surrendering a portion of the holding according to his share in it. In both cases the surrender is of a portion of the holding, the validity of which is recognized in the said ruling. The case of Peary Mohun Mondal v. Radhika Mohun Hazra (1) is, however, a direct case on all fours with the present one, where the surrender by a co tenant of his share in the holding was held to be good and valid. Banerjee, J., in his very elaborate and detailed judgment in that case has discussed the question from every point of view, namely, from the provisions in the Bengal Tenancy Act and the general principles applicable to such a case, and has come to the conclusion that relinquishment made in favour of the landlord by some of the several tenants of a joint occupancy holding does not operate by way of enlarging the right of the other co-sharers who did not relinquish and by way of depriving the landlord of what ordinarily would belong to him. It was distinctly laid down that a landlord has a right of re entry in respect of the portion of the holding surrendered by a co-tenant. In the words of Maclean, C. J., who dealt with that case in Letters Patent, I would adopt the reasoning and conclusion of Banerjee, J., in that case and cannot usefully add to what is said therein. This disposes of the second ground upon which the decision of the Munsif was set aside by the learned District Judge.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 315.

As to the first ground, I fail to understand upon what basis the learned Judge has held that the deed, which purports to be a deed of surrender and relinquishment, Exhibit 2, by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 in favour of the plaintiffs, was a transfer for consideration. The deed itself does not make mention of any consideration but a voluntary surrender of the holding in favour of the landlords. The pleadings of the parties are also conspicuously salient upon the point. It was not the case of either party that there was any transfer for consideration created in favour of the landlord by virtue of the deed in question. The second portion of the first ground, therefore, appears to me to be unsubstantial and based upon misconception. It was perhaps resorted to with a view to support the finding of the Court that the deed of surrender was a collusive one. This leads us to the consideration of the first portion of ground No. (1), namely, whether there was "no such surrender as alleged" by the plaintiffs. The deed of surrender filed by the plaintiffs is a registered document. It was not denied either by the executants of the deed, defendants Nos. 2 to 5, or by the contesting defendant No. 1 in his written statement, or for the matter of that in the entire evidence which I have now read in the case, that the deed of surrender filed by the plaintiffs was in fact executed. The learned Judge also does not hold that the deed was not, as a matter of fact, executed, but he declines to give effect to it by impugning it as a collusive transaction and in order to hold that the surrender was collusive, the learned District Judge relied upon paragraph 1 of the written statement of the defendant. In that paragraph the defendant avers "that there is no cause of action or right for plaintiffs' suit. Being under the control of avarice and in collusion with other defendants, they have instituted this false suit." That statement does not refer to the deed in question, but to the present suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of the lands in suit. The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondent has conceded that there is nothing in the written statement expressly or by indication stating that the deed in question, the surrender, is a collusive one. Therefore the plaintiffs did not set up in their written statement the plea of collusion with regard to the surrender alleged by the plaintiffs. The learned Judge then says that the surrender is collusive, because the reason for the surrender stated in the deed as well as in the plaint, namely, that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 could not pay rent for the land, is false, for the defendant No. 1 is said to have paid for the whole holding. Assuming for the sake of argument that defendant No. 1 has paid the rent of the holding to the landlords, defendants Nos. 2 to 5 would be liable to him for contribution of their shares of the rent. Besides, even if the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 had been paying rents in the past years, which they necessarily had to pay unless the holding was surrendered, they could still feel that they would not be able in future to pay the rent and would very well have relinquished their shares of the land in order to protect themselves from future liability to pay rent when the land, according to them, had deteriorated and they could not cultivate the same for want of funds. This is, therefore, not a sufficient reason for holding that the deed must necessarily be a collusive one. This is the only reason upon which the learned District Judge has based his finding of collusion with regard to the deed in question. The finding of the District Judge that the surrender was collusive has, therefore, been arrived at by a wrong construction of the pleading, the written statement of defendant No. 1, and upon no evidence, and hence is liable to be questioned in second appeal.

But does the question of collusion at all arise in the present case? Whether collusive or not, the surrender is valid so far as the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are concerned. They abide by the surrender and do not want to avoid it on the ground of collusion. The surrender is, therefore, binding upon them. The defendant No. 1 is not at all affected by the collusion, if any, between the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 with respect to the deed in question, for his share in the land is not at all touched by the deed of surrender. He had never any right to hold the entire holding or anything in excess of his own share and so long as his share is not affected by the deed of surrender, I do not think that the Court can refuse to give effect to it, collusion or no collusion. I, therefore, disagree with the view taken by the learned District Judge and agree with that taken by the Munsif, whose judgment appears to me to be clearer and more precise than that of the District Judge.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents says that upon the finding of the learned District Judge, that the land was not split up, the surrender could not be given effect to and the plaintiffs could not get possession of the specific plots in schedule II of the plaint claimed by them. I do not think that there is any substance in this contention. The plaintiffs expressly alleged in the plaint that the defendants held specified shares in the lands and that subsequent to the kabuliyat of 24th January they had divided the lands and had been in separate possession of the lands in schedule II. This statement in the plaint was not at all traversed in the written statement. The Munsif held that the defendants had specified shares leased out to them under the deed and that they were by division in possession of the specific land. The District Judge held that the holding was not split up, but the finding of the Munsif that the shares were well-known and definite, has not been disturbed by the District Judge. It is not disputed that the share of defendants Nos. 2 to 5, which was surrendered by the deed in favour of the plaintiffs, was 8 annas in the land covered by the lease of 1890, and in fact there is clear evidence on the point. The principle of the ruling in Peary Mohun Mondal v. Radhika Mohun Hazra (1) already referred to will, therefore, apply. In order to apply this ruling it is not necessary that the holding should have been split up and divided by metes and bounds between the co-tenants. I, therefore, overrule this contention.

The result is that the decision of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif restored, and the plaintiffs' suit decreed with costs throughout.

Appeal decreed.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present appeal arises Kidar Nath and Amar Nath plaintiffs, sons of Kanshi Ram deceased, claimed dissolution of partnership and the taking of the partnership accounts and the recovery of any money that might be found due to them. The following pedigree-tables are necessary for the proper understanding of this case:

(a) KANSHI RAM, Arora, DIED 28TH NOVEMBER 1907.

Kidar Nath plaintiff No. 1.	Amar Nath plaintiff No. 2.

(b) RAM CHAND Brahman, DIED 28TH OCTOBER 1909.

Balmokand died 21-6-1906.	Gandoo defendant No. 1.	Sant Ram defendant No. 2.	Mahant Ram deceased,

Mohan Lal defendant No. 4.	Rupa deceased,

(c) MADHO MAL, Arora, DIED 4TH MAY 1907.

Radha Kishan defendant No. 6.	Prem Das defendant No. 7.	Bhagat Ram defendant No. 8.

The lower Court found that the partnership had already been dissolved prior to the institution of the suit and gave plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 2,541-10-9 against defendants Nos. 1 to 5: it also gave the defendants Nos. 6 to 8, the sons of Madho Mal, a decree for Rs. 7,256-11-6 against the same defendants.

The present appeal was filed by Sant Ram and Mohan Lal and cross-objections have been filed as to items disallowed, both by the plaintiffs and by defendants Nos. 6 to 8. Devi Das, defendant No. 3, was not represented in this Court nor was Musammat Vaid Kuar, the widow of Rupa. Gandu is represented by Counsel who adopted the argument of the appellants' Counsel.

The following are the brief facts of the case.

The first partnership firm was started by Kanshi Ram and Ram Chand in Peshawar and carried on business from Sambat 1937 to Sambat 1942. In this Court there is no dispute as to the accounts of that business. In Sambat 1943 a new partnership was started, the partners being Kanshi Ram, Madho Mal and Balmokand, the son of Ram Chand, and the firm was called Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal and carried on business in Peshawar from Sambat 1943 to Sambat 1963. The third firm also in Peshawar, called Baij Nath-Balmokand, had the same partners and carried on business from Asuj Sambat 1943 to Chet 1951. The fourth firm was that of Kanshi Ram-Balmokand which carried on business at Hoti Mardan in the Peshawar District from Chet Sambat 1951 to Poh Sambat 1962, corresponding to December 1905, when it was dissolved by agreement. Its partners were the same as the firm of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal. The fifth firm was that of Kanshi Ram Jawahri which carried on business in Amritsar. The partners were the same as in the firm of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal. It was really a supplying firm to the firms in Peshawar and Hoti Mardan.

The principal question for determination in the lower Court was whether Balmokand was a partner of the firm Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal and of other firms in his individual capacity or as representative of the joint family of which Ram Chand was the senior member and presumably the manager. Plaintiffs argued and the lower Court held that he was a member of these firms as representative of the joint family and it, therefore, passed a decree not only against Balmokand's son, but against his brothers, his nephew and his nephew's widow. The contention of the appellants is that Balmukand was a partner in his individual capacity only, and that they are not responsible for his debts or for rendering accounts of the firms in which he was a partner.

The first argument urged very strongly by Mr. Narang on behalf of the appellants is that the lower Court erred in presuming that because Balmokand was a member of the joint Hindu family, therefore, as partner in the various firms he represented the whole of the joint Hindu family of which he was a member. In paragraph 14 of the judgment the lower Court says:—"Admittedly Ram Chand and his sons constituted a joint Hindu family in Sambat 1943 and as presumably share of the capital for the partnership business contributed by Balmokand was drawn from his family property, he was merely an agent of the family. The whole of the family and not he alone were the proprietors of his share in the trade." The Court referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, Article 300, where it is stated that where one or more joint members trade by themselves, or in partnership with strangers on capital which is not family property, the profits resulting are of course exclusively their own. If the capital is drawn from family property, the trade and profits are also family property. We have no quarrel with the latter proposition, but we do not think the lower Court was justified in assuming that Balmokand joined the firms in which he was a partner with capital drawn from the joint family funds. In principles of Hindu Law by Mulla, 3rd Edition, page 212, it is stated that there is no presumption that a business carried on by one who is a member of the joint family is a joint family business. One of the authorities cited by Mr. Mulla in support of this proposition is Vadilal v. Shah Khushal (1), where it was held that although a person carrying on business is a co-parcener in a joint family, it does not necessarily follow that all his co parceners are his partners in that business, entitled with him to its rights and responsible with him for its liabilities. The fact of the partnership must be proved by evidence showing that the persons alleged to be partners have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in the business and to share the profits and losses thereof. In the case reported as Hari Shankar v. Babu Ram (2) it was held that no doubt the initial presumption is that members of a Hindu family are joint but it does not, however, follow that all the property owned or shops started by individual members of the family are joint of all the members. The same view of the initial onus was taken in Suraj Kumar v. Baldeo Das (3).

A great deal of oral evidence has been adduced on behalf of the defendants to show that after the original firm of Kanshi Ram-Ram Chand ceased its business in Sambat 1942, Ram Chand started a separate shop in Peshawar, dealing in the same class of goods, which was called Ram Chand-Sant Ram. The same witnesses have deposed that Ram Chand and Sant Ram were quite separate from Balmokand. We are not sure that much credit should attach to the evidence of these witnesses as to Balmokand being quite separate from his father and brothers, because we doubt that they had sufficient opportunity of knowing the facts, but we see no reason for not accepting their evidence to the effect that Ram Chand had a separate shop at Peshawar called Ram Chand Sant Ram. The lower Court has referred to this point in its judgment (on page 188 top of the paper-book) but has not come to a clear finding as to the existence of such a shop or not. We hold that there was such a shop, and this fact, in our opinion, is against the contention that Balmokand as partner in the firm of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal represented the whole of the joint family of which he was a member. If Ram Chand had been a partner in that firm, there does not seem to be any reason why he should have started a separate shop at the same place dealing in the same articles. We are quite clear that the initial onus is upon plaintiffs to prove that Balmokand was a partner in the firms, not in his individual capacity, but as representative of the whole of the joint Hindu family. The evidence on which the lower Court mainly relies in support of its finding is given on pages 186 and 187 of the printed paper-book. The first point taken is that when the partnership was started in Sambat 1943 Balmokand was a member of the joint Hindu family and, therefore, he, as a partner, represented therein the joint Hindu family. We have already dealt with this point and there is no necessity to say anything more about it.

The second point relied upon was a statement by Devi Das defendant made by him before Lala Dina Nath on the 7th February 1910. This merely related to the jointness of the family and had nothing to do with the question whether Balmokand as a member of the various partnerships represented the whole of the joint family or not. The third point taken is that Balmokand's father and brothers on various occasions did work for the firms at Peshawar and Hoti. The work they did was that they made entries in the account-books and wrote letters relating to the partnership business. Thus Sant Ram on the 29th January 1914 admitted before the Commissioner that entries on leaf 8 and leaves 13 to 25 of the cash book of the shop at Hoti were in his handwriting. The latter entries were made during the period from Jeth 4th to Jeth 32nd Sambat 1958 (see page 135 of the paper-book). Sant Ram stated that he used to go to Hoti for his own business and made these entries in the book at the instance of some other person. He also admitted certain entries on 5 or 6 pages of the bahi of the Peshawar shop to be in his handwriting. Thus it is said to be proved that Sant Ram participated in the management of the affairs at Peshawar and Hoti, Mr. Narang, however, points out that Sant Ram was on good terms with his brother Balmokand and had his own business both at Peshawar and Hoti, and that there is no reason why on some occasions he should not have helped him by making entries in his account-books. The fact that Sant Ram made entries sometimes in the Peshawar account books does not, in our opinion, lead to any inference at all. Ram Chand and Sant Ram had themselves a shop at Peshawar and they must often have visited the shop of Balmokand, being members of the same family and presumably on good terms, and there was nothing remarkable in their occasionally helping him in his business.

The lower Court next referred to a letter dated 20th Poh 1944 in the handwriting of Ram Chand. This letter was written from Peshawar on behalf of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal to Kanshi Ram Jawahri at Amritsar. This solitary instance of Ram Chand's writing a letter for the firm of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal does not, in our opinion, prove that Ram Chand helped in the management of that firm. Mr. Narang very pertinently argues that a father might very well look after his son's shop in his temporary absence. The contents of the letter show that Balmokand was absent at Amritsar at the time. The lower Court then referred to the letter dated 22nd Katak 1945 (page 48 of the paper-book) written by Gandoo from Peshawar on behalf of the firm Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal to Kanshi Ram Jawahri at Amritsar. Gandoo as brother of Sant Ram might very easily have helped the latter occasionally by writing a letter of this sort for him. Moreover, Gandoo at one period worked for the firm of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal as a servant, and received pay as such, see page 34 of the paper-book, where is printed an extract from rokar bahi of the shop at Peshawar which shows that in Phagan 1949 Gandoo was receiving pay from the shop. At the time when the letter D 3 was written, Gandoo may have been working as a servant of the firm. The letter D 2 dated 16th Har 1953 (page 51 of the paper-book) is the next piece of evidence referred to. It was written by Mahant Ram on behalf of the Peshawar firm to Kanshi Ram, but for the reasons already given by us we consider it proves nothing.

The letter Exhibit X dated 21st Maghar 1961 (page 36 of the paper-book) was written on behalf of the Hoti firm to Madho Mal Parem Das of Amritsar. It is in the handwriting of Balmokand, who was admittedly a member of that firm, and was to the effect that money should be sent by the hand of Sant Ram. This letter, in our opinion, proves nothing in favour of the plaintiffs. The letter Z of the 28th Maghar 1961 (page 38 of the paper-book) is also from Balmokand in continuation of the letter X and is to the effect that Sant Ram had arrived. The letter was written by Sant Ram, though it was signed by Balmokand. It shows that Balmokand was suffering from fever and this was quite a sufficient reason for Sant Ram to write the letter on his behalf. The mere fact that Sant Ram wrote it and Balmokand signed it shows, in our opinion, that it was written by Sant Ram on behalf of Balmokand and not by Sant Ram because he was a member of the firm. The letter Y dated 5th Poh 1961 is another letter from the firm of Kanshi Ram Balmokand of Hoti and is in the handwriting of Sant Ram defendant. It was written about a week after the letter Z. Sant Ram apparently stayed a few days at Hoti because Balmokand had fever and there was nothing remarkable in his writing this letter also.

The lower Court in its judgment (at the bottom of page 187 of the paper book) refers to the existence of the family shop at Benares whose account books were written by Balmokand for 19 or 20 days. It appears from the evidence that a criminal case was brought against Balmokand and that after the conclusion of it he went to Benares.

On the way back he stopped at Amritsar, where he died. We see nothing remarkable in his having made entries in the Benares books for a few days. He probably went there to see his relations and could very well assist them in making entries in the account books while he was there, even if he was not himself a partner in the shop. Mr. Narang has referred to the following evidence in support of the contentions put forward by him that Balmokand was a member of the various partnerships in his own individual capacity only:—

(1) After Kanshi Ram's death an agreement was executed by Balmokand and Madho Mal and by Musammat Kahan Devi and Kanhya Lal, as guardians of Kedar Nath and Amar Nath, on the 19th October 1905 in reference to the shop at Hoti Mardan. This is printed at pages 54 and 55 of the paper-book. It shows that the partners in the firm stopped business of the shop as from that date. This agreement refers to Balmokand in his individual capacity and makes no mention at all of his father or brothers. After the accounts were gone into, a further agreement was executed on 8th Poh 1962, i. e., December 1905. It is printed at page 53 of the paper-book. This agreement makes Balmokand personally responsible for the re-payment of the capital invested in the firm by Madho Mal and Kanshi Ram respectively. Again there is no mention of any other member of the family. In our opinion these two agreements very strongly support the argument of the appellants' Counsel that Balmokand was a member of those firms in his individual capacity only and not as representing the joint Hindu family of which he was a member. We think that had Ram Chand been a partner, he would certainly have been made to join in the execution of these agreements.

(2) Mr. Narang referred to the oral evidence as to the existence of a separate shop at Peshawar called Ram Chand-Sant Ram. We had already adverted to this and it is unnecessary to say any thing more about it.

(3) Prem Das's statement (printed at page 81 of the paper book) is referred to, wherein he admitted that Ram Chand was not a partner of the shop after 1942. This statement does not bind the plaintiffs in any way and can be considered as an admission by Prem Das only.

(4) Certain entries in the account-books of Kanshi Ram's private firm at Amritsar (printed at page 11 of the paper book) are referred to. In these accounts separate debits are shown against Ram Chand and Balmokand, from which the inference is sought to be drawn that they were separate. There is no other evidence about these entries and we are, therefore, not able to attach much value to them.

(5) The entry on page 34 is referred to which shows that Gandoo was receiving pay from the firm of Kanshi Ram-Madho Mal. This, so far as it goes, leads to the inference that Gandoo himself was not a partner in that firm.

(6) The Will of Kanshi Ram (pages 36 and 37 of the paper-book) is referred to, but in our opinion it is not proved nor is the firkhati (printed at page 47 of the paper-book) proved.

(7) Separate payment of tamol by Gandoo and Balmokand and by Ram Chand, mentioned in Sant Ram's statement printed at page 143 of the paper book, is referred to as showing separation. It is, however, not clear that the Ram Chand referred to in the entry in question is Ram Chand the father of Balmokand or some other Ram Chand.

(8) It is urged by Mr. Narang that there has been delay in bringing the present case. It was not brought by the plaintiffs till nearly four years after the agreement of December 1905. The plaintiffs being minors might, no doubt, have some excuse for not suing sooner, but defendants Nos. 6 to 8, the sons of Madho Mal, also brought no suit and allowed their claim, if any, to become barred by time. It is certainly remarkable that if the latter thought they were entitled to anything, they did not bring a suit. The Commissioner has laid great stress on the fact that Sant Ram appeared to have a very intimate acquaintance with all the account books. It must, however, be remembered that Sant Ram is a member of the same family and is apparently on good terms with his brother Balmokand. He appears to have travelled about to Hoti and Amritsar and elsewhere and no doubt was often in the shops at Hoti and Amritsar. Sant Ram helped in the examination of the bahis and in the preparation of the chithas referred to in the Commissioner's report. In the course of the examination of the account books he must have become acquainted with them very thoroughly and we do not think, therefore, that very much stress should be laid upon the fact that he appeared to possess knowledge of the various details of these accounts.

We have carefully considered all the facts and the arguments of Counsel and we are clearly of opinion that it has not been proved that Balmokand was a member of the various partnerships as representing the joint family of which he was a member. The facts that Sant Ram sometimes made entries in the account books of the firm and that he, Ram Chand and Mahant Ram occasionally wrote letters for those firms do not, in our opinion, at all prove that those persons were also partners in the firms. The firms were in existence for some 20 years and the number of instances in which these persons are proved to have assisted in the business of the firms are comparatively few and not sufficient, in our opinion, to give rise to the presumption that they were really interested in the affairs of those firms. We think that the agreements come to between Balmokand and the other partners at the time, when the business at Hoti was closed, are very strong evidence to show that Balmokand was a member of the firm merely in his individual capacity and not as representative of the joint Hindu family.

We, therefore, are of opinion that the appeal of Sant Ram and Mohan Lal must succeed. We accept their appeal and set aside the decree against them. Neither Gandoo nor Musammat Vaid Kaur have appealed, but the decree against them proceeds on the same grounds as against Sant Ram and Mohan Lal and, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred upon us by Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, we set aside the decree against them also as well as against Sant Ram and Mohan Lal.

The cross-objections filed by the plaintiffs-respondents need not now be gone into nor is it necessary for us to go into the question of the accounts. With reference to the cross-objections filed by defendants Nos. 6, 7 and 8 it is necessary for us to say a few words. Devi Das, as already stated, has not appealed, and the question is whether the cross-objections of defendants Nos. 6 to 8, the co-respondents in this appeal, can be heard as against him. In Bishun Churn Roy Chowdhry v. Jogendra Nath Roy (4) it was held that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellant, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge a cross-objection against another respondent, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents. The same view was taken in Shabiuddin v. Deomoorat Koer (5), where the general rule was followed that the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections under section 561 of the Civil Procedure Code should be limited to his urging them against the appellant only.

(4) 26 C. 114; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 677.
(5) 50 C. 655.

In the present case as we have held that Balmokand was a member of the various firms in his individual capacity only, it is unnecessary for us to open up the whole case and to go into the accounts and to see whether the lower Court had disallowed any items which should have been allowed. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the general rule must be followed in the present case and that defendantsNos. 6 to 8 cannot be allowed to urge their cross objections against Devi Das who has not filed any appeal from the decree passed against him. We, therefore, disallow the cross objections of defendants Nos. 6 to 8. The decree against Devi Das, who has not appealed, is not affected by the present order. We direct that the plaintiffsand defendants Nos. 6 to 8 respondents shall pay the costs of the appellants in both Courts.

Appeal accepted; Cross-objection disallowed.

THE DISTRICT JUDGE OF THE 24-PARGUNNAS—OPPOSITE-PARTY.

Muhammadan Law—Endowment—Mutwalli, lease by—Sanction of Court—Suit, whether necessary—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 92.

To enable the Mutwalli of a Muhammadan endowment to grant a lease of a piece of land comprised in the endowment, it is sufficient to obtain the sanction of the District Judge. It is not necessary for such purpose to institute a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 475, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the District Judge, 24 Pergunnas, dated the 10th November 1919.

Mr. Nuruddin Ahmed, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner before us is the Mutwalli of a Muhammadan endowment and she applied to the District Judge for sanction to grant a lease of a piece of land comprised in the endowment. The learned District Judge disallowed the application on the ground that it was necessary for the Mutwalli to bring a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code with the consent of the Advocate-General.

We do not think it is necessary for the Mutwalli to institute a suit under section 92 of the Code. Under the Muhammadan Law, a trustee is not entitled to let out immoveable property for more than one year, or three years in certain cases, without the sanction of the Kazi. The powers of the Kazi are ordinarily exercised by the District Judge in the Mufasil and the sanction given by the District Judge on an application by the Mutwalli may be sufficient authority for the Mutwalli for letting out the property. The learned District Judge was of opinion that it was necessary to bring a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, in a case like this because sub-section 2 of that section provides that "Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section."

That evidently relates to a suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1). But the present application for sanction is not a suit under sub-section (1) of section 92. We may refer to a passage in Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, page 480, where the learned Author says: "The application for sanction should be made to the District Judge if the property is situated in the Mufassil or to the Judge on the Original Side of the High Court if it is within a presidency town. It is not necessary to bring a suit for obtaining such sanction; it will be granted upon a proper application being made by the Mutwalli. If there are Nazirs, their consent should be obtained as a condition precedent to the application. If the wakf is of a public nature, notice should be given to the beneficiaries in any mode the Judge directs either by advertisement in newspapers or by posting it up at the institution to which the wakf property belongs."

Any application made by the Mutwalli will, of course, be inquired into by the District Judge before sanctioning a lease as Kazi, and the manner in which the inquiry may be made is indicated above.

We are accordingly of opinion that the order of the Court below must be set aside and the case sent back to the learned District Judge in order that he may enquire into the merits of the application and dispose of it according to law.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

Order set aside;
Case remanded.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1195 OF 1918.

December 11, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

MUTHUSAMI IYER—DEFENDANT No. 17—APPELLANT

VARADA VYROYAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS Nos. 1 TO 12, 14 TO 16 AND PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, proviso (2)—Construction of document—Ambiguity—Intention of parties—Oral evidence, admissibility of.

Where effect can be given to every word used in a document, it is not open to the parties to adduce evidence as regards their intention, but where certain words, the use of which is superfluous, render the document ambiguous and it is clear that the parties intended something different from what has been actually written, then under section 92, proviso (2) of the Evidence Act, oral evidence is admissible to show what the parties really intended. [p. 477, col. 1.]

The provision regarding interest in a document ran as follows: "I shall pay for the aforesaid sum every year calculating interest at ten kalams of paddy per year":

Held, that the word 'calculating' would be meaningless unless there was a basis on which the calculation was to be made and the document being silent as to the basis, oral evidence was admissible to show what the basis was. [p. 477, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 100 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangiman in Original Suit No. 338 of 1914.

FACTS.—It was stated in a bond on a loan of Rs. 300 that interest was payable every year "calculated at the rate of 10 kalams per year". The question, which turned upon the construction of this phrase, was whether external evidence was admissible to explain its meaning. The lower Court refused to admit such evidence.

This second appeal and the memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 came on for hearing on the 17th and 18th September 1919, before Seshagiri Aiyar and Moore, JJ.

Mr. S. Jagadisa Aiyar, for the Appellants.—Where there is any latent ambiguity in a document, evidence, both oral and of subsequent conduct, is admissible to show the real meaning. Subramania Iyer v. Rajeswara Sethupathi (1). The subsequent conduct of the parties is the best guide to show who the ambiguous portion was understood by them.

Mr. S. Viswanatha Aiyar, for Plaintiff-Respondents.—The words in question are capable of a clear meaning without external help. So external evidence is excluded in law. See Bal Kishen Das v. W. F. Legge (2), Dattoo v. Ramchandra (3), Abaji v. Laxman (4), Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju (5), Protap Chandra Saha v. Mohamed Ali Sarkar (6), Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (7) and Venkatasubba Sastrial v. Subramania Aiyar (8). The 10 kalams is the interest on the whole loan in the absence of words "per 100" or other words to that effect. Subramania Iyer v. Rajeswara Sethupathi (1) does not, therefore, apply.

Mr. S. Jagadisa Aiyar, in reply.—The provision for yearly payment of interest would be a mere repetition, if read as contended. I submit that there is a latent ambiguity. Compare Watcham v. East Africa Protectorate (9).

Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar, for some other Respondents.—If section 92 does not apply, section 97 of the Indian Evidence Act applies. And evidence may be adduced to show to which set of two existing facts the language used was intended to apply. In the bond, the interest is payable yearly and is to be calculated. There is no calculation required if the rate was for the whole lot. The principle is explained in Redfern, In re, Redfern v. Bryning (10).

Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether evidence can be given as to the meaning to be attached to certain expressions in Exhibit A. The provision as to interest translated literally is as follows:—"I have borrowed from you Rs. 300 0 0... .....I shall pay.....for the aforesaid sum every year calculating interest at ten Kalams of paddy per year within the 30th of Masi and have the payments of the same endorsed hereon." The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the words "calculating interest" would be meaningless unless there is some basis on which the calculation is to be made. On the other hand, the Vakil for respondents Nos. 1 and 2 contends that the document read as a whole can be given effect to, and that there is no ambiguity in the language. The learned Vakil's contention is that the language, as it is translated, amounts to saying that the ten Kalams of paddy is to be the interest upon the whole sum of Rs. 300-0-0 borrowed under the document. If that meaning can be attributed to the document, he contends that it is not open to us to speculate as to what was the intention of the parties. If we are clear that the document, as it stands, that is, every word of the document, as it stands, can be given effect to, then there can be no doubt that it is not open to the parties to adduce evidence as regards their intention. But, as we pointed out, the words "calculating interest" do contemplate that there is some basis upon which the calculation is to be made. As Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar argued before us, all the words of the document cannot be given effect to, if the contention of the 1st and 2nd respondents is to be accepted. The words "calculating interest" would be then superfluous. We have no right to assume that the writer of the document used superfluous words. If once we come to the conclusion that there is no superfluity, the document becomes ambiguous and it is open to the parties to adduce evidence to explain its real intention.

A number of cases were quoted before us by Mr. Visvanatha Aiyar for 1st and 2nd respondents. No doubt the Judicial Committee have held in Bal Kishen Das v. W. F. Legge (2) and Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (7) that it is not open to the parties to adduce oral evidence when the document is clear and explicit. He also relied upon the decision in Protap Chandra Saha v. Mohamed Ali Sarkar (6). But that was different from the present case. In the present case, unless we are prepared to agree with the learned Vakil for respondents Nos. 1 and 2 that the language "calculating interest" should have no operation, we are bound to accept the argument of the appellant that the parties intended something different from what has been actually written in the document. In these circumstances, proviso 2 to section 92 of the Evidence Act is applicable to the case. The document is silent as to the basis on which the calculation is to be made and, therefore, oral evidence is admissible to show what the basis is. It may be that respondents Nos. 1 and 2 may be able to satisfy the lower Court that the parties really intended to provide only ten Kalams as interest for the whole of Rs. 300. That conclusion may be come to on looking into the evidence which has been let in the case. The Subordinate Judge has held, relying upon some of the decisions quoted by him, that oral evidence is not admissible. In our opinion he is wrong. Under the circumstances, we must call upon the Subordinate Judge to return a finding in the light of the above observations on the question whether ten Kalams represent the interest due on the amount of Rs. 300 or upon each one hundred of the Rs. 300 [illegible] evidence will be allowed. Six weeks are allowed for submission of finding and seven days for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDING.—In this second appeal their Lordships of the Madras High Court remitted the following issue for a finding to be given on the evidence already on record.

The issue is:—

"Whether 10 Kalams mentioned in Exhibit A represent the interest due on the amount of Rs. 300-0-0 (Rupees three hundred) or upon each one hundred of the Rs. 300 0-0 (three hundred rupees)."

The endorsements on Exhibits A and B are quite clear as to the rate of interest the parties have stipulated for. At page 7 of the printed book of select documents, we find that towards interest due for three years, 90 Kalams of paddy was paid on 11th May 1899 under Exhibit A-1, and a similar endorsement for the subsequent payment of three years ending with 12th May 1902 was also made under Exhibit A-2. A payment of Rs. 200 was made towards the principal on 12th May 1902 and an endorsement to that effect was made on that day. Another endorsement of payment of 10 Kalams of paddy due on 12th May 1903 was also made on that day towards the interest due for one year on the balance of principal of Rs. 100. These three endorsements make it clear that the payments of interest were made at the rate of 10 Kalams for every Rs. 100-0-0. Similarly we find at page 9 of the printed papers that towards the interest due on Exhibit B for three years ending with 20th June 1902 75 Kalams of paddy was delivered as the interest of Rs. 250, as the endorsement on Exhibit B would show. Defendants' 2nd witness, whose evidence is printed at page 17, refers to all these payments. The learned District Munsif has also discussed the evidence in paragraphs 15 and 16 of his judgment and found that the rate stipulated for was 10 Kalams for every Rs. 100 and I quite agree with him. I, therefore, find on the issue that 10 Kalams mentioned in Exhibit A represent the interest due upon each one hundred of the three hundred rupees.

This second appeal and the memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by substituting the figure 2,500 for the figure 1,298-4-4 in the lower Court's decree printed at line 23 of page 46 of the printed paper. This figure is agreed to by both the Vakils.

As a consequence of the above modification paragraph 4 of the decree must be deleted. The decree will make it clear that this modification enures for the benefit of defendants Nos. 9 to 11 as well.

Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court as against respondents Nos. 1 to 8. The time for redemption will be four months from this date. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with the costs of the appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the estate of Sardar Bahadur Rattan Singh, a Kapur Khatri of Kala in the District of Jhelum, who died in 1905 leaving house property as well as landed property. The following pedigree-table explains the relationship of the different persons interested in this litigation:—

RAJ RUP.

Dal Singh. | Mahbub Singh, | Halram Rai. | Wazir Singh.

Mahbub Singh,
S. B. Rattan Singh
=Musammat Ganesh Devi (P. No. 1.)

Gulab Singh, | S. Sher Singh (P. No. 2.)

Gulab Singh,
Darshan Singh minor, defendant.

On the death of Rattan Singh his two sons Gulab Singh and Sher Singh became the joint owners of his estate, and upon the former's death in January 1914 his minor son Darshan Singh was recorded as a joint owner with his uncle. It appears that the family continued to be joint until 1915, when on account of certain disputes several applications were made on behalf of the minor for the partition of the landed estate. Musammat Ganesh Devi, the widow of Rattan Singh, taking advantage of the partition proceedings, applied to the Revenue Officer praying that, as under the Hindu Law she, on partition, was entitled to a share equal to that of each of her male descendants, she should be allotted land representing that share. Her application was rejected by the Revenue Officer on the ground that she was not recorded as a joint owner in the revenue records, and she was directed to institute a suit in the Civil Court in order to obtain declaration of her title to a share in the estate.

In compliance with that direction Musammat Ganesh Devi, along with her son Sher Singh, brought the present action against her minor grandson Darshan Singh to obtain a declaration that each of the three members of the family was entitled to 1/3rd of the estate on partition. This claim was resisted by the defendant on the ground that the parties followed custom, in accordance with which a female in the position of Musammat Ganesh Devi was entitled, not to a share in the estate, but only to maintenance. The Subordinate Judge has upheld this contention, and dismissed the suit, with the result that the plaintiffs have come up to this Court on appeal in order to show that the custom set up by the defendant has not been established.

Now it is beyond question that, as the parties are high caste Hindus and do not depend upon agriculture for their livelihood, the ordinary presumption is that they are governed by the provisions of the Hindu Law, and the onus rests heavily upon the defendant to establish the existence of a custom at variance with that law. The rule of the Mitakshra Law is firmly established that a mother is entitled only to maintenance until partition, and that she can never herself demand a partition. But if a partition takes place by the act of others, not being strangers, she will be entitled to receive a share, if the effect of that partition is to break up or diminish the estate out of which she would otherwise be maintained. Vide Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, paragraph 479.

There can be no doubt that the defendant took proceedings for the partition of the joint estate, and that fact gave Musammat Ganesh Devi a right to claim a share equal to that of her son or grandson, vide Musammat Pal Devi v. Fakir Chand (1). The vital question for determination is whether the right conferred upon her by Hindu Law has been taken away by a valid custom binding upon the parties. Now, we have carefully examined the evidence adduced by both the parties on this subject and reached the conclusion that the defendant, on whom the onus rested, has failed to discharge it. Our attention has been invited by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for the respondent to ten instances (see pages 24 and 25 of the paper-book where these instances are set out), six of which are said to relate to Kapur Khatris and the remaining four to Khatris of other sub-castes. The first thing, which strikes us with respect to these instances, is the fact that there is not a single document to establish any of them, and a perusal of the testimony of the witnesses shows that, while they make bald statements, they do not give any particulars of the instances deposed to by them. Accordingly we are unable to ascertain the exact circumstances in which the females did not get their share. Now, it is a matter of common knowledge that a widowed mother among the Hindus ordinarily prefers to live with her sons, even if the latter effect a partition of the joint estate; and that she does dot desire to assert against them her right to a share in the estate. Her inaction may be due to ignorance of her rights under the Hindu Law or, as it sometimes happens, to her desire to allow her sons to take the whole of the estate.

Instances of the description described above cannot be regarded as a satisfactory proof of a custom contrary to the doctrine of Hindu Law on the subject. Indeed, even the meagre information supplied by the witnesses for the defendant shows that in at least three instances, namely, those relating to the partition of the estates of Hira Nand Khanna, Sakhira Mal Malhotra and Shib Dial Malhotra, the mother either resided with one or other of her sons or made no objection to the sons dividing the whole of the joint property among themselves; and we think that something very similar must have happened in other cases.

In order to establish a custom of this kind, in which the interests of a female are in conflict with those of a male, it must be shown by clear and cogent evidence that there was actually an assertion of her claim by the female and a denial by the male. As observed already, mere inaction, which may be due to various causes, e g., mutual good will or ignorance of the law, affords no indication of the fact that the rule of Hindu Law has been abrogated and a custom at variance with it has taken its place.

The plaintiffs have made an attempt to prove four instances in which the mother is said to have got a share along with her sons on a partition of the joint estate. Here again, the evidence, which is wholly oral, does not appear to be satisfactory, but as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, there is at least one instance which has been satisfactorily established. It appears from the evidence of the plaintiffs' witness Kirpal Singh that his father's estate was divided equally among his three sons and his widow, and that the witness's mother is still alive and enjoys the profits of 1/4th of the estate. This instance, in which the widowed mother got her share on partition equal to that of each of her sons, is, in our opinion, entitled to great weight. It is certainly more valuable than half a dozen or more instances, in which a mother for some reason or other did not choose to assert her right and decided to live amicably with her sons.

On an examination of the entire evidence before us, we are not satisfied that any custom depriving the mother of her share in accordance with Hindu Law has been established. We cannot, therefore, confirm the finding of the District Judge on the question on which the case has been fought out between the parties.

VELU PADAYACHI v. ARUMUGAM PILLAI.

The only other matter urged by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for the respondent is the contention that the plaintiffs should have filed a suit for possession and not for a mere declaration. Now, it is admitted by the learned Counsel that this objection has no application to the landed estate and is confined to the house property. There can be no manner of doubt that one of the plaintiffs, Sher Singh, is in joint possession of all the houses; and he was not, therefore, called upon to sue for possession. Further, Musammat Ganesh Devi is residing in the family dwelling house, and as her son Sher Singh, who does not dispute her right to joint possession, is probably in actual possession of the other houses, we consider that the suit for declaration was rightly brought, more especially when it is not shown that the minor defendant is in exclusive possession of any of the houses.

For the reasons recorded above, we accept the appeal and grant a decree that the plaintiff, Sher Singh, is entitled to 1/3rd of the joint estate, and that Musammat Ganesh Devi is entitled, in the event of the joint estate being partitioned, to a similar share. As regards costs, we observe that Sher Singh's right to a share in the estate was never disputed, and that the controversy was confined to the claim made by Musammat Ganesh Devi. Having regard to the value of that claim, we direct that the plaintiffs shall recover half the costs incurred in both the Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 62, 63—Limitation Act (IX of 1908*), Sch. I, Art.* 11—Sale in execution—Application to have encumbrance recognised, dismissal of, effect of—Suit to contest order—Limitation.

The effect of an order dismissing an application to have it recognised that property about to be sold is subject to an encumbrance in favour of the applicant, is that the property is free of the encumbrance, and such order becomes final against both the applicant and the judgment-debtor, unless a suit is brought within one year to contest it. [p. 483, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, dated the 19th February 1919, in Appeal Suit No. 217 of 1916, on the file of the District Court of South Arcot, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, South Arcot District, in Original Suit No. 434 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff's suit was barred as it was not filed within one year of the order on the claim petition. The order on the claim petition was virtually one under Order XXI, rule 58. The claimant prayed that in settling the terms of the sale proclamation it be mentioned that the sale was subject to his mortgage. When that petition was dismissed, the sale was virtually one free from encumbrance. That order was outstanding against the plaintiff and plaintiff should have moved for the vacation of that order within the statutory period of one year. The substance and not the form of the claim application has to be looked to. The mortgagee cannot ignore the order and treat it as a nullity. The order is one relating to an existing liability under a mortgage.

The cases in Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damco Nathu (1) and Ayya Pattar v. Attupurath Manakkal (2) are distinguishable. See the Full Bench decision in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma (3).

The auction-purchaser has a substantial right to resist the suit. He is interested in securing a good title and is entitled to raise the plea of limitation.

spondents.—The mortgagee's claim fell under Order XXI, rule 66. There was no prayer in it for the raising of the attachment and the order did not in terms set out that the mortgage was no longer subsisting. The order will only bind parties and those privy to it and the auction purchaser, not having been a party to the claim proceedings, has no locus standi to resist this suit. See Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damoo Nathu (1) and Vadapalli Narasimham v. Dronamaraju Seetharamamurthy (4).

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The properties in suit were attached and brought to sale in execution of a simple money decree. After the decree was passed, the judgment debtor (1st defendant) executed a usufructuary mortgage over them in favour of the 2nd defendant in this suit, who, in his turn, assigned his mortgage rights to the present plaintiff. When the present plaintiff sued to recover possession of the properties on the strength of the mortgage, an objection was raised by the 3rd defendant, who was the auction-purchaser at the sale in execution of the simple money-decree, that the suit was barred by limitation.

It appears that the plaintiff's assignor applied a few days before the sale to have the properties sold subject to his mortgage and asked the Court to have it so stated in the sale proclamation. The claim was dismissed as being made too late. The date of the order was 24th August 1911. The present suit was not instituted till 1916 and is clearly out of time if Article 11 of the Limitation Act applies to it. The Subordinate Judge, dissenting from the view of the District Munsif, held that the suit was in time as the mortgagee's application on 24th August 1911 was, in his opinion, directed towards the settling of the terms of the sale proclamation and, as such, fell under Order XXI, rule 66, Civil Procedure Code, and not under rule 58.

The respondent seeks to support the lower Appellate Court's order on the ground that there was no prayer in the application that the attachment should be raised, nor any declaration in the order that the mortgage was no longer subsisting. He further argues that, assuming the order of 24th August 1911 was an order upon a claim petition, such an order will only bind those who were parties to it and, therefore, an auction purchaser who was not a party to those proceedings cannot take advantage of the fact that the claim was dismissed.

I am of opinion that none of these representations and arguments can avail the plaintiff who has come to Court after the period prescribed by law.

In the first place I may say I am not much influenced either by the fact that Exhibit I terms itself a claim petition and that the 2nd defendant in 3 places describes himself in that petition as a claim petitioner, or, on the other hand, by the fact that the provision of law under which it was presented is given as Order XXI, rule 66. We must look at the substance of the application. It was one to have it recognised by the Court that the property about to be sold was subject to an encumbrance in favour of the petitioner.

The effect of the dismissal of this application was to create a belief in the minds of those who bid for the property that the property was free of encumbrance.

Can the mortgagee or his representative be allowed to ignore the Court's order, to which he was a party, and proceed as if there had been no such proceedings and as if what was sold was an encumbered property?

I think the dismissal of his application was not a nullity. In Lakshumanan Chettiar v. Parasivan Pillai (5), which followed our earlier decision in Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (6), it was pointed out that one form of order to be made under the head of investigation of claims and objections in Order XXI, Code of Civil Procedure, is that definitely provided for in rule 62, which permits a Court to continue an attachment subject to a mortgage in favour of a person not in possession. The learned Judges observed that if one particular form of order on the claim on a mortgage can be passed, then any claim that relates to an alleged mortgage or the existing liability under a mortgage must be a claim under rule 58. I think that we should follow the above two decisions of this Court, and that Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damoo Nathu (1), which was a case of a mortgagee asserting his title in response to a notice of the Court calling for objections to a sale proclamation, is distinguishable.

The case of Ayya Pattar v. Attupurath Manakkal (2) may be distinguished on the ground that the application in that case was merely to have certain objections to an auction recorded and did not ask for any order on the merits of the petition.

The Full Bench decision in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma (3) is conclusive on the point that an order dismissing a claim petition for delay, delay being one of the grounds under which claims may be dismissed under the proviso to rule 58, is an order which becomes final against its claimant under rule 63, unless he files a suit within one year of the order. This disposes of the respondent's first two objections and of the Subordinate Judge's reasoning. As regards the third objection, it is obvious that the auction-purchaser is very much interested in obtaining a good title to his purchase and being a party (3rd defendant) to this suit, he can raise any objection such as limitation that may serve as a bar to the maintenance of the suit.

Now that the time has expired for instituting a suit to establish the right that was in effect negatived in the claim proceedings, the question is not one of estoppel or res judicata arising out of the former proceedings, but one of limitation. This does not depend on any nice question of law whether the auction purchaser represents the mortgagee's or the judgment-debtor's interest after the sale. It is sufficient answer to the respondent's objection to say that the plaintiff is necessarily bound by the final order on his assignor's claim petition and that any defendant, especially one who is in possession of the property sought to be recovered by the suit, can raise the plea of limitation.

This appeal must be allowed and the District Munsif's decree restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. An ingenious argument was advanced, namely that because the auction-purchaser is the representative of the judgment debtor and because the judgment-debtor was not a party to the order on the claim petition, he cannot take advantage of the order on the claim petition when it is passed against the claimant any more than he would be bound by that order if it had been in favour of the claimant; and for this proposition Vadapalli Narasimham v. Dronamaraju Seetharamamurthy (4) was quoted. In that case and in the cases following it and in the Full Bench case in Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (7), which it professes to follow, no sale had taken place on the basis of the order disallowing the claim petition and the only question was whether as between the claimant on the one hand and the judgment-debtor on the other, either would be bound by the order on the claim petition. But it has never been held that the claimant is not himself bound by the order in favour of the decree-holder disallowing the claim of the former (unless, of course, he sets aside the order within one year) and if the Court auction-purchaser cannot take advantage of that order in favour of the decree-holder, the result would be that such an order becomes absolutely futile and would have no effect or even evidentiary value as regards the extent of title conveyed under the auction-sale to the purchaser therein. In other words, the unsuccessful claimant, who has not made the judgment debtor a party to the claim proceedings, can again put forward his claims against the auction-purchaser, whether as plaintiff or as defendant. No case has been quoted in which it has been held that such a startling result follows the omission to make the judgment debtor a party in the claim proceedings. On the other hand, it has been held in several cases that the judgment-debtor is not a necessary party to a claim proceeding and that the proper parties to such proceedings are the decree-holder and the claimant. Of course, if the judgment-debtor intervenes and actively opposes the claim along with the decree holder and the claim petition succeeds, he may be bound by the order unless he sets it aside within one year, as the order may be then said to be passed against him also. But ordinarily, it is the decree-holder's right to bring the property to sale against the claim of the claimant and the claimant's right to have the property released (or sold subject to the claim) which are litigated in such a petition. The auction purchaser is entitled to take advantage of the order against the claimant in such a case (if it is not set aside by a suit within one year), not because the purchaser is the representative of the decree-holder, but because the order which established the right of the decree-holder to bring the property to sale against the claim of the claimant cannot be given effect to otherwise and was clearly intended by the Legislature to have the effect of precluding the claimant from putting forward his claim again in opposition to the auction-purchaser at the sale held in pursuance of the order against the claimant. The conclusive establishment of the decree-holder's right to bring the property to sale free from the claimant's alleged incumbrance involves the right of the purchaser at that sale to get a title to the property free from such encumbrance.

I concur in allowing the appeal with costs.

JETHOMAL SON OF VISHNOMAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Jagirdar, agreement by, with zemindars for commutation of customary dues—Agreement, whether can be avoided—Jagirs in Sind—Grant, nature of.

A jagirdar entered into an agreement with certain zemindars holding permanent rights in the jagir land, whereby he bound himself to accept certain rates in cash and kind in consideration of the customary dues he was entitled as jagirdar to receive. On the death of the jagirdar his son brought the present suit to avoid this agreement on the grounds that by the terms of the grant conferring the jagir a limited estate only was conveyed, the grantee's rights to alienate being restricted, that the agreement did not create permanent rights, and that he was not bound thereby.

Held, upon a consideration of the history of alienations in Sind and the terms of the sanad conferring the jagir, that the intention of the grantors was to confer a hereditary estate in perpetuity without imposing any condition restricting alienation; that upon a proper construction of the agreement the intention was to make a permanent settlement, and that the plaintiff was bound thereby. [p. 487, col. 2; p. 488, col. 2; p. 489, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st plaintiff (hereinafter called the plaintiff) is the Jagirdar of the lands held by the defendants and as such entitled to recover certain customary dues. The defendants are Zamindars having permanent rights in the land. The normal method by which the Jagirdar recovers what is due to him is by an annual appraisement of the crop (batai) whereat a share of one-third is assigned to the Jagirdar. In the present case the father of the plaintiffs on May 2nd 1887 executed in favour of the father of the defendants and certain other Zamindars an agreement (Exhibit 55), whereby he bound himself to accept certain rates in cash and kind in consideration of the customary dues. It appears from paragraph 6 of that document that there had been similar agreements in the past and that this was merely one of a series, but these earlier agreements have not been made evidence by either party.

Stated broadly the question which falls to be decided in this appeal is, whether the rights of the Jagirdar on the one hand and the Zamindars on the other are governed by this agreement, or whether plaintiff can set it aside, and either claim enhanced cash rates, or revert to the earlier system of "batai." The lower Courts have answered this question against the plaintiff and hence the present appeal. The case made for the plaintiff is twofold. In the first place it is argued that qua Jagirdar his father could not enter into any agreement which would bind his successor and in the second place that the arrangement evidenced by Exhibit 55 was not intended to be permanent as between the parties to it and could not in any case be invoked by successors of such parties. There are thus two distinct matters for discussion, first, the nature of a Jagirdari estate such as is held by the plaintiff, and second, the correct construction and effect of Exhibit 55.

As to the first matter it is necessary to say a few words on the history of the Jagirs of Sind. Both parties have accepted as authoritative the account contained in the two volumes of the "History of Alienations in Sind" published under the authority of the Bombay Government, and the references in what follows are to the pages of that publication. The Jagir in the present case belongs to one of what are styled the "Four Great Families." These families, though not themselves ruling chiefs, were closely connected by blood with the Talpur Amirs who ruled Sind upto the date of the conquest in 1843 and their holdings were the subject of a separate settlement on the part of the British Government. The conquest of 1843, put an end to their rights, and forms the true starting point of this case. Before the conquest the rights of the Jagirdars were vague and ill defined (see pages 10 to 15) and were in no case more than grants for the term of the life of the grantor and the grantee (page 21). After the conquest the British Government took in hand the settlement of the Jagirs, and prolonged enquiries were made. As a result of these enquiries after a lapse of 18 years, Sanads were issued in 1861 for the purpose of defining the Jagirdars' rights in relation to the British Government. A detailed examination of the history of this settlement would be superfluous. It is sufficient to say that the intention manifested throughout was to confer hereditary rights in prepetuity. A few extracts will suffice. On the 22nd February 1847 Sir Charles Napier offered certain terms to the Jagirdars upon which they could have their holdings made perpetual (page 67). In 1850 Mr. Pringle, then Commissioner in Sind, held that this offer was still open, but the consideration of it must be deferred until full enquiries had been made (page 105). In 1853 Mr. Frere (afterwards Sir Bartle Frere), at that time Commissioner in Sind, held that the question was still open (page 129). In 1855 the question of a grant in perpetuity was still under consideration (page 177). In 1856 Colonel Jacob, then acting Commiesioner in Sind, advocated two courses with special reference to the Jagirs of the Four Great Families. The first was to leave the existing incumbents in possession for their lifetime of the estates which they held and on their deaths to resume the uncultivated portion and regrant the rest to their legitimate male heirs in perpetuity: the second to resume the whole on the death of the present holders, and to give pecuniary compensation to their heirs (page 192). In these preliminary stages of the discussion there is nothing to indicate any design to make a settlement in the form of a grant for one life only, or to restrict the rights of the Jagirdars to a succession of life estates.

Passing from the stage of preliminary discussion we find in 1858 a definite proposal submitted by the "Special Commissioner for Jagirs," which led directly to the settlement of the rights of the "Four Great Families" among which the plaintiff's family is included (see pages 210 to 219). In this report Mr. Ellis deprecates the second alternative advocated by Colonel Jacob (see paragraph 51) and proposes a re grant to the lineal male heirs. In dealing with this report the Government of Bombay recommended to the Government of India that "The Jagirs of the Talpurs on the death of the present incumbents should be continued to legitimate lineal male descendants" (page 221). On October 27, 1858, the Government of India accepted this proposal (page 230). In 1859 the Government of Bombay again addressed the Government of India on this subject and in so doing they classified these Jagirs as "hereditary" (page 241) in contradistinction to "grants for one life after the demise of the present holder" or "grants for the lifetime of the present holder." This classification was approved by the Government of India (page 242), and in 1859 the Secretary of State for India in Council decided that Jagirs should be "continued in perpetuity to lineal male descendants" (page 250).

This settlement is evidenced by the Sanad issued in 1861. In the case of the plaintiff's family the Sanad is in the form printed at page 442. The preamble recites the reason which moved the British Government to make the grant. The first paragraph confers a life estate on the existing incumbents in all the property then in their possession. The second paragraph confers upon the lineal male heirs a smaller estate of 70,000 bighas. The property now in suit is admittedly comprised in those 70,000 bighas, and the question is, what is the nature of the estate conferred. The plaintiff is the grandson in the male line of the original grantee, and there are admittedly no sharers in the estate.

Reading the Sanad in the light of the previous history, it is clear that there is no expressed intention to confer anything but an absolute estate. The only expressed condition is "loyalty and good behaviour" on the part of the grantee and his successors. The appellant's Pleader has laid stress on this condition as indicating that it was intended that the holder for the time being should have a life estate only. But it is not easy to see why a condition of continued loyalty is incompatible with an estate in other respects absolute. That the future support of the family was among the motives which induced the British Government to make the grant as recited in the preamble, suggests no doubt an intention that the property should not be alienated, but the operative portion of the grant contains no restrictive condition of this nature. It was also somewhat faintly argued that where a grant was of the royal share of the revenue only, there was a presumption that a life-estate only was intended, but no authority was cited for a proposition which is certainly not self evident. It is unnecessary to set out in detail the passages in the History of Alienations on which the Pleaders on either side have more specially relied. They have not been overlooked, but the general trend of the discussion shows beyond doubt an intention to confer an hereditary estate in perpetuity, and that appears to be the plain meaning of the Sanad.

But it was urged that in the light of certain decisions of the Privy Council it was incumbent on this Court to interpret the Sanad as conferring no more than a succession of life-estates. As to these decisions it must be said, speaking with all deference, that a reported case is no authority except upon its own facts. There are Jagir tenures all over India. In every part of the country the history of those tenures varies, and the terms of the Sanads also vary. No doubt, the decisions cited lay down most valuable guides to construction, of which this Court will gladly avail itself, but it is unsafe to seek to argue from Jagirs in Chhota Nagpur to Jagirs in Sind. In the words of the Privy Council, "The question depends upon the construction of the Sanad, but that construction may be aided by a consideration of the surrounding circumstances, and of the occasion on which it was granted": Gulabdas v. Collector of Surat (1). Here both the Sanad and the history of the case indicate an hereditary grant in perpetuity. A large number of cases have been cited, and if they are not discussed, it is because they are readily distinguishable. There are, however, two decisions of the Privy Council which have an important bearing on the matter, and which embody to a large extent the respective contentions of the parties before us. The first of these is the case last cited. The second is the case of Dosibai v. Ishvardas (2). In the former case it was held that the grant was hereditary but that each of the descendants of the grantee took it for life only. The decision is based on (1) the object of the grant, and (2) the special terms of the Sanad. The object was held to be "the maintenance of an important family" and so far the case is analogous to that now before us, but when we come to consider the special terms of the Sanad, all resemblance ceases. There 'Mahals' granted in Jagir were in effect part of a pension secured to the grantee by the Sanad and as the pension was plainly inalienable, it followed that the Jagir land was also inalienable. Their Lordships, "having regard to the peculiar character of this grant," held, that there was only a life estate. In the present case the only words in the Sanad which can be relied on in support of the appellant's view are "So that provision may be made not only to meet the present necessities but also for the future support of the sons and lineal male descendants of a certain member." Can these words in the preamble be held to control the grant so as to exclude the ordinary meaing of the words, "it is ordered that the amount of 70,000 bighas be accorded to the lineal male heirs," which appear in the operative part of the document? The meaning of such words is laid down by the Privy Council in the second of the two cases cited, Dosibai v. Ishvardas (2): "where there is a grant to a man and his heirs and nothing to control the ordinary meaning of the words, the grantee takes an absolute interest."

(1) 3 B. 186 at p. 189; 6 I. A. 54; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 889; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 125.

(2) 15 B. 222 (P. C.); 18 I. A. 22; 15 Ind. Jur. 154 & 281; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 10; 8 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 150.

The essential question is what was the intention of the grantor, and in this connection it is relevent to consider the view which was held at the time of the issue of the Sanad as to the right of a Jagirdar to alienate his land. The Sanad in the present case was issued on May 23, 1861. During the discussion which preceded its issue the question of gardens was under consideration, and it is admitted that these holdings were treated as being on an entirely different footing from other holdings in Sind. The reasons need not be discussed. The fact is admitted. In 1858 (see page 371) the Government of Bombay write as follows:—"A garden being to a certain extent private property, the owner is at liberty to sell, transfer, give, or bequeath the same to any individual." The question of garden lands was referred to the Government of India at the same time as the general question of Jagirs, and the orders of the Government of India on both questions are contained in letter No. 711 of April 5, 1859 (pages 242 and 373). It is clear that those gardens were regarded as an exception to a general rule "being to a certain extent private property" in contradistinction to the Jagirs which were originally held for the performance of public services. The orders of the Government of India are contained in paragraph 17 of the letter last cited in the following words: —"Transfer cannot be allowed except in the case of garden lands." It is, therefore, clear that at the date when the Sanad was issued there was no intention to restrict the Jagirdar's right of transfer. This could be done either by the terms of the grant, or by separate orders. The Sanad, as has been seen, contains no express condition forbidding alienations, and it would appear that it was not regarded as having that effect. It was in substance drafted by Mr. Inverarity, at that time Commissioner of Sind (page 255), and in October 1861 after the issue of the Sanad, he writes: "The question of exchange and transfer of any but garden lands in alienation should not be entertained except on very special grounds" (page 278). It is hardly possible that these words should have been used had the Sanad itself been drafted with the object of preventing alienation. It seems fairly clear that the general power of the Government was considered a sufficient safeguard. It needs little knowledge of the early condition of Sind to know that in those days the Commissioner had power to make rules which had in practice at least the force of law. It was upon this power and not upon any condition attached to the grant that reliance was placed to prevent alienations by Jagirdars. The manner in which the rules framed from time to time have developed into the existing law is set out in the judgment of the learned District Judge (see also pages 82, 423 and 424). It is, therefore, difficult to read into the Sanad a condition forbidding alienation.

The conclusion appears to be that the intention of the grantors was to confer an hereditary estate in perpetuity without imposing by the terms of the grant itself any condition restricting alienation. The lower Courts have, therefore, rightly held that there is an absolute estate. How far the remedial legislation which has, from time to time, been introduced to relieve the position of indebted Jagirdars affects their powers over their estates, need not be considered here for it is not suggested that it has any application to the estate now in question. The necessity of such legislation is, however, an indication that the grantee is not restricted in the manner for which the appellant contends.

It is unnecessary to consider a lage number of cases which have been cited which are concerned with service tenures or endowments. Where the grant is burdened with the performance of a duty, considerations come into play, which do not exist in the case of a Jagir where no services are to be rendered. The case of Hasomal v. Shah Nawaz Shah (3) has been cited as showing that this Court has ruled that Jagirs are inalienable, but the grant there was a khyrat grant the object of which was to secure the performance of religious rites, and must, therefore, be distinguished. As to the other decisions of this Court which are cited in the judgment of the District Judge, and have been quoted in argument, it is sufficient to say that the opinions therein expressed as to Sind Jagirs in general and this estate in particular were so far as they touch the present question obiter, but so far they go the remarks in Mir Allahdad Khan v. Hiradas (4) show that the view taken as to the nature of this same estate was similar to that expressed in this judgment.

The second question for consideration is as to the construction and effect of Exhibit 55. The parties to this document were on the one side a Jagirdar holding an absolute estate and on the other Zamindars having permanent rights in the lands. That a landlord can create a permanent tenancy so as to bind his successors is not open to doubt and a fortiori it seems impossible to doubt the competency of the plaintiff's father to create in permanency the lesser rights created by Exhibit 55. The object of the parties in this document is plain enough. They wished to substitute fixed cash payments for cash dues formerly paid in kind. The real question is whether the arrangement was intended to be permanent, and if so, whether the plaintiff is bound after his father's death. The intention of the parties as to the duration of the agreement can be gathered only from the document, which is unfortunately extremely obscure in its language. It may be observed that it is executed by the Jagirdar in favour of all the Hindu Zamindars of certain villages, a circumstance which makes it doubtful whether the executant can have intended to restrict its operation to the lifetime of each one of these persons, as the appellants now contend. Coming to the document the general tenor of it may be summarized thus:—

Clause 1.—All the Hindu tenants who now cultivate lands on which cash in lieu of batai is paid shall continue to pay fixed cash rates for such lands "for so much time or for so many years as they continue to cultivate."

Clause 2.—If any Hindu tenant does not himself cultivate such land but if it is cultivated by others, the same cash rates shall be charged.

(This clause appears to be introduced to meet the case of subletting).

Clause 3.—If Lilo wd. Sadhu cultivates any land in future he will be charged the above cash rates.

Clause 4.—If any cultivator (the word appears to be synonymous with tenant) takes up any new land in exchange for or in addition to that which he now cultivates, then if such new land is already charged cash dues, he will have to pay a premium in cash for the first year and the above cash rates in future years but if that new land is one on which dues are collected by batai, he will have to make a new settlement with the Jagirdar and pay either in cash or in kind as may be determined.

Clause 5.—The cultivators will render the customary assistance to the Jagirdar or to Government in matters of administration.

Clause 6.—All former agreements are cancelled.

Clause 7.—If two crops are grown the rates to be paid on both crops.

Clause 8.—No other dues than those set out above will be levied, and if the Jagir is leased by the Jagirdar or any one acting on his behalf, the same rates will remain in force.

In interpreting a document so loosely drawn it is impossible to place much reliance on mere textual criticism. On the one hand it is urged that the use of the terms 'Jagir' and 'Jagirdar' imply something more than the holder for the time being; on the other that the use of the words "by me or on my behalf" in clause 8 implies that the executant did not intend to bind the successors. Such arguments are, however, hypercritical. Taking the document as a whole the intention appears to have been to make a permanent settlement. It is difficult to understand how the arrangement in clause 4 could have been contemplated had there been any intention to limit the agreement to any definite term. The words used in clause 2 suggest the intention of fixing the rates in perpetuity.

In addition to the terms of the document itself the conduct of the plaintiff is relevant. The plaintiff's father died in 1903 but the rates imposed by this agreement continued to be levied for a long term of years.

But it is further argued that even if the plaintiff is bound by the agreement executed by his father, still that agreement has no force after the death of the persons in whose favour it was made. Reliance is placed upon the rule of construction that a lease to A is only a lease for A's life and does not convey an heritable estate. There are many reasons, however, why this rule cannot be applied here. The agreement is not in reality a lease. The parties in whose favour it is executed were Zamindars having mauroosi rights. Those rights are permanent rights. The document did not and could not effect the transfer of any interest in immovable property. Further it would, in any case, be difficult to apply a strict rule of construction derived from English Law to a document such as this. If it is a lease at all, it is not a lease in favour of any one person, or any defined person, but in favour of all the Hindu Zamindars, and it contemplates rights which were not in existence at the date of its execution. It is in reality a commutation into fixed rates of dues hitherto paid by cash in lieu of kind. Further as remarked by the learned District Judge, "this general rule is displaced by the language of the document and the circumstances and conduct of the parties attending and following its execution."

(4) 1 S D. 47.

Taking, therefore, the case as a whole it would appear that plaintiff's father was competent to bind his successors, and that the effect of Exhibit 55 is to make a permanent commutation of the Jagir dues on a fixed cash basis. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Hypothecation of future crops, when becomes complete—Suit against transferee without notice, whether maintainable—Revision—Misapprehension of nature of contract, whether material irregularity.

A hypothecation of future crop becomes complete when the crop is grown and the produce realized, and is enforcible against a transferee of such produce with notice of the obligee's equitable interest but not against a transferee without notice. [p. 490, col. 1.]

On the 4th January 1918 G hypothecated the coming rabi crop by an unregistered deed to the plaintiff, and on the 10th February 1918 G and his son N hypothecated the same crop by an unregistered deed to S, who had no notice of the prior hypothecation. S having taken the crop, plaintiff sued N (G having died) and S for the amount due to him:

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Muzaffargarh, dated the 23rd April 19 9, varying that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Leiah, District Muzaffargarh, dated the 21st February 1919.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Petitioner.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 4th January 1918 Ghulam Muhammad hypothecated the comming rabi crop by an unregistered deed to the plaintiff, and on the 10th February 1918 Ghulam Muhammad and his son Nura hypothecated the same crop by an unregistered deed to Sawaya Ram, who had no notice of the prior hypothecation. The crop was taken by Sawaya Ram. Ghulam Muhammad having died, the plaintiff has sued his son Nura and also Sawaya Ram for the amount due to him on the deed of the 4th January 1918.

The Munsif gave a decree against Nura alone, dismissing the claim against Sawaya Ram, but on the plaintiff's appeal the Subordinate Judge has held on the authority of Mrs. Stewart v. Bank of Upper India Limited (1) that Sawaya Ram is liable, and has passed a decree against him as well. Sawaya Ram has applied to this Court for revision.

In the case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court it was held that the defendant's oral charge on certain moveable property, being prior in time, prevailed over the rights of the plaintiff Bank under its written deed, and that the question of notice did not arise. But that was a case in which moveable property already in existence was hypothecated and the learned Subordinate, Judge has made the mistake of treating the present case as one of that nature, overlooking the fact that what Ghulam Muhammad hypothecated was a future crop.

In Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (2) it was held upon principles of equity that a hypothecation of certain future indigo produce was a valid contract to assign such produce when it should come into existence, and that the hypothecation became complete when the crop was grown and the produce realized, and was enforcible against a transferee of such produce with notice of the obligee's equitable interest, but not against a transferee without notice. The same principle is enunciated in paragraph 1502 of Gour's Law of Transfer, 4th Edition, and in Ghose's Law of Mortgage on page 177. In accordance with these authorities it must be held that the hypothecations to the plaintiff and Sawaya Ram became complete only when the crop was grown. They both became complete at the same time, and the hypethecation in favour of the plaintiff cannot, therefore, be given preference over that in favour of Sawaya Ram, who moreover had no notice of the former. The claim against Sawaya Ram consequently fails.

The Subordinate Judge's misapprehension of the nature of the contracts entered into by Ghulam Muhammad is a material irregularity justifying interference in revision. I accordingly accept this application, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. The plaintiff will pay Sawaya Ram's costs throughout.

Application accepted.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 161, 170 (3) —Rent decree—Occupancy holding, sale of—Usufructuary mortgagee, whether entitled to deposit decretal amount to prevent sale.

A usufructuary mortgagee in possession of a non-transferable occupancy holding, which has been advertised for sale in execution of a rent decree obtained against the mortgagor, has an encumbrance which is an interest voidable on the sale of the holding, and is entitled to deposit the decretal amount under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and prevent the sale. [p. 492, col. 1.]

Reference under section 113 of the Civil Procedure Code by the Munsif, Sitamarhi, dated the 26th May 1919.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Decree-holder.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh and Khurshed Husnain, for the Usufructury Mortgagee.

JUDGMENT.—The question referred to us for decision by the Munsif of Sitamarhi is whether an usufructuary mortgagee in possession of a non-transferable occupancy holding, which has been advertised for sale in execution of a rent decree obtained against the mortgagor, has an interest voidable on the sale of the holding, which would entitle him to deposit the decretal amount under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and prevent the sale. In the case under reference the mortgage did not cover the whole holding and had not been recognised by the landlord decree-holder.

Under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act "any person having in the tenure or holding any interest voidable on the sale" may make a deposit under the section, and it has been settled by the decisions of this Court in the case of Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Raghunandan Khawas (1) and in the Full Bench case of Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (2) that the only interests which are voidable on the sale within the meaning of section 170 are the interests defined in section 161 (a) as "incumbrances." Section 161 (a) runs thus :—

"The term 'incumbrance,' used with reference to a tenancy, means any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein, and not being a protected interest as defined in the last foregoing section."

In the above cases it was decided that the purchaser from the tenant of the whole or part of a non-transferable occupancy holding does not hold any of the interests mentioned in section 161 (a) and, therefore, does not hold an interest voidable on sale of the holding which would entitle him to make a deposit under section 170 (3).

The learned Munsif in his reference, and Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal in support thereof, have relied on these two decisions of this Court and contend that a mortgagee from the tenant of a non-transferable holding has not any of the interests mentioned in section 161 which would entitle him to make a deposit. The cases of a mortgagee and a purchaser are clearly distinguishable; the ratio decidendi in the above cited cases was that a purchaser cannot be said to have acquired a lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest of the same nature or in limitation of his own interest, for a sale is not in limitation of, but is a destruction of, the interest of the tenant. The learned Vakil admits that ordinarily a usufructuary mortgage would come within the term of a lien and a limitation of interest and so be an "incumbrance," but he urges that the mortgage of a non-transferable occupancy holding without the consent of the landlord is illegal, neither sanctioned by custom nor binding under the law, and that, therefore, such a mortgage is not covered or contemplated by section 161 (a). He contends that the transfer by mortgage was void ab initio, and that section 161 (a) does not refer to non transferable occupancy holdings.

Neither of these contentions can be supported. It may be true that, if the entire holding had been mortgaged and the mortgagee left in possession of the whole, the landlord would be entitled to treat the transfer as an abandonment of the holding, and could seek for khas possession, but still the mortgagee, until ejected in due course of law, would hold an incumbrance [Krishna Chandra Datta Chowdhury v. Khiran Baiania (3)]. In the present case a part only of the holding was mortgaged and the landlord could not have sought for ejectment of the mortgagee, as the tenant had not abandoned the holding. The mortgagee would hold an incumbrance and the transfer could not be said to be void or illegal. The transfer, in fact, is a valid one as between the tenant and his mortgagee, but as between these two and the landlord its validity depends on the landlord's consent; it is voidable by the landlord but not illegal.

In the reference it is argued that wherever in the Bengal Tenancy Act rights are given to transferees of occupancy holdings, the framers of the Act referred only to transferable holdings. In support of this argument the learned Munsif cites the case of Girish Chandra Choudhry v. Kedar Chandra Koy (4), which merely decides that section 22 of the Act, when read with other sections, must refer to transferable holdings ; it does not support the Munsif's contention.

On the other hand, Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal urges that under the law all occupancy holdings are non-transferble and that it is only custom that can make them transferable. If this is right, it is most unlikely that the framers of the Act would draw up the provisions as to the rights of transferees in contemplation only of the transferability of holdings, such transferability being the exception. There is nothing to show that section 161 (a) relates to transferable holdings only.

The learned Vakil would have us read into section 161 (a) the words "valid against the landlord" after the words "or other right or interest" and treat the section as relating to transferable holdings only. This plainly cannot be done, the section must be read and interpreted as it stands; it is quite clear and needs no interpolation or addition to make its sense plain, and it contains no words limiting its operation either to transferable holdings or to interests valid against the landlord.

(3) 10 C. W. N. 499.

(4) 27 C. 473; 4 C. W. N. 569; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 311.

If we turn to clause (g) of section 160, we find that where a landlord has expressly and in writing given his tenant permission to create any right or interest, such right or interest becomes a "protected interest;" thus where the written consent is obtained for the transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the interest transferred will be a protected one, which is a higher interest than an incumbrance and is excluded from the definition of incumbrances. Section 160 (g) it not limited to transferable occupancy holdings or even to occupancy holdings. It may be inferred from the two sections that, where no permission is given in writing in the case of a transfer by mortgage of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the interest acquired by the mortgagee is an incumbrance.

The effect of a deposit by a mortgagee is that under section 171 he becomes entitled to possession as mortgagee of the tenant, and the landlord by withdrawing the money deposited will be taken to consent. It is argued that it is hard on the landlord that he should be forced to accept as mortgagee in possession a man whose claim he refused to recognise; but after all, if a holding is put up to sale, the landlord has to accept as tenant whoever makes the highest bid, and, by putting up the holding to sale, he voluntarily takes the risk of getting a tenant he does not want.

It is clear that the decisions in Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Raghunandan Khawas (1) and Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (2) with regard to the rights of a purchaser of a non-transferable holding to make a deposit under section 170 (3) are not wholly applicable to the case of a mortgagee of a like holding, and we are satisfied that in the terms of section 161 (a) the mortgagee of a non-transferable occupancy holding has an incumbrance which is an interest voidable on the sale of the holding entitling the mortgagee to make a deposit under section 170 (3).

We are supported in our finding by the dictum of Roe and Jwala Prasad, JJ., in the unreported case of Iswar Prasad Singh, C. R. 129 of 1915, that "The corollary to the case of Rameshwar Singh v. Raghunandan Khawas (1) is that any person holding a lien by which a tenant has limited his interest is entitled to make a deposit under section 170." Furthermore, it has admittedly been the practice hitherto to allow a mortgagee of a non-transferable occupancy holding to deposit the decretal amount under section 170 (3).

We would accordingly answer this reference by saying that the usufructuary mortgagee in possession of a non-transferable occupancy holding is entitled to make a deposit under section 170, sub-section (3), of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Answer accordingly.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 20 OF 1916.

April 29, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Fawcett, J. C., and Mr. Crump, A. J. C.

SHAHAB UD DIN—APPELLANT

VOHIDBUX AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Sind Encumbered Estates Act (XX of 1896), s. 28—Hindu female, purchase from—Presumption as to limited interest, whether arises in case of Muhammadan zemindar—Estoppel—Person taking active part in bringing about sale, whether estopped from challenging it—Purchase in good faith—Improvements by purchaser—Compensation, purchaser, whether entitled to—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 51—Good faith, what constitutes.

The rule that a purchaser from a Hindu female must be presumed to know that he is dealing with a person who has only a limited interest, does not arise in the case of a Muhammadan zemindar who, but for the operation of section 28 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act, would have been the absolute owner of the property. [p. 493, col. 2.]

There is no estoppel against a person challenging a sale merely because he took an active part in bringing about the sale, was present at the execution of the document, and who, at the time, represented that no claims of his would affect the vendee's title. [p. 493, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a purchaser of immoveable property, under the honest belief that he is the absolute owner thereof, undertakes permanent improvements on the property, he is in equity entitled to compensation for the improvements made by him, on the sale being annulled on the ground that the vendor had only a limited interest in the property and could not convey an absolute title, but he is liable for mesne profits from the date his possession became wrongful, i. e., from the date of the death of the vendor. [p. 494, col. 2; p. 495, col. 1.]

What constitutes "good faith" within the meaning of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act is a question of fact, and a person may act in good faith even if he acts under a mistake of law, or is negligent in investigating title. Whether there is good faith or not must depend upon the facts of each case. [p. 493, col. 2; p. 494, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, A. J. C.—It is admitted that Sumar, father of plaintiff No. 1, was the sole owner of the property in suit, that from 1877 to 1885 his estate was under management and that in 1896 he executed a sale deed in favour of the defendant, the appellant in this Court. The learned District Judge has found that plaintiff is entitled to recover the property with mesne profits for three years and has rejected the defendant's claim for compensation for improvements.

Mr. Tolasing for the appellant sought to argue that the plaintiff was also a party to the sale and was bound by it and that in any case he was estopped from disputing its validity.

This argument was at the outset based on the hypothesis that plaintiff was jointly entitled to the property, but in view of paragraph 6 of the written statement, this position was necessarily abandoned. It is plainly not possible to hold on the evidence that plaintiff was in any way a party to the sale. There is some evidence that he was present and that the purchase money was utilised in paying his debts, but had defendant desired his acquiescence or believed that his acquiescence was necessary, he would no doubt have caused him to join as an executant; that defendant did not do so is an indication that he believed that Sumar alone could convey an absolute title. That there can be no estoppel in such a case, has been decided in the case of Mir Mahomed v. Khubomal (1). The facts there are not identical with those now before us, but the case is nonetheless in point. The further point which Mr. Tolasing sought to make, that the plaintiffs were in some way bound by the manager's action in handing over possession of the property to the defendant in Sumar's lifetime, is equally unsustainable. While Sumar lived defendant was entitled to possession.

The question whether on the facts of this case the appellant is entitled to the benefit of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act is less simple. The sole question is whether the defendant believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the poperty. The conduct of the true owner has nothing to do with the matter. The lower Court is wrong in supposing that it is necessary for defendant to prove that plaintiff No. 1 encouraged him to believe that he had an absolute title. That would be a case outside the scope of section 51, and might or might not furnish good grounds for compensation according to circumstances. What constitutes "good faith" within the meaning of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act is a question of fact and a person may act in good faith even if he acts under a mistake of law: Durgozi Row v. Fakeer Sahib (2). Nor is good faith precluded by negligence in investigating the title: Nanjappa Goundan v. Peruma Goundan (3). It means no more than honest belief in the validity of the title: Mathunsa Rowthan v. Apsa Bin (4). These cases appear to furnish the principles which are applicable to the facts of the present case. It may perhaps be pointed out that those authorities which deal with purchases from Hindu females plainly stand on a different footing. In such cases, the purchaser must be presumed to know that he is dealing with a person who has only a limited interest. There is no such presumption where the vendor is a Muhammadan Zamindar who, but for the operation of section 28 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act of 1877, would have been the absolute owner of the property. It cannot be presumed that the purchaser here knew that the estate of his vendor had formerly been under management.

Whether there is good faith or not must depend upon the facts of each case. Here the estate of Sumar was released from management in 1885, and the property was purchased by the defendant 11 years later. There is nothing to show that the defendant had any previous dealings with his vendor, or was in any way acquainted with his circumstances. After the sale, when the estate again came under management, possession was transferred to the defendant without any indication that Sumar had only a limited interest. The sale deed itself purports to convey an absolute title and the price paid was a fair price on that footing. The permanent improvements undertaken by the defendant point to a belief on his part that he was the absolute owner. Taking the facts as a whole he appears to have acted honestly in that belief. If so, he is entitled to the benefit of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act.

But even if it be assumed that the defendant knew at the time of his purchase that the estate had been under management, the fact is not conclusive as against him. The evidence goes to show that plaintiff No. 1 took an active part in bringing about the sale. He was present at the execution of the document and according to the attesting witnesses who are in the best position to know, he represented that no claims of his would affect the defendant's title. Defendant may well have believed that plaintiff No. 1 was precluded by his conduct from asserting his own title after Sumar's death. If this be a mistaken view of the law, still, as has been said above, a mistaken belief as to law does not prevent the operation of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. That the law did so stand was, as a matter of fact, laid down by this Court in Abdul Hakim v. Muhammad Kamil (5) and though this decion has been overruled in Mir Mahomed v. Khubomal (1), it is relevant as showing that an honest belief that plaintiff was estopped could well have been entertained at the date of the sale. In either view of the case, defendant is in equity entitled to compensation for improvements made by him under that belief.

A word may be said as to the supposed conflict between section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 29 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act of 1896. Section 51, it may be observed, gives the transferee the option of either of two remedies: (a) the transferee may have the value of the improvement paid or secured to him, (b) he may require the person causing the eviction to sell his interest in the property. The learned District Judge argues that if plaintiff No. 1 is required to sell his interest, there will be a permanent alienation whereas by section 29 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act plaintiff No. 1 can only sell his life interest. But if plaintiff No. 1 is within the terms of section 29, the interest he can convey is a life-interest only, and it would be that interest alone which he would be required to sell, if he is not within the terms of section 29 cadit quæstio. In point of fact section 29 does not apply for the estate of plaintiff No. 1 is not under management and has not yet been restored. The relevant section is section 9 (4), which would absolutely forbid any alienation by plaintiff No. 1. But here we are not concerned with a question of that nature, for it is the first, and not the second, remedy which is invoked, and there is nothing in the Encumbered Estates Act to prevent the assessment of compensation for the improvements.

It follows that defendant is entitled to have the value of the improvements estimated and paid or secured to him. It is always a matter of difficulty to arrive at an estimate of this kind on conflicting oral evidence. The plaintiff admits that defendant has sunk a well at a cost of Rs. 400 or Rs. 500, has built a wall round the property and planted some trees. He values the property for the purposes of this suit at Rs. 2,000. The defendant gives details of the amounts spent by him on improvements which make up a total of about Rs. 1,400. One witness, Dani, states that he was employed in sinking the well and that the cost was Rs. 800 or Rs. 900. The defendant says he spent Rs. 843 on the well. There is no other evidence bearing on the point. As is usual in such cases either party is no doubt exaggerating or minimising the value of the improvements to suit his own case. The defendant is not entitled to his out of pocket expenses but to the value of the improvements. In the circumstances a sum of Rs. 600 may fairly be allowed.

The last point raised is the question of mesne profits. Mr. Tolasing argues that in view of the last paragraph of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act no mesne profits can be allowed. It is urged that if defendant is entitled to remove the standing crops, he cannot a fortiori be liable to account for crops of the preceding years. The true meaning of that paragraph is that the transferee is entitled to the benefit of the crops sown by him when he was under a bona fide belief that he had an absolute title. Sumar died in 1906, and it is difficult to believe that the defendant had no notice of any defect in his title until the suit was filed. The plaint was filed in June 1914 and judgment was pronounced in June 1916. In these circumstances it is difficult to understand how there can be any standing crops on the land to which the provisions of the last paragraph of section 51 can be applicable.

That mesne profits are chargeable follows from the fact that after Sumar's death the defendant's possession was wrongful: see Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy (6) and Perumal Udayar v. Krishnama Chettyar (7). It is not easy to estimate the profits on the vague evidence on the record. The figure given by the plaintiff is Rs. 250 per annum. The defendant will have it that there are practically no profits. In these circumstances the best guide is the statement of the tenant Usman. He is in a position to know the value of the Zamindar's share of the produce for the three years, which as stated by him is about Rs 470. He says the tenant pays the expenses of cultivation. The assessment is apparently paid by the Zamindar. Allowing for the fact that Usman is plaintiffs' witness, the profits may be fairly estimated at Rs. 400 It is not probable that the land in view of its value could produce more than this. The estimate adopted by the District Judge rests on a hypothetical relation between the assessment and the rent which is not supported by any evidence.

Setting the past mesne profits against the value of the improvements there is a balance of Rs. 200 due by plaintiff No. 3 to defendant. The decree of the lower Court must, therefore, be varied. As the appeal succeeds to a large extent, parties should bear their own costs in this Court. In the lower Court defendant should pay half plaintiff's costs and bear his own, plaintiff No. 3 to recover possession of the land and to pay or receive, as the case may be, the balance found due on setting off the mesne profits found due on the enquiry ordered by the lower Court against the balance of Rs. 200 due by plaintiff No. 3 to defendant.

FAWCETT, J. C.—I concur.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 4, applicability of, to private agreements between parties—Agreement by decree-holder to set aside sale on payment of decretal money by judgment-debtor within certain time—Payment beyond time fixed but on re-opening of Court, effect of.

Section 4 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a case where a certain date has been fixed for the payment of money by agreement of the parties. [p. 496, col. 2.]

A decree-holder agreed to set aside the sale of the properties of the judgment-debtor if the latter paid up the decretal amount within two months of the date of the sale. The Courts were closed on the last day allowed for payment and the decretal amount was deposited on the day that the Courts re-opened:

Held, that payment not having been made within the time agreed upon, the sale could not be set aside. [p. 496, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—The respondents, decree-holders, obtained a decree against the appellants and in execution of that decree, the lower Court had assessed a certain amount as the value of the property sought to be sold. An appeal was preferred by the judgment-debtors, and during the hearing of the appeal from the order of assessment the decree-holders, respondents, filed a petition on the 28th of May 1918, by which they agreed that if the judgment-debtors, appellants, paid to the decree-holders the entire decretal amount with costs, within two months even after the sale was held, the decree-holders shall have no objection to have the sale set aside and further agreed, on receipt of the entire decretal amount with costs, to file a petition certifying payment and to have the sale set aside.

The sale took place on the 27th of July 1918 and was confirmed on the 26th August 1918. It is admitted that the decretal amount with costs was not paid within two months from the date of sale, that is, 27th July 1918. The Court rose for the Poojah holidays on the 17th of September and re-opened on the 21st October, on which date the judgment-debtors filed an application for permission to deposit the decree money, and the money was deposited on that very day. The first Court on the application of the judgment debtors, appellants, set aside the sale.

An appeal was preferred to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the payment of the decretal amount with costs not having been made within two months from the date of sale, the sale stood good and could not be set aside. A second appeal has now been preferred to this Court against the order of the first Subordinate Judge.

It was first contended by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants that time was not of the essence of the contract and the appellants were entitled to pay the decretal amount with costs on the re-opening of the Court. In my opinion this position is not available to the appellants in the face of the clear language of the petition itself. It is clearly stated therein that the appellants, judgment-debtors, had to pay the decretal amount with costs within two months from the date of sale.

The second ground taken up by the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants was that as the respondents, decree-holders, had to do a certain thing under the petition of compromise after the receipt of the decretal amount, and as their part of the contract would not be performed as long as the Court was not sitting, the appellants, judgment-debtors, were not bound to pay the decretal amount before the re opening of the Courts. In my opinion this contention is not sound. All that the decree-holders agreed to was that the sale would be set aside on the entire decretal amount with costs being paid by the judgment-debtors within two months after the sale. What they had to do after the decretal amount was paid was not really a part of the contract. The application stating full satisfaction could be made when the Court was sitting, but that had absolutely nothing to do with the payment of the decretal amount within two months, a condition which had to be fulfilled before the sale was set aside.

The third ground urged was that in any case section 4 of the Limitation Act applied to the facts of the present case and the money could be paid on the re-opening of the Courts on the 21st of October. Section 4 of the Limitation Act, however, has got no application inasmuch as there was a private contract between the parties, and section 4 does not apply to a case where a certain date has been fixed for the payment of the money by agreement of the parties.

The three grounds urged by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants, therefore, fail, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 81 OF 1919.

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 29—Superintendent of Police, order by, regulating duties of Police Force—Disobedience of order—Offence.

An order by a Superintendent of Police regulating the duties of the men under his command is a lawful order under section 29 of the Police Act which the men are bound to obey, and a disobedience of any such order renders the person disobeying liable to conviction under that section. [p. 498, col. 2.]

An order by a Superintendent of Police directing members of the Mounted Police Force to groom their horses is a lawful order which the men are bound to obey. [p. 498, col. 2.]

Criminal reference under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Officiating Sessions Judge, Gaya, dated the 20th November 1919 recommending that the conviction and sentence of the petitioner under section 29 of the Police Act may be set aside.

FACTS appear from the order of reference of the Sessions Judge, material portions of which which are as follows:—

"The accused Mohamad Yusuf is a Mounted Police Officer of the Additional Force located at Jahanabad. The Superintendent of Police, Gaya, issued an order called District Order No. 75, dated the 14th July 1919, ordering the members of the Force to groom their horses. The accused is charged with not grooming his horse but made his grass cutter groom it on the 14th September last and on the following day he did not groom it until the Deputy Suprintendent had personally warned him. The Deputy Magistrate of Jahanabad convicted the accused under section 29 of Act V of 1861 and sentenced him to go under rigorous imprisonment for 15 days. The accused has been enlarged on bail till the disposal of this case.

The question arising in this case is, whether the order of the Supritendent of Police, Gaya, is a lawful order made by a competent authority under the provisions of section 29 of Act V of 1861, and my answer is in the negative.

Under section 12 of the said Act the Inspector-General of Police may frame rules and orders relative to the particular services to be performed by the members of the Police Force and that also subject to the approval of the Local Government. The case of Queen-Empress v. Abdul Hossein (1) is applicable to the present case, where in deciding as to who is the competent authority it has been held that there has been no express power given in this Act to any Officer save the Inspector-General of Police to make rules The rule issued under the District Order of the Suprintendent is a rule regarding particular services, viz., grooming of their own horses to be done by the member of the service, and not individually by the accused.

The order of the Superintendent called the District Order No. 76 (wrongly put by the Deputy Magistrate as Order No. 75 in his summary judgment) is a general rule which the Superintendent was not competent to make. In another case [Bhola Nath Das, In the matter of the petition of (2)] a Superintendent of Police ordered his Constables to cut down Jungles in the vicinity of their lines and on their refusal to do so, he punished them with extra drill, but the Hon'ble High Court declared that the Superintendent was not competent to issue such general rule.

The Public Prosecutor who appeared in the case raised three points:—

1. As the accused was a member of an Additional Police Force located at Jahanabad, the Force was exclusively under the orders of the District Superintendent.

2. That the order for grooming was passed on 14th July 1919 and the members of the Force including the accused acquiesced in it for a long time before he broke it.

3. It was necessary as a disciplinary measure.

None of these points appear tenable.

1. There is no evidence that the Force in question was employed at the cost of private individuals. The sections refer only to control of the District Superintendent of Police as against such third person who pays the cost of other local officers.

2. I believe that the ground of acquiescence cannot be allowed to prevail in a criminal case and the grooming of horses by members of the Police Force apparently appears to be of such a character as not likely to be acquiesced in by them.

3. It does not concern Courts which are only to administer the law as it stands,

In my opinion the Deputy Magistrate has misapplied the law to the facts of the case and I beg to suggest that the conviction may be set aside and the accused may be acquitted of the charge."

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Gaya under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, recommending that the conviction of the petitioner under section 29 of the Indian Police Act, V of 1861, should be set aside on the ground that the Superintendent of Police had no power to pass the orders for the breach of which the petitioner has been convicted.

The petitioner belongs to the Mounted Police Force stationed at Jehanabad. The Superintendent of Police of Gaya passed orders regulating the routine work of Sowars belonging to the Mounted Police Force. One of these orders was that the men should parade, water, and feed their horses and groom them. The petitioner neglected to groom his horse and left it to his grass cutter to do the work, and on another occasion neglected also to groom the horse and when warned was impertinent.

The learned Sessions Judge urges that the Superintendent of Police had no power to issue rules regulating the conduct or work of the Mounted Police. He refers to section 12 of the Police Act in support of his contention that the Inspector-General of Police alone may frame rules and orders relative to the particular services to be performed by the members of the Police Force. He relies on the case of Queen-Empress v. Abdul Hossein (1) and also on Bhola Nath Das, In the matter of the petition of (2). I am of opinion that the contention of the learned Sessions Judge cannot be supported. The order as to the duties of the members of this Force was an order which the Superintendent of Police could pass in view of his position as Commander of the Force. It was not in the nature of a rule but was a lawful order regulating the duties of the men under his command. It is a District Order similar to regimental orders passed by the Colonel of a Regiment, and the Superintendent of Police had as much power to order the men to groom the horses themselves as he had to order them to do any duty in the course of their day's work. It was a lawful order and under section 29 the members of the Force were bound to obey it. It was in no way a rule of the nature contemplated in section 12 of the Police Act.

The conviction, therefore, I hold, was a legal one. It is in my mind, however, somewhat unfortunate that recourse was had to the Criminal Court. The offence was one which might better have been punished departmentally. I am of opinion too that the sentence under the circumstances of the case was unduly severe. I uphold the conviction, but would reduce the sentence to imprisonment for five days including any term of imprisonment which the petitioner has already served.

Sentence reduced.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Although a Sessions Judge has no power under section 303 or section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code to question a Jury as to the reasons for their verdict, it nevertheless is not improper to put them questions for the purpose of coming to a satisfactory conclusion whether the case is a fit one for reference to the High Court. [p. 499, col. 2.]

Reference under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, by the Assistant Sessions Judge of the Tinnevelly Division in Case No. 10 of his Calendar for 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The verdict of the Jury is against evidence and perverse.

The procedure of the Assistant Sessions Judge in questioning the Jury as to the reasons for their verdict may not be appropriate when the verdict is not ambiguous. The decision in Reference Case No. 30 of 1919 seems to give him the power. It is expedient that the Judge should know the reasons for the verdict to make a proper reference to the High Court or it is open to the Judge to change his mind after hearing the reasons for the verdict. The contrary view has been taken in Emperor v. Siranadu (1) and Public Prosecutor v. Abdul Hameed (2).

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This is a reference by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Tinnevelly, the Jury having returned a verdict of "not guilty" against the accused by a majority. The charge was that at about 10 P. M. the accused committed theft of two cloths from the yard in the dwelling house of P. W. No. 1. No doubt the time is not very accurately spoken to by the witnesses, but there can be no question that it was after sunset and between (about) 8 and (about) 10 P. M. The accused examined no witnesses and beyond wild insinuations made by him in cross examination, there is nothing to show that any of the prosecution witnesses was actuated by feelings of enmity towards the accused in giving evidence against the accused. As soon as the theft was discovered, the accused was pursued and he was caught red-handed with the stolen cloths in his possession. On the whole, I think that the Jury's verdict is perverse.

One matter relating to the procedure of the Assistant Sessions Judge has to be considered. After the Jury had pronounced their verdict that the accused was not guilty, he asked them to state briefly the reasons for their opinion. It has been held in Emperor v. Siranadu (1) and in Public Prosecutor v. Abdul Hameed (2) that the Sessions Judge has no power under section 303 or section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, to question the Jury as to the reasons for their verdict unless he considers that there has been an accident or mistake, or there is some ambiguity or doubt as to the nature and meaning of the verdict which has to be cleared. The Assistant Sessions Judge in this case, however, relies in justification in the course he took on the decision of a Bench of this Court which dealt with Reference Case No. 30 of 1919, even though the verdict in this case cannot be said to be ambiguous. The decision relied on by him does seem to lay down that the Court, if it intended to make a reference to the High Court, should have asked the Jury for their reasons for not believing the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution and the learned Judges refer to section 303 of the Criminal Procedure Code. With great respect, I do not think that section 303 gives any power to the Sessions Court to call upon the Jury to give their reasons for their verdict unless the Court is unable to ascertain what the verdict of the Jury really is (section 307 is the section which deals with cases where the Sessions Judge disagrees with the verdict).

However, the decisions in Emperor v. Siranadu (1) and Public Prosecutor v. Abdul Hameed (2) do not, in my opinion, lay down that, for the purpose of coming to a conclusion satisfactorily to his own mind whether the case is a fit one for reference to the High Court, the Sessions Judge may not put questions to the Jury and even to the individual members of the Jury to ascertain the reasons for their verdict. It may be that after hearing these reasons he might change the view which he might have arrived at as to the necessity of a reference to the High Court or he might be confirmed in his opinion as to such necessity. He may not be entitled under these particular sections to put those questions and the Jury may not be bound to answer such questions, but I do not find anything to render it improper, for the particular purpose mentioned by me, for the Judge to put such questions. While I, therefore, differ from the ruling in Reference Case No. 30 of 1919 that under section 303 (1) the Sessions Judge should have asked the Jury for their reasons for their not believing the evidence of the witnesses when he considered the verdict perverse, I do not think that his having asked such questions in this case is improper or is a sufficient ground for not accepting the reference.

In the result, I convict the accused under section 380, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to 4 years' rigorous imprisonment.

SPENCER, J.—I agree in thinking that the accused is guilty and that he should be sentenced to 4 years' imprisonment.

As regards the question that the Assistant Sessions Judge thought fit to put to the Jury, I consider that section 303, Criminal Procedure Code, does not authorise him to question the Jury as to the grounds for their opinion, although it would be convenient and even desirable, when such references are made, that the Court that makes the reference as well as the Court that disposes of it should know what is in the mind of the Jury. The rulings in Emperor v. Siranadu (1) and Public Prosecutor v. Abdul Hameed (2) have laid down that such questions should not be asked. I think that all Courts should follow these decisions, and I am of opinion that so long as the present wording of the Criminal Procedure Code is retained, a Sessions Judge is neither authorised to ask questions nor is the Jury bound to answer questions as to the reasons for their verdict and that they can only be asked questions to make it clear what their verdict is when it is ambiguous.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar (with him Mr. Gour Chandra Pal), for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is correct.

Section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, describes the offences to which it applies by the short marginal descriptions given in the Indian Penal Code in the sections dealing with those offences. Section 562 might, no doubt, have referred to the offences by the number of the respective sections of the Penal Code, but that is no reason for holding that the section as it stands warrants the construction that dishonest misappropriation and cheating include every offence under the respective headings of "Criminal Misappropriation" and "Cheating" in the Penal Code.

The learned Counsel who has appeared for the accused urges that if it had not been the intention of the Legislature to give this wide meaning to the words, the section would have run as follows:—

"In any case in which a person is convicted of theft, theft in a building or any other offence under the Indian Penal Code punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment."

That might, no doubt, have served the intention of the draftsman, but we do not think that there is any difficulty in understanding his meaning. He first of all specifies the particular offences and he then adds a general restrictive clause to cover offences other than those particular offences.

On the other hand if dishonest misappropriation and cheating include offences graver than simple dishonest misappropriation and simple cheating, than theft should also include theft in a building and the enumeration of this later offence was unnecessary.

The following authorities are also in favour of the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge: Harnam Singh v. Emperor (1), Emperor v. Ranjan Dadubhai (2).

In the Calcutta High Court the procedure of section 562 has been applied to trials other than trials under the Criminal Procedure Code, but we have been shown no case under this Code which has given to section 562 the wider interpretation which it is now sought to give.

So far as we can find the only case which favours the wider view is the judgment of Piggott, J., in Har Narayan v. Ramji Das (3), and we respectfully venture to differ from this judgment.

We set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate directing the release of the prisoner on his entering into a bond with two sureties and direct that the case be remitted to him or his successor in office in order that it may be dealt with according to law.

Order set aside.

MISCELLANEOUS CRIMINAL CASE No. 104 OF 1920.

March 30, 1920.

Present:—Sir Grimwood Mears, Kt., Chief Justice, Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, Kt., and Mr. Justice Walsh.

In the matter of A VAKIL.

Letters Patent (All.), cl. 8—Vakil preparing and presenting petition without authority from his clients —Misconduct.

A vakil prepared and presented to a Sessions Judge in the course of a criminal trial a statement which purported to be a petition issuing from his clients and drafted on their instructions, whereas in truth and in fact it was a petition which originated with him and in respect of which he had received no instructions, and he put therein allegations which were made recklessly and without any reasonable grounds for belief:

Held, that he was guilty of professional misconduct. [p. 507, col. 1.]

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Messrs. A. P. Dube and S. N. Sen, for the Vakil.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MEARS, C. J.—The respondent,.....a Vakil of this Court, practising at Farrukhabad, has appeared before us on a notice, dated the 10th of March 1920, to show cause why he should not be disbarred or suspended, in that :—

(a) On the 20th of January 1920, he prepared and put before the Sessions Court a statement which purported to be a petition issuing from his clients and drafted on their instructions, whereas in truth and in fact it was a petition which originated with him and in respect of which he had received no instructions ;

(b) that he knowingly prepared and filed the said petition before the Sessions Court and put therein allegations which were to his knowledge untrue or, alternatively, which were made recklessly without any reasonable grounds for belief :

(c) that by means of the aforesaid he intended to deceive or mislead the Court.

The facts which have given rise to this matter must be stated by us in some detail in order that this case may be thoroughly understood. On the night of the 5th of November 1919, Pultu Singh, a Zamindar, was sleeping in a room in his house when he was attacked by three men. Three servants slept in an adjoining room. They heard his cries and came to his rescue, and by the aid of a light which was burning and also by the fact of it being a light night, the three servants saw one man on either side of the charpoy holding down Pultu Singh with their lathis across him, whilst a third man was striking Pultu Singh with a chopper. The three servants recognised each of the men, and they were eventually arrested. An examination of the premises resulted in the discovery, amongst other things, of a piece of wood of an irregular triangular shape, about 2 inches long and blood-stained. The Sub-Inspector, who found it, took it away along with other things discovered on the premises, having no doubt, quite reasonably, in his mind that it might possibly prove to be a material piece of evidence in the trial. Apparently the Police did not send it up as an exhibit, and the chopper, when secured by the Police, did not show that any wooden part of it was missing. Therefore, as far as the story of the prosecution went, the finding of the piece of wood turned out to be a matter of no importance, as it did not fit in with any Police theory of the case which they proposed to put forward. They rested their case upon the identity of the three accused, as sworn to by the servants, certain motives for the murder and the identification of the blade of the chopper by a blacksmith, named Khargu, who had sharpened it a few hours before the commission of the murder at the instance of one of the accused men. The Magistrate took the piece of wood and placed it in an envelope which he sealed down. It was then handed over to the Police and remained in their possession in the envelope unopened, and at the Sessions trial (on the 19th of January) was lying on the desk of Mr. Bennett, the presiding Judge and there it remained throughout the whole of the evidence of the prosecution, not being referred to at all by the prosecution, until the last witness for the prosecution was in the box. That was the Sub-Inspector Muhammad Khalil. He gave evidence of his arrival on the spot. He detailed what he saw, and spoke to statements being made to him, of making a map, and then his examination-in-chief closed. That is important because after that, all that was going to happen was the cross-examination of the Sub-Inspector and the reading of the medical evidence. Then this Vakil, whose conduct is called in question, arose to cross-examine. What possessed him to bring this piece of wood into the case will never be known. But he asked that the piece of wood should be handed down to him and that was done. He then cross-examined the Sub Inspector and the Sub-Inspector said in answer to his questions: "Below the corpse I found a piece of wood," Exhibit H; (and then in brackets is a note, which is clearly a note by Mr. Bennett, which says that it was a "blood-stained piece of wood about 2 inches long, seems a bit of the charpoy.") That as far as we see is the only question in cross-examination which relates at all to this piece of wood. The medical evidence was then given and the Court rose for the day. Probably sometime in the morning of the 20th the Vakil drafted a petition. It is quite certain that he did not have any communication with his clients on the 19th, and it is certain that he never saw them on the 20th until after the petition had been completely drafted by him. It was suggested on Saturday last that he saw the brother of one of the accused, but we think it is fortunate for him that he did not pursue that line of defence, because it will be seen in a few moments that that was a suggestion entirely at variance with the explanation that he gave Mr. Bennett, the Sessions Judge, and is not likely to have been the correct version. However, that is not before us now and it is not put forward in any way as his defence that he in fact received instructions from a brother or some relative of one of the accused. He drafted the petition. Now it is important to see what he says in that petition. And we may pause here for a moment to say this. It is the duty of an Advocate, if he himself thinks that there has been some irregularity in the conduct of the Police, or in the conduct of any of the witnesses, to call that irregularity to the attention of the Court, and this Vakil would have been perfectly within his rights and would have acted with the utmost propriety in bringing the matter to the attention of the Court, if when he took that piece of wood in his hand on the afternoon of the 19th of January he honestly thought that the piece of wood had been changed. But he should have brought it to the attention of the Court by saying, "I saw this piece of wood in the Magistrate's Court. I have seen the piece of wood to-day. I say that in my opinion these two pieces are not the same. I demand an enquiry—the fullest enquiry." Anything less than a demand for an investigation based upon his personal application would have been a failure by him in his duty to his client. But he chose a crooked course and drafted a petition which on the face of it makes it appear to the Court that the three prisoners, in whose minds there had never been any suspicion of any change in this piece of wood, are made by him to say: "We noticed this, we noticed that, we noticed the other," each of those statements being false statements.

Now here is the petition. We shall refer to some only of its relevant parts. But we must bear in mind throughout that the first charge against this Vakil is that, having no instructions from his clients, he fabricated a petition which made it appear that instructions had been given to him by his clients and that he was the mere agent to pass on to the Court the beliefs of the men who were then standing their trial for their lives. The petition was addressed in form, as we have said, by the accused to the Judge. It begins—

"Sir, In the case noted above the piece of wood (Exhibit H) shown yesterday by order of the Court, is not, in fact, the same wood which was produced by the Sub-Inspector, Khalil Ahmad, in the Court of the Magistrate. Because (1) that piece of wood was much thicker than this and was of a different shape. The former clearly appeared to be a broken piece of the handle of a chopper. We had seen it in broad daylight."

Now that statement drafted by the Vakil, and signed by these men, would convey to the Judge that in the minds of those three men there rested a conviction that the piece of wood which they had seem in broad daylight in the Court of the Magistrate was not the same piece of wood which they had seen on the afternoon of January 19th in the Court of the Sessions Judge. There was nothing in the prisoners' minds at all in the matter until this Vakil put it into their minds in Court on the morning of the 20th. One will search in vain the evidence in the Magistrate's Court or in the Court of the Sessions Judge to find any suggestion put forward by any witness that this piece of wood was in fact, or appeared to be, a broken piece of the handle of a chopper. That the Police may originally have formed a theory that it was possibly the broken piece of the handle of a chopper is, we think, quite likely, but they never formulated that theory in words and it is important to remember this because there are statements hereafter which deal with it.

The petition continues:—

"2. In the Court of the Magistrate, where the enquiry was held, the prosecution had tried to prove that the blade of the chopper which has been produced was the same which was made by the blacksmith Khargu, but the handle or the wooden part was different."

Now there it says that in the Court of the Magistrate the prosecution had tried to prove that the blade was the same but the handle or the wooden part was different. Beyond the fact that Khargu, the blacksmith, split up his identification into two parts and said, "this is the same blade that I sharpened, this is the same handle," the evidence went no further than that, and we have examined every statement of fact that is contained in paragraph 2 of the petition by the light of every deposition that bears upon it. The petition continues:—

"This is clear from the statement of Ram Sarup, Sub-Inspector of Police Station Thatia, made in the Court of the Magistrate. On the same day Sub Inspectors Khalil Ahmad and Ram Sarup were examined first and the blacksmith Khargu was examined after them. Therefore, when the blacksmith Khargu was asked as to whether the handle of the chopper was the same to which the blade was fitted when it was made, and he replied to the disappointment of the prosecution that the handle was exactly the same, the prosecuting Inspector put the same question to him 3 or 4 times, but each time his reply was the same."

The Magistrate has been called, but he has no recollection of the prosecuting Inspector behaving in this extraordinary way and being permitted to put the same question to Khargu 3 or 4 times, and there is no record of it in his notes. Then paragraph 2 concludes:—

"In this way the prosecution lost the most important piece of evidence against us because the handle which is at present fitted to the blade of the chopper is not in any way so broken as to allow the piece of wood produced by the Sub-Inspector Khalil Ahmad to fit in."

In the matter of A VAKIL.

Then paragraph 3 deals with the conclusion that the three accused men wished the Court to draw,—and we pass on to paragraph 4.

"The piece of wood, Exhibit H, before the Court is apparently a piece of the leg of a cot, and no one can call it a piece of the handle of a chopper."

(No one had called it the handle of a chopper until it occurred to this Vakil to draft this most disingenuous petition).

"For these reasons we fully believe that this piece of wood has been put in place of the former piece."

We have already said the men had no belief about the matter at all; they had never said one word about this to the Vakil and yet he had the audacity to draft this petition, setting up this deceitful story, and present it to the Court as emanating directly from his clients. The petition continues—

"For these reasons we fully believe that this piece of wood has been put in place of the former piece. If the former piece had been produced before the Court, the nature of the case would have been entirely changed."

That is a sentence which demonstrates in our view that this Vakil was acting dishonestly in the matter. The petition goes on :—

"It is, therefore, prayed with folded hands that in order to prove these facts the prosecuting Inspector, Pandit Chandrabhan Pande, who had examined the Sub-Inspector Khalil Ahmad and the blacksmith Khargu, may be called forthwith in order to prove the piece of wood in the Court of the Magistrate and the following questions may be put to him."

Then there were four questions set out, which were proper questions on the basis of it being part of the case (which of course it was not) that this was a piece of the handle of a chopper. Then the petition concluded—

"If necessary our Pleader may be permitted to cross examine him (i. e., Pandit Chandrabhan Pande). Because, Sir, the Court is being clearly duped in this matter and an effort is being made to secure our execution by means of an unfair and cunning act."

Now it is difficult to conceive greater rubbish than this and the Vakil cannot be so incompetent as to have believed a word of it. The fact all too clearly appears that he was acting dishonourably in the presentation of this petition and hoped to mislead the Court.

We pass over the questions which he suggested should be put to the Magistrate. Again, they were proper questions on the basis of it being part of the prosecution that this broken piece of wood in fact formed part of the chopper. It continues—

"As no question was asked by the prosecution in this Court about the piece of wood which was enclosed in an envelope, and we the three accused were fully believing from the day it was produced in the Magistrate's Court that it would save our lives, it was absolutely necessary for our Vakil to enquire of the last prosecution witness, Sub-Inspector Khalil Ahmad, about this piece of wood."

Now, follows this :—

"When the cover was opened, our Vakil was busy with cross examination. We could have, therefore, no opportunity to inform our Vakil of this fact and to put in this application. And as soon as the cross-examination of Sub-Inspector Khalil Ahmad was over, the hearing of the case was closed for the day, we were ordered to be taken out. This application could not, therefore, be put in yesterday."

That, of course, is designed to bring to the mind of the Sessions Judge and to convince him that the three men immediately on seeing the piece of wood were satisfied that the piece of wood had been changed and that if they could, they would on the afternoon of the 19th have communicated with their Vakil and made the application instantly, the truth being as we have reiterated, that this application originated in the mind of the Vakil alone and he put all these statements, partly falsehood and partly nonsense, into the mouth of the three men.

The last prayer is :—

"That by these questions suggested by us, the Court should satisfy itself about the identity of the piece of wood, and this can be done only if the Court takes the trouble of asking these questions, whereby the facts will become clear. As it is a question of life and death to three persons, it is most respectfully, and with folded hands, prayed that the Court may take this trouble and pardon us for giving this trouble."

In the matter of A VAKIL.

Then this precious document is signed by the three accused men and witnessed by the Vakil.

That document was laid before the Sessions Judge and he acted with admirable promptitude, and we are greatly indebted to him for the course he took, which we commend to the consideration of every judicial officer in this Province. What he did was to call the Magistrate and Sub-Inspector and examine them on the basis of the petition being a genuine one—genuinely emanating from the three accused and laid before the Court by the Vakil in his capacity as Vakil. And then of course it turned out that the story was a fabrication, and thereupon the Sessions Judge very wisely asked a few questions of this Vakil and most sensibly made the Vakil sign what he said, a very necessary precaution when dealing with a person of shifty character. In the result we get the following note from the Sessions Judge:—"An application in regard to a piece of wood, Exhibit H, was handed in by..... .....Vakil for the accused signed by the accused, on the commencement of the proceedings on the 20th of January 1920." The statement of the Vakil.....is as follows:—

"The idea that this piece of wood was changed after being exhibited before the Committing Magistrate was present in my mind in a hazy form when Exhibit H was produced before the Sessions Judge yesterday. I am not quite sure whether I spoke to the accused or not on the subject yesterday."

Then there is a note by the Judge. "Note.—Vakil said at first he did not speak to the accused on the subject yesterday." "I then drafted out the application this morning at my house before coming to Court and before seeing the accused."

Now he had not spoken to them on the afternoon of the 19th and there we get it from him that the petition was written before seeing the accused on the morning of the 20th in the Court of Session.

"All the statements in the application as to the piece of wood being different from that in the Magistrate's Court were written by me of my own accord and not dictated to me by any one. All the information in the application is original and no information was given to me by any one. I had the application written out ready and read it over to the accused and asked them if they agreed with it and got it signed by them and presented it to Court."

We have already referred to the fact that on Saturday this Vakil even in this Court seemed to be prepared to put up a substantive case that the petition had been drafted on the instruction of a brother, or some relative, of one of the accused. But it happened by good fortune that the Court rose at 1 o'clock and that matter was not pursued to day or it might have led to further and serious developments, because it is clear from this document that when he was giving his explanation to the Sessions Judge, that explanation did not include any suggestion that anybody on behalf of the accused had said anything to him in regard to this matter. The statement continues—

"I asked the accused whether they agreed to what I had written and they said they agreed to it. Then I asked whether it should be presented, and they said it should be. I handed it in. The piece of wood was not handed to the accused yesterday, it was only seen by them at the distance from the dock to the Court table (0 feet). I stated to the Court this morning that before handing the application in I wanted to make sure and I asked that the piece of wood should be handed to the accused to make sure that they would persist in making the application."

"Persist in making the application" is a strange phrase when the accused were as a fact mere puppets in the hands of this unscrupulous Advocate.

"The reader handed the accused the piece of wood and I do not know what they said (and then said—wants to add 'probably')."

We do not quite understand what this means it is put in brackets and it is "(then said) wants to add ('probably')." Then it continues:

In the matter of A VAKIL.

"They said it was not the same."

We should have been very astonished if they had said that it was the same after seeing the petition drafted by their Vakil.

"After seeing this wood they said they do persist in making the application; then I handed it in. I cannot say whether the accused had seen this piece of wood clearly yesterday. They said it was not the same piece of wood when I saw them this morning."

Then Mr. Bennett put the question, "Why was it necessary for them to see it again this morning if they had seen it yesterday in Court?" and the Vakil's answer was "To make sure that they will make the application."

Question.—Anything more to state?

Answer.—"My first intention was before presenting this application to the Court, I wished to request the Court that the piece of wood should be shown to the accused. The Court asked me to speak louder. The piece was shown to accused. After it was shown I presented the application. I have authority by vakalatnama to make the application."

And here we find that by that time even this Vakil had realised that Mr. Bennett had taken his measure, and we now see the complete lack of moral stability when he continues:—

"If the Court think any improper conduct on my part, I would like to take back the application, though I think I have done nothing wrong; personally I would like to take back the appliation, but I do not know whether I have authority to do so or not. Before I actually take it back I wish the permission of my clients. That is all."

Now having regard to the fact of this petition being made and to the information which the learned Sessions Judge obtained by asking questions of this Vakil, it is small wonder that he sent the matter up to this Court for our enquiry.

Now the notice which was served on him has been read. On Saturday last the Vakil appeared before us with the great advantage of having as his Advocate Dr. Sapru. After what really might be called persuasion on our part on Saturday, the Vakil seemed to think that there was some slight cause for him to express some slight shade of regret. Then there came an alteration of mood on his part and he really thought himself quite an honest man who would like to fight the matter out. He had, of course, a perfect right to do that and the case continued for a short time on that basis. To-day his point of view has again changed and he has said through his learned Advocate that he has considered the matter very carefully, that he is sincerely sorry for his conduct and admits that he is unable to substantiate practically all the allegations in the statement, and he further unreservedly and without any qualification withdraws every single allegation which is damaging to any one interested in the prosecution, and he desires Dr. Sapru to express his genuine and sincere apology to this Court, to Mr. Bennet, Sessions Judge, and to the Police.

Well, that is making some amends, and Dr. Sapru whose judgment in matters like this can well be relied upon, has admitted on behalf of his client that he could do nothing less, that the facts which are proved, or admitted, bring this case within section 8 of the Letters Patent, and he referred to his client quite properly as a young man who had gone wrong, hopelessly wrong. Those are Dr. Sapru's own words. He has also put forward the plea of inexperience. But a plea of inexperience is not apposite to a case of this character. You do not want to be an experienced Advocate to know that you must not tell lies or try to confuse or deceive the Court. It is a matter of instinct,—a matter of right feeling. But he is a young man and after a good many shiftings about in this case he has at last made an apology, which in terms is a full apology. But, of course, that is not adequate at all, and we have got to vindicate the power that is given to us under section 8 and we have also got to exercise discipline for people who stand so much in need of it as this Vakil seems to do. We are going to take a course, which all three of us regard as lenient. But it is not to be regarded as by any means the sort of scale that will prevail in the future. But nevertheless the penalty must be a substantial one, which will not be forgotten by this Vakil, and should be borne in mind by other people. And the order that we make is that we find (A) that on the 20th of January 1920 the Vakil prepared and put before the Sessions Judge a statement which purported to be a petition issuing from his clients and drafted on their instructions, whereas in truth and in fact it was a petition which originated with him and in respect of which he had received no instructions; (B) that he knowingly prepared and filed the said petition before the Sessions Court and put therein allegations which were made recklessly and without any reasonable grounds of belief, and we find him thereby guilty of professional misconduct. And in those circumstances in exercise of our powers under section 8 of the Letters Patent we do order that he be suspended from practice from this day until the 1st day of January 1921. We direct the Vakil to hand over his certificate of practice to the Registrar of this Court.

Vakil suspended.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1024 OF 1918.

April 8, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Sultan Ahmed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—APPELLANT

LOWN KARAN MARWARI—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 524—Property seized on suspicion of being stolen—Order for forfeiture and sale, legality of—Suit to recover possession, maintainability of—Limitation.

An order under section 524, Criminal Procedure Code, directing property seized on suspicion of its being stolen to be forfeited and ordering the sale-proceeds thereof to be credited to Government, is illegal and without jurisdiction, as all that that section authorises is that the Government shall be free to sell the property or to hold it as a trustee for the true owner. A suit, therefore, for the recovery of possession of such property is maintainable, and the fact that such suit is brought more than a year after the order of confiscation is no bar, as it is not necessary to set that order aside. [p. 509, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Sambalpur, dated the 14th April 1918, confirming that of the Munsif, Sambalpur, dated the 24th September 1917.

Mr. Mohammad Fakhruddin, Government Pleader, for the Appellant.

Mr. Wasi Ahmad (with him Mr. D. N. Sircar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of an order made under section 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sambalpur on the 7th of January 1916, declaring certain gold ornaments valued at Rs. 2,000 to be forfeited and ordeing the sale-proceeds thereof to be credited to Government. These ornaments were seized by the Police on suspicion that they were stolen property, or that they had been manufactured out of gold looted in certain dacoities in which plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 5 were concerned.

It appears that these two plaintiffs, who are members of a joint family with plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 4, were prosecuted for an offence under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code in connection with certain other articles but were eventually acquitted. During the investigation in that case the plaintiff No. 1 at the request of the Police made over the ornaments in suit to the Police, stating that they had been pawned with him by plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5.

After the acquittal of the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 5, a proclamation, inviting claimants to the property, was issued under section 523, Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon the plaintiffs Nos 2 to 5 claimed the ornaments numbered 7 and 8 and the plaintiff No. 6 claimed the ornaments numbered 1 to 6; but although they were the sole claimants the Magistrate directed the properties to be forfeited.

It is necessary to explain that plaintiff No. 6 is the minor daughter of plaintiff No. 4 and that the jewellery in question was claimed by her as having been presented to her by her father in law at the time of her betrothal.

The plaintiffs thereafter unsuccessfully appealed to the Sessions Judge of Purulia, and finally on the 28th of August 1916 the High Court declined to interfere in revision with the learned Judge's order.

The present suit was lodged on the 17th of February 1917. It is resisted by the Secretary of State, who justifies the order and also contends that a suit does not lie.

It appears that the properties have not yet been sold and are still in the possession and custody of the defendant.

The Munsif found that the allegation that the properties were pledged with plaintiff No. 1 was not true but that it was true that they were in the custody of plaintiff No. 1 on behalf of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 6, and he made a decree directing the defendant to deliver the property to these plaintiffs jointly.

In appeal the decree was slightly varied and it has been ordered by the Subordinate Judge that delivery is to be made to plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 only.

The appeal before us has been preferred by the Secretary of State and there is no cross-appeal on behlf of the plaintiffs.

The first point is, whether a suit lies at all. It is contended that section 524 of the Code of Criminal Procedure concludes the right of the true owner to enforce his claim by a civil suit, and reliance is placed upon the words "shall be at the disposal of Government."

Now section 517, which relates to property produced before the Court, allows the Court to make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal of that property. It has been held that under this section the Magistrate cannot confiscate property, and that he is entitled only to make arrangements for possession, leaving the Civil Courts to decide, in the event of competent proceedings taken therein, the question of title [see Kong Lone v Ma Pay (1)]. So again it has been held by the Madras High Court that the words do not authorise the Magistrate to bestow property in charity [High Court Proceedings, dated 20th July 1875 (2)].

Special powers are given under section 521 for the destruction of libellous and other matter, but with regard to property dealt with either under section 517, or section 524, it would seem that the power of the Criminal Court is limited to making arrangements for the custody and protection of the property while in the possession of Government and to making a transfer of possession to such person as it thinks proper.

(1) 4 L. B. R. 13; 6 Cr. L. J. 125.
(2) 2 Weir 666.

It does not seem that these sections in any way empower the Government to confiscate the property, or conclude the right of the person from whose possession the property was taken, or of any other person, to contest the decision of the Criminal Court by a civil suit.

This view is in accordance with the decision of their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Tribhovan Manekchand (3) and Wasappa v. Secretary of State for India (4).

The learned Vakil for the appellant relies on Bhukhooree Singh v. Government (5). That was a case where, under section 185 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1861, the property of an absconding offender had been attached and declared to be at the disposal of Government, as he had not within two years after the attachment of the property been able to show that he had not wilfully evaded the service of process. It was held by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court that he might have availed himself of his right of appeal against the Magistrate's order but he had no right to institute a civil action.

The learned Vakil also relies upon Behary Shaha v. Nubby Khan (6). In that case certain property was the subject of a charge of theft. The Magistrate discharged the defendants, returned to them a part of the property, and ordered the confiscation of the remainder, but he did not follow the procedure required by sections 131 and 132 of the Code of 1861. It was held that the order of confiscation was irregular as he had not followed the provisions of the law. It is suggested to us that the view of the High Court was that, if the correct procedure had been followed, an order for the confiscation of the property might have been legally made.

In Secretary of State for India v. Vakhatsangji Meghrajji (7) their Lordships of the Bombay High Court referred to Bhukhooree Singh's case (5), but did not decide whether a civil suit could be brought to contest the Magistrate's order either in respect of the property of an absconding criminal, or in respect of property seized on suspicion and pronounced to be at the disposal of Government. On the other hand the decisions in Queen-Empress v. Tribhovan Manik Chand (3) and Wassuppa v. Secretary of State for India (4) are clear authorities for the view that, so far at least as sections 523 and 524 are concerned, the owner's right to bring a civil suit is not taken away.

It seems to me that Mr. Justice West in Tribhovan Manik Chand's case (3) was right in observing that the Magistrate may under these sections make an order which is good as to the delivery of possession but it is not conclusive as to title.

A reference to the English Law also leads to the same conclusion. The Police Property Act, 1897, 60 and 61 Vict. c. 30, section 1 (1), provides that where any property has come to the possession of the Police in connection with any criminal charge, a Court of summary jurisdiction may make an order for the delivery of the property by the Magistrate to the person appearing to be the owner thereof, or if the owner cannot be ascertained, make such order with respect to the property as to the Magistrate or Court may seem meet. But the Act provides that the order will not affect the right of any person to bring an action within six months against any person in possession of the property delivered by virtue of the order.

The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, contends that, though there is no direct authority in his favour, he is entitled to rely on the principle that, when an Act of the Legislature gives power to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive an injury, if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Statute, the jurisdiction of the ordinary Court is ousted, and in case of injury the party cannot proceed by action [Governor and Company of the British Cast Plate Manufacturers v. Meredith (8), Stevens v. Jeacocke (9) and West v. Downman (10)].

The reply is that every such case depends on its own Statute. It must be ascertained from the Statute itself whether it is intended to be conclusive and to bar all other remedies. For instance in cases relating to exciseable articles the Statutes give a Criminal Court power to confiscate; any civil suit for recovery will, in these cases, be clearly unsustainable. So again while a civil suit will not lie to modify the amount of maintenance ordered under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a civil suit will certainly lie where maintenance has been refused: on the other hand, if it had been necessary to decide that point now, I should hold that sections 88 and 89 of the Criminal Procedure Code debar an absconder from suing for the recovery of his property.

But in section 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code the words "at the disposal of Government" may reasonably be interpreted as meaning that Government shall be free to sell the property, or to hold it as a trustee for the true owner. The Statute does not profess to bar the ordinary legal remedies; and there is no reason for reading into it something which is not there. I think the title of the plaintiffs is still alive.

The learned Vakil's final contention is that the suit is barred by limitation inasmuch as the plaintiffs have not sued to set aside the order of the Magistrate within one year after it was made. The reply to this is that this is a suit for recovery of possession and that it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to get the order of the Magistrate set aside at all. The order declaring the property forfeited to Government being illegal and without jurisdiction, it was not necessary to set it aside.

The plea of misjoinder raised in the Courts below is not pressed and the result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The learned Vakil requests us not to award costs against the Secretary of State on the ground that he must be deemed to have acted in good faith. In our opinion that excuse will not avail; the Secretary of State resisted the action with the intention of keeping the plaintiffs out of their property. He must, therefore, pay costs like any other unsuccessful litigant.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 513 OF 1919.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 435 OF 1919.

December 17, 1919.

Present :—Sir Abdur Rahim, KT., Offg. Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Spencer.

In re PACKIANATHAN—ACCUSED—PETITIONER.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 415, 419—Cheating—Obtaining health certificate by giving false name—Health certificate, whether property within s. 415.

A health certificate is property within the meaning of section 415 of the Penal Code and if a person by falsely personating another dishonestly or fraudulently induces a Health Officer to deliver to him a health certificate, he is guilty of an offence under section 419 of the Penal Code. [p. 510, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Ramnad, dated the 3rd June 1919, presented against the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate, Ramnad Division, in Calendar Case No. 130 of 1918.

Mr. C. Madavan Nair, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

ORDER.—The accused was prosecuted in this case for an offence under section 419 read with section 511 of the Indian Penal Code. He was going to Ceylon, and he used a permit which stood in the name of one Kumaraswami while the accused's own name is J. Packianathan. On seeing the permit the Health Officer at Mantapam, who is an employee of the Ceylon Government, issued a health certificate, but, according to the case of the prosecution, P. W. No. 2, the Health Officer's clerk, recognised the accused as he had seen him before and seeing that he had given a false name reported the matter to the Health Officer. He questioned the accused and the accused at first, according to the Health Officer's evidence, gave his name as Kumaraswami but afterwards gave the correct name. A bond was taken from him and there the correct name was entered.

The trying Magistrate after examining two witnesses, i. e., the Health Officer and his clerk, discharged the accused, holding that no offence of attempt at cheating had been made out. He says that the Health Officer could not be said to have suffered in any way either in reputation or property and that the accused did not intend to cause any sort of harm to him and that, therefore, section 419 would not apply. An application was made to the District Magistrate for revision of this order with the result that the District Magistrate set aside the order, holding that the first part of section 415 would apply even if the second part did not, that is to say, on the facts established by these two witnesses, the accused, by deceiving the Health Officer, fraudulently induced him to deliver a health certificate which is property within the meaning of the law. That a health certificate is property within the meaning of this section cannot be doubted. Reference may be made to the case in Ramaswami Aiyar v. Vaithilinga Mudali (1) and the case of Queen-Empress v. Soshi Bhushan (2). But that in itself is not sufficient; it has to be proved that the accused, by deceiving the Health Officer, fraudulently or dishonestly induced him to deliver the health certificate. It is pointed out by Mr. Osborne that all the witnesses which the prosecution had to adduce on this point have not been examined. An application was put in on the 4th November, but apparently the trying Magistrate thought that he was at liberty to dispose of the case without taking any further evidence. We do not think that he was justified in refusing to hear further evidence which the prosecution had to adduce, and on that ground the order of discharge was wrong and liable to be set aside. It is unnecessary for us to pronounce any opinion on the question of law as to what would amount, in circumstances like those of the present case, to fraudulent or dishonest inducement within the meaning of section 415, as we think that the question will have to be decided after all the evidence has been recorded and the enquiry has been completed by the Magistrate. After hearing all the evidence which the prosecution may have to adduce, the Magistrate will decide whether an offence has been made out by Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (6) —Appellate Court, power of, to remand case for further inquiry—Inherent power of Court to make inquiry.

Although a Court, before which an application comes under section 195 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code for re-consideration of orders passed by a Subordinate Court has no power to remand the case for further inquiry, it, nevertheless, has inherent power to make an inquiry itself and to proceed in accordance with law. [p. 512, col. 1.]

Civil criminal revisions against the order, dated the 22nd November 1917, of the District Judge, Muzafferpur, refusing to set aside the order, dated 22nd August 1917, of the Munsif, Motihari, declining to grant sanction to the petitioners, to prosecute the opposite party.

Mr. Fakhruddin, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Pugh and Chandra Sekhar Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are asked in these cases to set aside an order of the District Judge of Muzafferpur declining to interfere in a case decided by the Munsif of Motihari refusing to grant sanction to prosecute a plaintiff for offences under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code. The main facts of the case are that this plaintiff brought a suit against certain tenants of whom, it is alleged, the other two persons against whom these applications were made were Maliks. It is alleged that out of old enmity the Maliks had arranged with this plaintiff to bring a false civil action against these tenants. On the case coming to trial, the Munsif after the usual adjournments was asked to allow it be withdrawn with power to bring a fresh suit. Nothing further was done for six and a half months, when the defendants in the suit with the advice and the assistance of the Criminal Investigation Department made the applications referred to. The Munsif, on the ground that the applications were made six and a half months late and on the ground that there were no materials before him to justify in saying that the case was false, refused the applications and recorded a finding that they were made merely in order to harrass the plaintiff and the Maliks. He had no materials whatever before him for the latter view, and the delay in bringing the case had been the subject of a full explanation in the application made. This application the Munsif entirely declined to consider. On his refusal of the applications the parties went to the District Judge. The District Judge recorded that he had no power to make any order on the matter, because there was no material before him on which he could ascertain the facts. It had been held both in Allahabad and Madras and has since been held in Calcutta in Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (1) that the Court before whom an application comes under section 195, clause (6), for re-consideration of orders passed by a Subordinate Court had no power to remand the case for further enquiry The applicant, therefore, comes to us under section 115 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or under section 107 of the Government of India Act, with a prayer that the orders either of the Munsif or of the District Court be revised and that an enquiry be held into the matters alleged in the application made before the Munsif for sanction to prosecute. We have considered carefully the view taken in the case reported as Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (1), and we note the procedure therein taken was that a Court was constituted before whom the proceedings contemplated under section 195, clause (6), should be conducted. That Court having been constituted, it was directed to take evidence upon the merits of the case. We agree with the whole trend of case-law that the Court to which appeals lie has no power under section 195, clause (6), to remand the case for further enquiry. We also agree that it must have inherent power, as said by Mukerjee, J., to collect materials upon which its decision may be based. In this view we are of opinion that the learned Judge acted erroneously in the exercise of his jurisdiction in refusing to take further action in the matter. He had jurisdiction to make an enquiry himself and we direct him now to exercise that jurisdiction in accordance with law. He will take such evidence as the parties may desire to adduce before him, and on consideration of that evidence pass such orders as he may think proper under section 195, clause (6). We do not propose to make any orders as to costs.

Petitions accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 147, 379—Unlawful assembly, common object of, to commit theft—No finding as to who removed property—Separate sentences, whether legal.

Where it is found that the common object of an unlawful assembly was to commit theft, but there is no finding as to which of the persons composing the unlawful assembly removed the property stolen, it is illegal to convict them both under section 147 and under section 379 of the Penal Code and to pass separate sentences for each offence.

Criminal revision against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, dated 21st February 1920, dismissing the appeal of the petitioners from their conviction passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Bhadrak, dated the 7th February 1920.

Messrs. K. B. Dutt and Bankim Chandra Dey, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of the petitioners who were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate under sections 147 and 379, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment under section 147 and to one month's rigorous imprisonment under section 379.

On appeal the learned Sessions Judge upheld the convictions under sections 147 and 379, but reduced the sentence under section 147, Indian Penal Code, from two months' rigorous imprisonment to a fine of Rs. 25 each; in default three weeks' rigorous imprisonment each. He upheld the sentence on the accused under section 379.

The main ground that has been urged in this application is that a separate sentence under section 379 is illegal. There being no finding in the judgments of the two Courts below as to who were the accused who individually took away the crops and the common object of the unlawful assembly being to commit theft, the separate sentence under section 379 is undoubtedly illegal. The case reported as Mithoo Singh v. Gopal Lal (1) is a direct authority on the point.

The second point that was urged was that the Magistrate held a local enquiry and did not place the result of that enquiry on the record and as such the accused were prejudiced. This point was not raised before the Court below and has not much force in it.

The result is that I uphold the conviction of the accused under section 147, and while affirming the sentence of fine of Rs. 25 imposed upon each of the petitioners by the Sessions Judge under section 147, I quash the sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment inflicted upon them under section 379, Indian Penal Code. The accused will now be discharged from their bail.

Petition partly accepted.

Revision—Limitation, plea of, not taken in trial Court, whether can be taken in High Court—Plea depending on evidence—Procedure—Remand.

The fact that a defendant omits to plead limitation in the trial Court, would not estop him from taking the plea in revision before the High Court. If such plea depends upon evidence, the proper course is to remand the case for re-trial.

Revision against the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Cawnpore, dated the 14th of March 1919.

Dr. Kailash Nath Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. Peare Lal Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from the decree of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court at Cawnpur decreeing the claim of the opposite party for Rs. 480. It appears that the plaintiff, the opposite party, sued for the recovery of Rs. 355 for balance of price of goods supplied and Rs. 125 for damages for goods supplied but not accepted. It was alleged in the plaint that the defendants-applicants had ordered 30 wagons of coal at the price agreed upon and that 30 wagons had been sent to them but only 25 had been accepted. The sum of Rs. 355 was due for the wagons accepted and Rs. 125 for damages on the five wagons not accepted. Under the terms of the contract between the parties the defendants applicants had agreed to pay Rs. 50 per wagon as damages in case of their non-acceptance, but the plaintiffs were claiming only at the rate of Rs. 25 per wagon. The sum of Rs. 355 was the balance of the price of the 25 wagons after deducting the amounts paid from time to time by the defendants-applicants. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court decreed the claim. In revision to this Court it is contended that on the evidence of the plaintiffs themselves the claim with regard to damages is barred. No plea of limitation was taken in the Court below. It is true that the omission to take that plea does not estop the defendants from taking it in this Court, but as is urged on behalf of the opposite party, the plea depends upon evidence. Had the plaintiffs notice of the plea of limitation, they would have met it by producing proper evidence on the point. I think that under the circumstances the only course open is to set aside the decree of the Court below and to remand the case for trial on the merits according to law, allowing the defendants to take the plea of limitation and permitting both parties to give evidence in support of it. Costs of this appeal and of the trial below will be costs in the cause.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 7, 47 (a)—Order appointing guardian subject to furnishing security—Nature of order—Final order—Appeal, maintainablility of.

An order appointing a guardian for a minor subject to the person appointed furnishing security is a preliminary and conditional order, and is no bar to an appeal against the final order made under section 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act after the security is furnished. [p. 514, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against, and petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 to revise, the order of the District Court of Ramnad, Madura, in I. A. No. 45 of 1919, in O. S. Petition No. 47 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay. There was first an order of appointment of guardian. Any party aggrieved by that order should have appealed against it. The furnishing of security was a matter of routine. The fact that security was not furnished did not make the first order conditional. In the analogous cases of appointment of Receivers an appeal was held to lie against the order appointing a Receiver though no security was furnished. Palaniappa Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (1). See also Gopammal v. Srinivasa Aiyangar (2) and Gopammal v. Srinivasa Aiyangar (3). A reading of section 34 of the Guardians and Wards Act also makes it clear that the appointment is complete on the passing of the first order. Jaddo Tiwari v. Baram Deo Singh (4).

The order in this case was passed by consent of parties. No appeal lies.

Mr. M. S. Ramanuja Aiyangar, for Mr. C. S. Venkatacharier, for the Appellant.—The first order was only conditional on the furnishing of security. See Rules 240, 241 and 242 of the Civil Rules of Practice. The final order is provided for in Form No. 94 of the Rules and that order is the only one that is appealable.

The quantum of security is also objected to. The Courts should have enquired into allegations of immorality against the guardian.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken that, the Judge's order of the 6th December 1918 appointing a guardian not having been appealed against, the present appeal against the order of 3rd May 1919 is out of time and incompetent. The latter order is itself an indication that no final appointment was made before that date as it ends with the words "the final order will now issue," by which was evidently meant an order in Form No. 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice under section 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act. There are also indications in the earlier orders on the 6th December 1918, 10th and 23th April 1919 that the proceedings of those dates were only preliminary and conditional upon the furnishing of security. In such a case the order does not take effect till the security is furnished [see Subba Naik v. Rama Aiyar (5)]. We overrule the preliminary objection On the merits we are of opinion that there is no substance in the appellant's objection to the respondent's appointment, seeing that in the lower Court he withdrew his objection to her being made a guardian of Court. As to the sufficiency of the security, the lower Court was in the best position to judge whether it was sufficient, and it has declared its readiness to increase the amount of security required if it be found necessary to do so at a later date. There is no ground for us to interfere. The appeal is dismissed with costs. The civil revision petition is also dismissed but without costs.

Both appeal and petition dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

KEMP, A. J. C.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned Judicial Commissioner staying plaintiff-appellant's suit in the Small Cause Court under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act IX of 1899.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

Plaintiffs and defendants are merchants trading in Karachi and as such they entered into contracts for the sale and purchase of wheat and gunny bags with one another.

There were 4 contracts according to the plaintiff—a contract and cross contract for wheat and a similar contract and cross contract for gunny bags.

We are not concerned with the wheat contracts because although the defendant denied one of the wheat contracts, the plaintiff before us has given up his claim under the wheat contracts by virtue of which he claimed a balance as due to him and has confined his claim to the difference on the contract and cross-contract for gunny bags. These latter were as follows:—

On 14th November 1917, plaintiffs bought from defendants 30 bales May, June, July vaidas in equal lots at Rs. 42-8 0 per 100 bags. On 6th January 1918, plaintiffs sold to defendants 30 bales May June, July vaidas in equal lots at Rs. 44 8-0 per 100 bags. The suit was filed on 15th August 1918, i. e., after the last date for delivery, viz., 31st July 1918. There is, therefore, no question of the suit being premature.

Plaintiffs' claim is for difference on the contract and cross contract for gunnies. Defendants claimed to go to arbitration under the arbitration clause in both contracts. It is to be noted that the contract and cross-contract are on the same printed form containing the same clauses, for the same quantity of goods of the same kind, and for the same delivery.

The learned Judicial Commissioner stayed the suit, and no doubt, if the contracts are still considered as open and in existence on the due date, he had a discretion under section 19, Act IX of 1899, to decide whether the matters in dispute should be stayed or not and this Court will not lightly interfere with that discretion.

But the question is whether this cross-contract has the effect of cancelling the earlier contract and determining the damages payable by the defendant to the plaintiff. If the cross contract was entered into for the purpose of extinguishing the obligations under the earlier contract and determining the defendant's liability, he cannot now claim to keep alive the terms of the earlier contract entitling him to go to arbitration in the event of any dispute arising out of that contract.

Now, let us consider the practice of merchants in Karachi with regard to this kind of business. I may say that practice is not confined to Karachi but is one of the universal methods of business where the same merchants enter into forward contracts of sale and purchase with one another. Let us suppose the merchants are contracting for July 1918 delivery.

On a day in November 1917, merchant A sells to merchant B 100 bales July 1918 delivery at, say, Rs. 11. The market goes up. On a day in December 1917 merchant B sells to A on the same contract form 100 bales July 1918 delivery at the market rate for forward contracts of that day, say Rs. 12. There may subsequently be further contracts between the parties before the due date, viz., 31st July 1918. When the due date arrives we will suppose A has sold under different contracts with B 500 bales and bought from B 600 bales. Each merchant keeps an account of his purchases and sales for July 1918 delivery with the other in his books. This account is called a Sonda Khata.

In the illustration we have taken there will be 100 bales left over for delivery by B to A. The 500 bales sold by A are set off against the 500 bales bought by him and miti khari is only made with regard to the balance of 100 bales. The effect of this is that as to 500 bales the differences between the contracts of sales and purchases only are paid. The parties appropriate the bales sold to those bought in order of date in much the same way as payments are appropriated according to the rules in Clayton's case (1).

PROSUNNA CHANDRA v. BOIDYA NATH.

This is the practice amongst merchants, a practice which is incidentally referred to in the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Bhagwandas v. Kanji (2).

This practice of appropriation has the effect of extinguishing the obligations under the earlier contract, which is cancelled by the latter cross contract. It enables a merchant to determine his liability with the other party before waiting till the due date. Any other construction would enable the party who has to pay on the contract and cross-contract to take an undue advantage of the other party. Thus in the case before us, the plaintiff bought from and sold to defendant 50 bales under a forward contract of purchase and a forward contract of sale. As the plaintiff had no other transaction for that vaida with the defendant he naturally, according to the practice, considered that his contract of purchase from defendant was cancelled by his contract for sale to defendant and, therefore, the plaintiff did not do any of those acts which the law or the terms of his contract of sale to defendant required him to do as seller, e. g., to send a miti khari notice and, on failure by defendant, to send a delivery chit within the stipulated time, to close the contract at the market rate or exercise any of the other options allowed to him under his contract in the event of his buyer's default. To allow, then, the buyer defendant to say that the first contract of sale by him was not cancelled by the second or cross-contract of sale to him and that he claimed to go to arbitration on the earlier contract would be to put the plaintiff out of Court as regards his cross contract of sale to defendant. The second contract extinguishes the first and merely has the effect of fixing the difference to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. The defendant cannot, therefore, any longer claim that the arbitration or any other clause of the earlier contract is outstanding. The performance of the earlier contract is discharged by the later or cross-contract.

That the parties in the present case so regarded the contracts of sale and purchase is clear also from the fact that neither party attempted to demand or give delivery under either of the contracts.

There cannot, therefore, be any arbitration on the adjusted rights and liabilities of the parties. and any argument to the effect that mere non payment amounts to a difference which is referable to arbitration is beside the point, because there is no submission clause outstanding.

It only remains to add that the defendant does not appear to have any substantial defence to the suit and his contention that he is entitled to a reference to arbitration appears to have been made solely for the purpose of delay.

I think that merchants would regard with dismay any re-opening of an adjusted liability in the way the defendant's Pleader presses us.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the order of the lower Court set aside with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Remand—Order purporting to be under rule, but which ought not to have been made—Appeal, whether competent—Case not decided on preliminary point—Appeal—Further investigation necessary—Appellate Court, duty of.

An order which purports to be, and is in form and substance, an order under rule 23 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code is appealable, although the order ought not to have been made under that rule. [p. 517, col. 2.]

Where a case is not decided on a preliminary point, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to itself decide the appeal; if it considers that further investigation is necessary or that additional evidence should be taken, it may make an order directing this to be done, but it ought not to remand the case for re-decision under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code. [p. 518, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Backergunge, dated the 23rd May 1916, reversing the orders of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Ferozepur, dated the 20th April 1914, and remanding the case to his Court.

Babus Samatul Chandra Dut and Biraj Mohan Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of two suits for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, two parcels of land.

With regard to one of these parcels, the Record of Rights is in favour of the appellants, and with regard to the other it is against them. With regard to the former, the respondents brought a suit against the appellants. The latter brought another suit against the respondent in respect of the other piece of land. The land claimed by the appellant lies just to the east of the land for which the respondent brought his suit. The appellant claims the land in his suit as part of Jambudwip, while the respondent claims the land as part of Khoyerkati.

A Commissioner was appointed to make a local investigation and he submitted his report. The learned Munsif on a consideration of the report and other evidence adduced by the parties gave a decree to the appellant in respect of the greater portion of the land claimed by him as plaintiff and dismissed the suit of the respondent entirely. The respondent thereupon appealed to the lower Appellate Court and the learned Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that the trijunction point had not been correctly placed and that it was not safe to accept the boundary line obtained by measuring from a certain point mentioned in his judgment and further that a better result was likely to be obtained if the measurement was made from the Chitta, remanded the cases to the Court of first instance for ascertaining the boundary with directions to re-admit the suits and determine them after getting a local investigation made according to the directions given in his judgment and allowing the parties to adduce any additional evidence if they wished to do so. Against that order of remand, the present appeals have been preferred.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeals on the ground that as the Court of first instance did not decide the cases on a preliminary point, the order of the lower Appellate Court did not come within Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code and that, therefore, no appeal lies against the order, as the only appeal provided by the Code is under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), against an order under Order XLI, rule 23

We have been referred to the case of Mohendra Nath Chakraburtty v. Ramtaran Bandopadhya (1), in which the learned Judges held that no appeal lies against an order passed by an Appellate Court remanding a case otherwise than under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code. But the question is whether an appeal does not lie in cases where the order purports to be an order under Order XLI, rule 23, although the order ought not to have been made under that rule. On that question we have been referred by the learned Pleader for the appellant to an unreported decision in Second Appeal No. 107 of 1916 decided on the 18th January 1918. [See Baseemati Debi v. Tarit Basani Dassi (2).] In that case Richardson and Beacheroft, JJ., observed "whether the order was regularly or irregularly made, it appears to be in form and substance an order under that rule. That being so, the order must be treated as an order under rule 23 from which an appeal lies:" and the learned Judges overruled the preliminary objection that no appeal lay against the order.

We think that in the present case the order made by the lower Appellate Court purported to be, and was in form and substance, an order under Order XLI, rule 23, although we think that the Court ought not to have remanded the case under the provisions of that rule. The preliminary objection must accordingly be overruled.

The cases not having been decided on a preliminary point, the Court of Appeal below ought to have decided the appeals itself, No doubt if that Court considered it necessary that there should be a local investigation by the Commissioner or that any additional evidence should have been taken to enable it to pronounce judgment, it might have directed a further investigation or taken additional evidence. In the present case, however, it appears from the judgment of the Munsif that the parties did not want any further investigation or to produce any further material. The learned Munsif says: "I was once tempted to pass order for a fresh investigation, although neither party made any the faintest suggestion to that effect. On a most anxious consideration of the evidentiary materials placed before me and the facts and circumstances of these cases, I am disposed to think that any further local investigation will result in nothing but an infructuous expenditure of time and a protraction of these contentious litigations to the immense harassment and pecuniary loss of the parties. The parties in these cases appreciate this position and are anxious for a judicial settlement of their prolonged dispute and resist the suggestion of any further local investigation, which would indeed be an unwelcome infliction upon both parties without in any wise ensuring a chance of furthering the ends of justice, for the materials at the command of the Civil Court Commissioner that was deputed to make the local investigation are for all practical purposes exhaustive and neither party has in contemplation any additional material that might with advantage be supplied to the Commissioner. Neither party calls into question the integrity of the Commissioner or offers to put his report to the test of a cross-examination."

These remarks would seem to be conclusive, but if the lower Appellate Court thinks that the investigation is wrong and there should be a further investigation in order to enable it to pronounce judgment, we think that it may direct such investigation.

Our attention has been drawn on behalf of the appellant to the fact that the Court of first instance upon a consideration of the evidence as to possession came to the conclusion that the appellant had proved his title by adverse possession for 12 years and that the respondent had failed to prove possession within 12 years in the suit in which he was the plaintiff, and that the learned Subordinate Judge has not touched this question at all, and it is contended that had this question been gone into by the lower Appellate Court and decided in favour of the appellant, there would have been no necessity for remanding the cases for further investigation.

It is true that the Subordinate Judge has not touched this question, but he might have thought that a decision on the question of boundary was necessary for determining the question of possession and limitation. He has, however, not said so in his judgment.

In all these circumstances, we think that the order of the Court below should be set aside and the cases remanded to that Court for a decision of the appeals before it. If that Court considers that it cannot decide the cases without a local investigation or that the questions of limitation and of title cannot be decided without such investigation, then a Commissioner may be appointed for the purpose. The Court may also take additional evidence if it considers it necessary in order to enable it to pronounce judgment, but in either case it must be done by the Appellate Court itself, or by directing the Court of first instance to have the investigation made and to take additional evidence, retaining the appeals on its own file.

Costs will abide the result.

Bond, suit on, against representative of deceased executant—Decree, form of.

Where, in a suit upon a bond against the representative of the executant, the Court finds the bond to be genuine, it ought not to dismiss the suit on the ground that the deceased has left no assets, but should pass a decree against the assets of the deceased, if any, in the hands of the defendant.

Revision against the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra, dated the 23rd May 1919.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge dismissing the claim of the plaintiff. It appears that one Musammat Lado executed two bonds in favour of the plaintiff on the 15th of October 1917. She died sometime in 1918 and the suit out of which this application in revision has arisen was brought in 1919 on the basis of the said bonds. The claim was brought against the grandson of Musammat Lado as heir of his grandmother.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court found the bonds genuine but abstained from passing a decree on them on the ground that Musammat Lado had left no assets. The contention before this Court is that the question whether Musammat Lado had left any assets ought not to have been tried in the case and should have been left to the execution department, and in any case the plaintiff was not prepared on this point and did not summon evidence. I think the procedure of the Court below is incorrect. If the Court below thought that the bonds had been proved, a decree ought to have been passed against the assets of the deceased, if any, in the hands of the defendant. I, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the claim of the plaintiff for Rs. 260, with costs in both Courts against the assets of Musammat Lado, if any, in the hands of the defendant.

Appeal allowed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Sale-deed, entry in, of property not intended to be sold, effect of, on registration—Sale, validity of—Suit to recover such property—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 44, 144.

Where, in order to secure the registration of a deed of sale of immoveable property in a particular district, a piece of property situated in that district is included in the deed but without any intention of conveying that property to the vendee, the registration of the deed in that district is not a valid registration and amounts to a fraud upon the Law of Registration; consequently no valid title is conveyed to the vendee, and the sale-deed is void. A suit to recover such property from the vendee is, therefore, governed by Article 144 and not by Article 44 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 522, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 180 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 273 of 1917 on the file of the District Court, Godavari), preferred against the decree of the Court of the First Additional District Munsif, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 344 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 482 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Amalapur).

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 22nd July 1919, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The objection to the sale under section 21 of the Registration Act, based on the vagueness of description of the property sold (see paragraph 4 of the Appellate Court's judgment), is not sustainable. On the question of the validity of the registration of the deed, the Temporary Subordinate Judge's judgment has been so expressed that we are unable to discover whether he meant that in his opinion the parties did or did not intend that property in the one cent of land in R. S. No. 236/2 should pass by the sale-deed.

In the first part of paragraph 5, the Subordinate Judge says "it does appear that the parties did not really intend to sell or to purchase the said one cent of land." Later on he says that "it cannot be said that it is so patent that the parties intended that the property should not pass in the one cent."

Finally he concludes this paragraph by finding the 1st point in the affirmative, that point being itself worded in a negative form.

We call on the present Subordinate Judge of the Temporary Court to return a fresh finding on the 9th issue in the suit on the evidence on record within six weeks. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry submitted the following

FINDING.—The appeal has been remitted by their Lordships of the High Court for a fresh finding on the 9th issue, viz, "whether the suit sale-deed is not valid for want of proper registration?"

The question raised by the issue really involves two points:—

(1) Whether the parties to the sale-deed, Exhibit I, did not intend that the property in the 1 cent of land in R. S. No. 236/2 should pass by the document?

(2) If so, whether the registration of the document in the Sub-Registry Office at Amalapur was illegal, being in fraud of the Registration Law and the sale-deed was accordingly not valid?

3. 1st point.—The 1 cent of land in dispute is not mentioned at all in the body of the sale-deed, Exhibit I, which recites the arrangement of sale as being only in reference to the 15 acres 88 cents of land detailed lower down. The operative part of the sale deed, directing the vendee to enjoy the land with rights of gift and sale, etc., from generation to generation, has reference also to the 15 acres 88 cents of land mentioned previously. The schedule at the end of the document, however, sets forth the 1 cent of land as the 1st item, 3 other lands which make up a total of 15 acres 88 cents being subsequently entered. The 1 cent of land is situate in Amalapur within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registry Office at that place, while the other lands are at Krapa, within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Mummidivaram. The 1 cent is an unascertained part of R. S. No. 236/2, which is admittedly of much larger extent.

4. The plaintiff's 1st witness K. Janakiramayya, who is one of the attestors of the sale deed, affirms that there was no intention to sell the 1 cent of land in question under the sale deed, that it was included in the document for the purpose of registry at Amalapur, and that the entire land No. 236/2 has been in the possession and enjoyment of the 5th defendant's family, i. e., the family of the vendors. The 6th defendant, who was one of the vendors, as D. W. No. 1 no doubt states in his examination-in-chief that the 1 cent was also arranged to be sold and was actually sold; but in his cross examination he deposes as follows:—

"The Krapa land 15 acres 88 cents was arranged to be sold. Krapa is in Mummidivaram Registry. For the purpose of the document being registered at Amalapur, 1 cent of land of Amalapur was added."

As to the subsequent enjoyment of the 1 cent of land, the witness prevaricates by stating at first that it was being enjoyed by the 8th defendant's husband (vendee deceased), and then by saying that it has been kept waste. He also concedes that the vendee never paid taxes on the 1 cent and that his own family members have been paying the same for the entire land. The witness further admits that the situation of the 1 cent of land has never been ascertained and made definite.

5. So far as the evidence of the 6th defendant is concerned, it is prevaricative and unreliable; and if it shows anything at all, it is that the 1 cent of land has been along with the rest of the land in R. S. No. 236/2 in the enjoyment of his own family members, notwithstanding its inclusion in the sale-deed in favour of 8th defendant's husband, and that the 1 cent was added on in the sale deed just for facilitating the registration of the document in the Amalapur Sub Registry Office, which had otherwise to be done at Mummidivaram. The plaintiff's 1st witness is no doubt the maternal uncle of the plaintiff; but he was an attestor of the sale deed and as such cannot be regarded as a stranger unacquainted with the transaction. His testimony that there was no intention to sell the 1 cent of land and it was included in the sale-deed just for the purpose of registering the document at Amalapur, receives corrboration not only from the peculiar wording of the document indicated above but also from the evidence of the 6th defendant himself. The fact that an insignificant and undefined part of a larger extent of land was included in the sale-deed just for the purpose of registering the document at Amalapur, the entire land continuing in the enjoyment of the vendors themselves, also goes in support of the evidence of the plaintiff's witness. Under such circumstances, I do not think the lower Court was right in rejecting the evidence of the witness on the point in a summary fashion.

6. My predecessor, who heard the appeal originally, was also of the opinion that the parties did not really intend to sell or purchase the 1 cent of land. Later on in the course of his judgment he no doubt stated that it was not so patent that the parties intended that the property should not pass in the 1 cent; but he would seem to have so expressed himself for the purpose of distinguishing the present case from the ruling in Azmat Ali v. Sitla Bux Pal (1). But with the due deference, I think it should make no material difference whether in a case of this kind the intention not to pass property is patent on the face of the documents or is to be established from other evidence.

7. The learned Vakil for the respondent no doubt argues that though the 1 cent might have been included in the sale deed for the sole reason of facilitating registration at Amalapur, the parties might have done so with intent to pass property therein for that purpose at least: but having regard to all the circumstances of the case adverted to already, I do not think the parties could have had any such limited intent as is sought to be made out by the argument, which seems to be based on an article from a contributor published in 24 Madra Law Times, page 6.

8. Thus, on a consideration of the material evidence in the case I find on the 1st point that the parties to the sale-deed, Exhibit I, did not intend that property in the 1 cent of land should pass by the document.

9. 2nd point.—In Harendra Lal Roy Choudhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council lay down as follows:—

"Their Lordships hold that this parcel (25, Guru Das Street) is in fact a fictitious entry and represents no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security. Such an entry intentionally made use of by the paties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists, is a fraud on the registration law, and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid. To hold otherwise would amount to saying that mortgages relating solely to land in other parts of the Presidency could be validly registered by the Sub-Registrar at Calcutta, if the parties merely took the precaution to add as a last parcel, the Government House, Calcutta or any similar item."

Following the aforesaid ruling, their Lordships, Sadasiva Aiyar and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., held in Rama Naik v. Nagamuthu Nachiar (3) that neither the vendor nor the vendee in the case before them having intended that the property included in the sale deed solely for the purpose of facility of registration in an office not having otherwise jurisdiction to register it, should be affected by the sale, the sale-deed was not legally registered. It is no doubt pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent that, while in Harendra Lal Roy Choudhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (2) the property included in the sale deed for facility of registration was either non-existent or did not belong to the transferor, and in Rama Naik v. Nagamuthu Nachiar (3) the item, though in existence, did not belong to the transferor, in the present case the property is both in existence and belongs to the vendor, but the distinction sought to be made out does not seem to create any real difference in the principle that ought to govern such cases according to the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

(3) 43 Ind. Cas. 515; 22 M. L. T. 516; 7 L. W. 33

10. In the present case the parties to the sale not having intended that property in the 1 cent could be affected by the sale, the inclusion thereof in the document must be held to be a fictitious entry in fraud of the registration law within the meaning of the rulings cited above. I accordingly hold on the 2nd point that the registration of the sale-deed at Amalapur was illegal and the sale-deed was not valid.

11. For these reasons, I find on the issue remitted that the suit sale-deed is not valid for want of proper registration.

This second appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial

Mr. K. Kamanna for Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Respondents.—There is no fraud. In Harendra Lal Roy Choudhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (2) not only was the property fictitious, but there was no possession by the mortgagor. Hence fraud was presumed. So also in Rama Naik v. Nagamuthu Nachiar (3) where the property did not belong to the vendor. In the present case, the property is existent, belongs to the vendor and is in his possession, besides being within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar. It may be that the vendee did not intend to take possession because it was only one cent and is insignificant. Further, what is done for the convenience of both parties is not fraud. The distinction has been pointed out in Sankaran Nambiar v. Narayanan Thirumumpu (4).

The plaintiff should, in any event, pay the proportionate share of the purchase-money before he is allowed to recover.

The suit is barred under Article 44, Limitation Act.

Mr. N. Rama Row, for the Appellant.—The plaint is not for a proportionate share.

The finding is that the one cent of land was not intended by the parties to pass by the sale. There has been a fraud on the registration law and the document is a nullity. It need not be set aside, and the suit is governed by Article 144 of the Limitation Act.

JUDGMENT.—We must accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the one cent of land in Amalapur was included in the sale-deed, Exhibit A, purely for the purpose of getting the deed registered by the Sub Registrar of that place without any intention of passing title in it to the vendee. That finding is supported by the evidence and no valid objection has been urged against it. On that finding we must hold, following the case in Rama Naik v. Nagamuthu Nachiar (3), that the present case falls within the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Choudhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (2). The action of the parties in this case was a fraud on the registration law. The fact that there was land corresponding to the one cent included in the deed, belonging to the vendor is not sufficient to take it out of that principle, as the finding is that it was not intended that the deed should affect the land in any way.

On this view the sale-deed, Exhibit A, must be taken to have not been properly registered and the title to A Schedule properties was, therefore, not validly conveyed to the 8th defendant.

The next question is as to limitation. Article 44 does not apply, as there was no sale at all in law to be set aside. See Narayanan Chettiar v. Lakshmanan Chettiar (5) and Pethermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (6). The article really applicable is Article 144 but the period required for it has not expired yet. There is thus no bar by limitation.

Plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to have the A Schedule properties also included in the partition. But as pointed out by the respondents' Vakil the sum of Rupees 6,000, the consideration for Exhibit A, was utilised to pay off a mortgage and for other purposes binding on the estate. This was found by the Munsif and the point was not controverted in the lower Appellate Court, as the Subordinate Judge notes. We think an equity arises in favour of the 8th defendant against the plaintiff on that finding which we adopt, and on the sale to him being invalidated the plaintiff should pay him a proportionate share of the moneys so utilised, viz., of the sum of rupees 6,000.

This second appeal must be allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be modified as stated above. Each party will bear costs throughout with regard to A Schedule properties.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 54, 90—Execution sale—Publication of sale—Sale, whether vitiated because drum not beaten—Proclamation of sale—Irregularity, whether sufficient to set aside sale—Damage, proof of.

Under rule 54, Order XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code, it is sufficient if a proclamation of sale is announced by beat of drum. A drum need not be beaten at the time of the sale. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Unless the judgment-debtor is able to prove that an irregularity in a proclamation of sale has resulted in material loss to himself, the Court will not set aside the sale on the ground of such irregularity. [p. 523, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Aligarh, dated the 5th of May 1919.

Mr. Peare Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad and Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order refusing to set aside an auction sale. The appellant's case is that there was a material irregularity in proclaiming the sale as a result of which he suffered considerable loss, the property being undersold. The two irregularities of which complaint is made are: one, that the drum was not beaten at the time of the sale, and, second, that there was a mistake entered in the sale proclamation to the effect that there was an encumbrance of Rs. 14,000 on the property whereas there was no such encumbrance. As to the beating of the drum, there is no force whatsoever in this plea. There is nothing in the Code that says that at the time of sale the drum shall be beaten. The drum has merely to be beaten at the time of proclamation under Order XXI, rule 54. The complaint is also made that the drum had not been beaten even at the time of the proclamation of sale, but evidence was directed to prove that the drum was not beaten at the time of auction sale. So far as the error in the sale proclamation is concerned, the property was put up for sale in execution of a decree on the basis of a mortgage. It was the only mortgage on the property and it had been turned into a decree. The decree-holder himself filed an affidavit to the effect that there was no other burden on the property except the amount secured by his decree. The Sub Registrar in his report entered as the only encumbrance the mortgage of the plaintiff on the basis of which a decree had been obtained, and in the proclamation of sale the date of the registration was given and the fact that the plaintiff had obtained a decree upon it was also stated. There was really nothing in this transaction to dissatisfy anybody. Even if there had been any irregularity, it would have been upon the appellant to prove that that irregularity resulted in material loss and damage to him. The property was sold for Rs. 17,500. According to the objectors its value was Rs. 30,000. According to the evidence of witnesses they called, its value was Rs. 25,000. The objectors stated that they had one person who was willing to advance Rs. 25,000 on a mortgage of the property; but they abstained from calling him into Court. The decree holder, after the sale, was perfectly willing that the sale should be set aside if his money was paid. Although the sale took place so far back as October 1918, the objectors have made no attempt to pay off the debt. We have no power whatsoever to give any further extension of time. We find that there has been no irregularity established and no consequential loss. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

CITY CIVIL COURT APPEAL No. 20 OF 1919.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Sister, unmarried—Residence, right of—Family dwelling house, sale of—Purchaser, position of.

Under the Hindu Law the right of an unmarried sister to reside in the family dwelling house till her marriage is unaffected by the sale of the house in execution of a decree against the last male owner for a debt contracted without family necessity, and she is entitled to resist delivery to the auction-purchaser till suitable arrangements are made for her accommodation. [p. 526, col 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in Original Suit No. 327 of 1918.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He purchased in Court auction sale the plaint house in execution of a decree passed against the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. The defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had no rights in the property, and we may take it that the plaintiff purchased the right, title and interest of the 2nd defendant in the house. The house belonged to the 2nd defendant's husband Ekambara Mudali and then to Ekambara Mudaly's only son, who died a minor. On her minor son's death, the 2nd defendant as his heir became the qualified female owner of the house. The minor left his two sisters, defendants Nos. 6 and 7, unmarried. The money decreed against the 2nd defendant was passed for a personal debt of the 2nd defendant, the mother and the next heir of the last male owner. The plaintiff, purchaser in Court auction, obtained delivery of the downstairs portion, but the upstairs portion of the house now in dispute was occupied by the defendants Nos. 6 and 7, the two unmarried sisters of the last male owner, and they refused to vacate as they claimed a right under the Hindu Law to reside in the house which belonged to their father and their brother till their (the said defendants') respective marriages. Hence the suit brought to eject them on the ground that they had no such rights under the Hindu Law.

The learned City Civil Judge decided this interesting question of Hindu Law against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

So far as the widows of undivided co-parceners are concerned (including a widowed mother), the authorities are very clear that a private sale by the surviving male co-parcener which was not for family necessity or an execution sale held for a decree debt which did not arise out of family necessity, would not entitle the purchaser to oust such widows as the latter were entitled to reside in the ancestral family house till, at any rate, other adequate provision is made for their residence. The question of unmarried girls who were not related to the surviving male co-parcener as direct descendants from him but as sisters or cousins (that is as daughters of deceased undivided co-parceners), seems not to have formed the direct subject of any reported decision. In the case of the wife or widow of the surviving co-parcener, it has been held in Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (1) that the wife cannot set up any right of residence against the purchaser in execution for her husband's debts. I shall presently consider the ratio of that decision. But before leaving this part of the subject, I would finlly remark that the general question was elaborately considered by Sir Barnes Peacock, Chief Justice (with whose judgment, Mitter, J., concurred), in Mungala Dabee v. Dinonath Bose (2). The very general language of the learned Chief Justice's dictum is to the effect that the father's widow and "the other females of the family who are entitled to maintenance out of the dwelling selected by the father for his own residence and in which he left the females of his family at his death, cannot be turned out of that residence at least until some other place has been provided for them." If this general dictum applies, the unmarried daughters, of the father, being also "females of the family entitled to maintenance" and residence, can resist being turned out of the dwelling selected by their father for his own and their residence. No doubt there is a distinction between the widows of co-parceners and the father's widow on the one side and unmarried females on the other side, because the former are entitled to maintenance and residence till death or re-marriage, whereas unmarried females are entitled to maintenance and residence only until their marriage. But as the learned City Civil Judge points out, the difference in the length of the period and in the circumstances when the right of maintenance and residence ceases cannot affect, on principle, the right to resist the eviction from the family dwelling house so long as the right of maintenance and residence subsists.

Mr. Radhakrishna Iyer for the appellant argued that if every female entitled to maintenance and residence can exercise the right of obstruction to ejectment, it would be very unfair on purchasers from the surviving member of a Hindu family and on purchasers in execution of debts due by such member, and even the wife of the debtor and the unmarried daughters of the debtor might claim to resist the purchaser. I might here remark that even as regards the mother and the co parcener's widow of the debtor the right of residence is curtailed (a) by restricting it to cases where the debt for which the property is sold is not contracted for necessity, and (b) by the rule that the females cannot claim a right of residence in the whole of the premises if a portion of the house could be set apart for them and would afford reasonably sufficient accommodation, and (c) that if other resonable accommodation even outside the family dwelling house is offered, they may be bound to accept such a substitute, at least in certain circumstances.

As regards the wife, I shall now return to Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (1) where Bhashyam, J., delivered the judgment which was concurred in by Benson, J. While affirming the general principle which had been laid down in Venkatammal v. Andyappa Chetti (3) and Ramanadan v. Rangammal (4), the learned Judge distinguished the case of the wife of the debtor for whose debt the property was sold on the following grounds (so far as am able to follow his reasoning):—(a) the debt contracted by the husband himself is necessarily binding upon the wife absolutely (b) on his death without male issue, his estate devolves on her by right of inheritance and so no right of maintenance or residence apart from ownership as heir can be invoked in her favour as in the case of a co-parcener's widow, (c) the mother's right may be traced to the father's co-parcenary right just as in the case of the other co-parceners and is not derived from the debtor directly, (d) the wife's right of maintenance during her husband's lifetime "is only a matter of personal obligation on the part of the husband quite independent of the possession of the ancestral property by him." The learned Judge also fortified himself by the dictum of Kernan, J., in Venkatammal v. Andyappa Chetti (3) that if the debt in respect of which the sale took place was a debt due by the husband of the woman who claims the right of residence, "No doubt could be entertained that she had no such right." After making the above distinctions, he disallowed the right of the widow of the debtor to resist possession by the purchaser in Court auction. In doing so, he dissented from the decision in Manilal v. Bai Tara (5). (J. C. Ghose in his very learned work on Hindu Law seems to be inclined in favour of the Bombay decision and against Bhashyam Aiyangar, J.'s opinion).

I shall not lengthen this judgment by elaborately considering whether all the 4 distinctions (a) to (d) relied on by the learned Judge are tenable. It is sufficient to state that the wife and unmarried daughters of the debtor stand on a different footing from the widows of deceased co-parceners (including the mother) and from unmarried sisters. If even the undivided sons of the debtor cannot attack the sale in execution of the father's debt (not illegal or immoral), I do not see how unmarried daughters can be allowed to attack it or put forward a right of residence against the purchaser. As regards the wife, she is under even a greater obligation (under the Hindu Law) than the sons, not to question the validity of her husband's debts. The mother and the widows of co-parceners and the unmarried sisters are under no such obligation with respect to the debt of the surviving male owner which was not incurred for family necessity. I need hardly say that if the sale for their brother's debt itself would not deprive defendants Nos. 6 and 7 of their right of residence, a sale for the debt of the brother's next female heir and legal representative (which is the present case) cannot be held to deprive them of such right. The question whether a private sale of a person's ancestral family dwelling house without necessity (apart from the question of its being sold in execution of a decree for his debt) or without the purchase money being required to discharge his own antecedent debt can deprive even his wife and unmarried daughters of their right of residence, is a somewhat more difficult question on which it is unnecessary to express a final opinion in this case.

In the result, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

WALLIS, C. J.—I entirely agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—Question of general importance, what is.

Where there is a conflict of opinion as to what was intended to be laid down in a decision of the Privy Council, and what was the effect of the observations in that case, the question is one of general importance to justify the grant of a certificate under section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. [p. 527, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a decision of Mr. Justice Tudball and Mr. Justice Rafique, dated the 28th of October 1918, reported as 50 Ind. Cas. 101.

Mr. Gokal Prasad, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The value of the subject-matter of the proposed appeal exceeds Rs. 10,000, but this Court affirmed the decision of the Court below. We have, therefore, to see whether the case involves a substantial question of law. The question of law, which arises is, what constitutes antecedent debt so as to justify a transfer of joint family property by the manager of the family in the case of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. This Court has applied in this case the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) as contained in pages 447 and 448. The Madras High Court in the Full Bench case of Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (2) have taken a different view, and so have the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh in the case of Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (3). The Patna High Court has held the same view as that adopted by this Court in the present case and the judgment of the learned Judges of the Patna High Court was passed in the case of Sukhdeo Jha v. Jhapat Kamat (4). There is thus a conflict of opinion as to what was intended by their Lordships of the Privy Council to be laid down in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) and what is the effect of the observation made by their Lordships in that case. It

THE KARACHI MUNICIPALITY—DEFENDANTS.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), s. 167—"For anything done or purporting to have been done," meaning of—Injunction, suit for—Notice, when not necessary.

The expression "for anything done or purporting to be done" in section 167 of the Bombay District Municipal Act means that the section applies where something has been done, and not where there is an apprehension only that something will be done. A suit, therefore, against a Municipality to restrain an apprehended injury is not bad merely because the notice required by the section was not given: in such a case no notice is necessary. [p. 527, col. 2.]

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit against the Karachi Municipality for a declaration that a certain shop on plot 2 C-2, A-27, Napier quarter, is not an unauthorised structure and for an injunction to restrain the Municipality from demolishing it.

The plaintiffs' father, Tulsi Beebar, was prosecuted in the Magistrate's Court on 17th September 1917 for building without the sanction of the Municipality. Tulsi died on 9th May 1918 and the Municipality on 11th May 1918 were about to demolish the building but were met by this suit and consequently desisted from taking any further steps to demolish the unauthorised structure pendente lite. The Municipal resolution ordering the structure to be demolished is dated 20th December 1917. It followed a notice from the Municipality to plaintiffs under section 96 of Bombay Act III of 1901. Under these circumstances the defendant Municipality contend that as no notice has been given of the suit under section 167 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act III of 1901), the suit must be dismissed.

Shortly, the plaintiffs' reply is that no notice of suit is necessary where the suit is for an injunction.

This question has been agreed to be tried as a preliminary issue of law.

It may be mentioned that the alleged unauthorised structure consists in the conversion without Municipal sanction of a privy and sweeper's passage into a shop.

The point is not really covered by any Bench ruling of this Court. The Municipality, however, contend that the ruling in Abdul Wahid v. Manager Encumbered Estates (1) on section 80, Civil Procedure Code, applies equally to a case under section 167, Bombay Act III of 1901. This ruling is inconsistent with the ruling in Fundumal v. Mahomed Sharif (2). In my opinion the ruling in the former case must be confined to one on section 80, Civil Procedure Code, and any observations by the learned Judges as to the construction of section 167 of Act III of 1901 must be considered obiter dicta. Further, if Abdul Wahid v. Manager Encumbered Estates (1) can be taken also as applying to a case under section 167, Act III of 1901, we have here two conflicting Bench decisions which would require the point to be settled by a Full Bench.

Firstly, let us consider the wording of section 167. It lays down that no suit shall be commenced against the Municipality or a servant of the Municipality acting under its orders "for any thing done, or purporting to have been done" in pursuance of the Act without one month's notice. I cannot interpret the words in inverted commas except as meaning that the section only applies where something has been done, and not where there is an apprehension only that something will be done. That seems to me the plain meaning of the words. It does not, therefore, apply to a quia timet suit. The resolution of the Committee to demolish the building and the attempt to demolish which was abandoned is not an act done which would require one month's notice of suit under section 167. So far the Municipality had done nothing to affect plaintiffs' rights except that they caused plaintiffs grave apprehension that some act affecting their rights would be done. The plaintiffs are suing to prevent the Municipality doing an act, not the consequence of any act the Municipality has done. To construe the section otherwise would enable the Municipality to do the mischief sought to be prevented before a suit could be filed against it. But if my construction of section 167 be incorrect, notice will be necessary under section 167 for a suit for an injunction to prevent an immediate grave injury that is apprehended, because the only suit that can be filed in such a case would be a suit for an injunction. No question of the equitable right to give relief would arise because the section would require notice, and effect must be given to it. In this connection I may observe that the discussion in Abdul Wahid v. Manager, Encumbered Estates (1) on this point as to the effect of Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (3) on Flower v. Local Board of Law Leyton (4) is, in my opinion, merely academic. Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (3) merely lays down that no new rights can be created by equity but I would point out, regarding the discussion on this point by Pratt, J. C., that Flower v. Local Board of Law Leyton (4) does not to my mind create any new right. The right is the right to an injunction which is not taken away by the necessity of a statutory notice. Flower v. Local Board of Law Leyton (4) is not, therefore, really affected by the decision in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (3), and as a matter of fact Flower v. Local Board of Law Leyton (4) is not shown in any of the digests as an overruled or doubted case. It is cited as good law in XXIII Halsbury's Laws of England, paragraph 708.

Flower v. Local Board of Law Leyton (4) is a strong case because there the words of the English Statute, 33 and 39 Vic. C. 55, section 264, were "anything done or intended to be done or omitted to be done." If section 80, Civil Procedure Code, or section 167, Bombay Act III of 1901, were construable as referring to any intended act, I would hesitate, notwithstanding the decision in Naginlal v. Official Assignee (5) and Secretary of State v. Gulam Rasul (6) to say, in India the decision in Flower v. Local Board of Law Leyton (4) should be followed. In England since Flower's case (4), the Statute, 56 and 57 Victoria has been enacted.

That section 167, Bombay Act III of 1901, should be construed as I have held seems to me to be further borne out by the decisions of various High Courts on Local Acts containing the same or similar words: President of the Taluk Board v. Narayanan (7), Mahamahopadyaya Rangachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (8), Govinda Pillai v. Taluk Board of Kumbakonam (9), Municipality of Parola v. Lakshamandas (10). See also in this Court the decision of Crouch, A. J. C., in Mahomed Ali Essaji v. Karachi Municipality (11), which was not overruled by the High Court on this point in appeal. I note also that Kincaid, A. J. C., in an unreported case in this Court considered himself bound by Fundumal v. Mahomed Sharif (2). It is also to be noted that the Select Committee appointed to consider the old District Municipal Act (Bom. Act II of 1884) considered it unnecessary to alter the wording of the old section 42, because, I surmise, they considered it referred, on a true construction, only to acts done and not merely apprehended.

As to section 80, Civil Procedure Code, the words of that section show that no suit of any kind can be filed against the Secretary of State and that the words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" refer only to public officers and not to the Secretary of State. See Secretary of State v. Kalekhan (12), Secretary of State v. Rajlucki Debi (13). This construction is further corroborated by the amendment in section 80 from old section 424, where the words "such public officer" have been substituted in the former section for the word "him" in the latter. See also Naginlal v. Official Assignee (5) in which, however, the learned Judges seem to have considered that "purporting to be done" covered apprehended as well as past acts.

With great respect to the learned Judges who decided Abdul Wahid v. Manager, Encumbered Estates (1), I cannot see how the words "any act purporting to be done" can be construed otherwise than as referring to past acts and not an apprehension of future injury. Pratt, J. C, reconciles Fandunal v. Mahomed Sharif (2) to the view taken in Abdul Wahid v. Manager Encumbered Estates (1) by the argument that the property in Fundumal v. Mahomed Sharif (2) had been attached and that was an act done, but it is clear that the learned Judges in Fundumal v. Mahomed Sharif (2) treated the suit as one to restrain an apprehended injury and their judgment proceeds on that basis.

In two other suits* in this Court on section 167, Bombay Act III of 1901, the Judge in each case considered himself bound by Fundumal v. Mahomed Sharif (2).

Nevertheless, there is no direct Bench ruling of this Court on section 167, Bombay Act III of 1901, and for the reasons I have stated I consider no notice is necessary under that section of a suit to restrain an apprehended injury. I do not, therefore, consider it proper to refer a question of the construction of section 167, Bombay Act III of 1901, to a Full Bench on account of divergent Bench rulings on the construction of section 80 (old section 424) of the Code of Civil Procedure. I note, moreover, that Pratt, J. C.'s opinion at page 251† [Abdul Wahid v. Manager, Encumbered Estates (1)] apparently was that the words "purporting to have been done" in section 167 would restrict the operation of that section to past acts.

(13) 25 C. 239 at p. 243.

*Suits Nos. 352 and 522 of 1917.

Again, it has been argued that the use in section 167 of the word "suit" instead of "action" in section 43 of the old District Municipal Act (Bom. Act II of 1884) shows the Legislature intended to include suits for an injunction, that the word "suit" applies to all kinds of suits But the use of this word in section 167 instead of "action" is merely in accordance with the general description of such proceedings as terminate in a decree, and the use of the word "action" employed in England would be the employment of a term not used in the Code. Moreover, both in section 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 and in section 80 of the present Code the word "suit" is used.

That the act sought to be restrained in the present case was an apprehended act is clear. What the plaintiffs seek to restrain is the demolition, not any resolutions or orders passed by the Committee which are not sought to be followed by action.

I decide the issue in favour of plaintiffs.

Appeal, second—Finding of fact, when can be questioned in.

A finding of fact is binding on a Court of second appeal, but when no reasons are given for such finding and no reference is made to the evidence on which it is based, the finding can be questioned in second appeal. [p. 530, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 21st June 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, S. M.—[March 26, 1920.]—The question for decision in the case is whether the respondent Janki shared in the cultivation of the holding in dispute with his cousin Karia, the last recorded occupancy tenant, at the time of the latter's death. It is admitted that Janki and Karia or their respective fathers were previously separate and had separate holdings. The latter are in fact recorded up to the present time. But the respondent's case is that the respondent subsequently became joint in cultivation with Mangru, Karia's father, and after Mangru's death with Karia himself. The Commissioner's finding on this point is as follows:—

"It is equally clearly proved that at a later date the three branches again joined and although they continued to have their separate khatas, yet in reality they shared in each other's cultivation: in view of that evidence I find that appellant was in the lifetime of Karia sharing in the latter's cultivation."

A finding of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal, but it must be a judicial decision reached after a consideration of the evidence. There was evidence on both sides. The Assistant Collector in a reasoned judgment had given his reasons for coming to a decision contrary to that reached by the Commissioner. The Commissioner gives no reasons for differing from the Aesistant Collector or for his own conclusion and does not refer to the evidence on which he relies. In the circumstances his finding cannot be accepted as binding on this Court. In point of fact the only evidence in favour of the respondent's contention is that of a single witness, Durbali. This witness stated that Karia and respondent became joint in cultivation 12 years ago, but he also stated that the holding had previous to this been mortgaged to other persons and that the mortgage was not redeemed until after Karia's death; therefore, on his evidence the respondent cannot have shared in the cultivation of the holding in dispute.

It is contended that the khataani of 1319 F. only shows some of the plots as mortgaged but the entry of the mortgage of tenancies in the revenue papers is not obligatory, and if Durbali was wrong in this—he stated clearly that the whole land was mortgaged—he is not a reliable witness.

The respondent also relied on a receipt given in the name of Karia and Janki. The appellant stated on oath that this was given after Karia's death and his evidence stands unrebutted. In fact the date is 22nd April 1914=1321 F. and respondent's name was recorded after Karia's death from 1320 F.

In my opinion the Commissioner's finding that the respondent shared in the cultivation with Janki is clearly against the weight of evidence. I would decree the appeal with costs of all Courts and setting aside the order of the Commissioner would restore that of the Assistant Collector.

PORTER, J. M.—I agree.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Appeal Suit No. 121 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Amalapuram, in Original Suit No. 943 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Ramamurthi, for the Appellant:—The lower Courts erred in passing a conditional decree for plaintiff for possession on his paying the sale price. The English Law is otherwise and that law has been followed in India. The registration of the document perfects the sale and the vendor can separately enforce his claim for the purchase money or his lien or charge on the property for it. The lien is only a statutory and not a possessory lien. Equitable considerations can have no place in giving the plaintiff the statutory relief which he claims. Subramania Aiyar v. Poovan (1) and Rama Aiyar v. Vanamamalai Aiyar (2) have not been correctly decided. See Velayutha Chetty v. Govindasami Naicken (3) and Kandasami Pillai v. Ramasami Mannadi (4).

The decision in Nil Madhab v Haran Prosad (5) relied on by the lower Court is clearly distinguishable. That decision was founded on the peculiar facts of that case. There was evidence in that case that the parties intended that the sale was to take effect on a particular contingency happening.

Mr. A. Satyanarayana, for the Respondent:—The decisions in Subramania Aiyar v. Poovan (1) and Rama Aiyar v. Vanamamalai Aiyar (2) clearly lay down that the Courts are at liberty to pass conditional decrees in such cases. It is highly inequitable that the vendee should take possession without performing his part of the contract. He must first extinguish the vendor's lien or charge on the property.

JUDGMENT.—The short point in this second appeal is whether a plaintiff, who has not paid the purchase money of a property which has been conveyed to him, can maintain a suit for possession without paying for it or submitting to a decree for payment or a condition attached to the decree as to the purchase money which he had agreed to pay. No doubt it seems very reasonable that a man who comes to enforce his right against the property should be expected to do what is just and pay the price. But we think that there is no doubt whatever that the law in this country, following the English Law, is otherwise. Two Benches of this Court in Subramania Aiyar v. Poovan (1) and in Rama Aiyar v. Vanamamalai Aiyar (2) have held that, in such cases as the present, the vendee can be compelled to pay the purchase money in extinction of the lien of the vendor before he gets a decree for possession. That must proceed on two assumptions. The first is that the vendor is entitled to a possessory lien in respect of his unpaid vendor's lien, and the other is that you can give relief against the consequences laid down in the Transfer of Property Act as following from a transfer by sale-deeds and conveyances. With regard to the first of these propositions, we think that it is an oversight of the learned Judges to have treated an unpaid vendor's lien which only creates a charge on the property sold as a possessory right exercisable in the face of the claim of the vendee to possession. With regard to the second, the matter was very carefully considered by two learned Judges of this Court, the late Chief Justice and the present Chief Justice, in Velayutha Chetty v. Govindasami Naicken (3) where they point out that the broad proposition involved is this:—Can Courts give equitable relief to mitigate or suspend the consequences laid down by a Statute, and they came to the conclusion that such a proposition as that the plain words of the Statute could be whittled away by the application of the so-called equitable doctrines, was an absolutely untenable one and they expressed their dissent from the contrary decision in Baijnath Singh v. Paltu (6). The same principle was really involved in the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Kandasami Pillai v. Ramasami Mannadi (4). That was a case where it was part of the terms of a lease-deed or demise that the lessees should discharge a prior hypothecation on the land. It was found that this was not in the nature of a condition precedent but was merely a concurrent covenant with the other obligations of the parties to the document, and it was held by the Full Bench that the creation of a present demise involved the right to immediate possession by the person to whom the demise was made, unless it could be shown that any of the stipulations imposed upon him for performance were in the nature of conditions precedent.

The learned Judge in this case, besides the decisions in Madras which we feel constrained to hold are no longer good law in view of the Full Bench ruling and of the ruling in Velayutha Chetty v. Govindasami Naicken (3), refers to the case of Nil Madhab v. Haran Prosad (5) reported in 17 C. W. N. 1161. That case is also reported in 19 C. L. J. 146. We think that the learned Judge clearly misconstrued the effect of the decision because the ground upon which that judgment really proceeds is this:—that in that case there was evidence of an intention that a registered document was not to take effect ipso facto at once on execution and was not intended to be performed till something else had been done. Now if there had been evidence in this case that it was the intention of the parties that this sale-deed which is absolutely unqualified on the face of it should only come into effect when in fact the consideration had been paid, no doubt any Court would have the right to give effect to such a contract and to hold that there was such an intention. The section of the Transfer of Property Act which enumerates the respective duties of vendor and vendee is expressly qualified by the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary." The Calcutta case held on its particular facts that there was a contract to the contrary and that, therefore, clearly the consequence of the Statute did not necessarily ensue.

The appeal must be allowed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL No. 30 OF 1919.

February 17, 1920.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Justice Sir Ernest Fletcher, Kt.

KRISHNA KISHORE DE—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

AMAR NATH KHETTRY AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 12—Properties situate partly within and partly without ordinary original civil jurisdiction of High Court—Leave to sue, competency of—Jurisdiction, want of—Res judicata —Mortgage—Sub-mortgagee, remedies of—Suit against mortgagor—Court, proper.

The Calcutta High Court is not competent to grant leave, under clause 12 of its Letters Patent, to enforce a cause of action in respect of properties situated partly within, and partly without, the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, and a decree so far as it affects properties without those limits must be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction. [p. 536, col. 2.]

Where a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of an action in which an order is made, such order is wholly void and cannot operate as res judicata [p. 537, col. 2.]

A sub-mortgagee is entitled to bring a suit against his mortgagor and to realise the dues on his mortgage by sale or foreclosure. It is also open to a sub-mortgagee, but by no means obligatory on him, to frame his suit in such a way as not only to enforce his rights under his own mortgage but to enforce the original mortgage against the mortgagor of his mortgagor. A sub-mortgagee may thus be content to cut off the equity of redemption of his mortgagor or he may at his choice, by a suit properly framed, cut off the equity of redemption not merely of his mortgagor but also of the mortgagor of his mortgagor. [p. 536, col. 1.]

Where the properties comprised in an original mortgage are situated in the Mufassil, the mortgagee by the grant of a sub-mortgage along with a mortgage of property in the town of Calcutta is not entitled to have the forum altered in relation to the enforcement of the original mortgage. As between the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee, a suit to enforce the security may fittingly be instituted on the Original Side of the High Court at Calcutta. But as the original mortgagor could have been sued by his mortgagee in respect of liabilities arising out of the mortgage transaction only in the Mufassil Court, the mortgagee, by granting a mortgage to a third person of his interest as mortgagee and by including in that document a property in Calcutta, cannot be permitted to prejudice the position of his mortgagor and to render him liable to be sued in a Court other than the Mufassil Court. [p. 536, col. 2.]

Appeal against the following decision of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 4th April 1919:—

"This is a suit by the plaintiff to set aside a mortgage decree dated 2nd September 1914 and another decree dated the 24th August 1917 in Suit No. 1083 of 1912 on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decrees that were passed in that suit. In opening the case Counsel for the plaintiff stated that he did not desire to proceed against the infant defendants and accordingly any order that will be passed in the suit will not affect the infant defendants.

KRISHNA KISHORE DE v. AMAR NATH KHETTRY.

On the 30th August 1907 a mortgage was executed by defendants Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 9 in favour of defendant No. 3 in respect of an eleven-annas share in two properties situated in the Mofussil in the District of Howrah known as Santoshpur and Mandalika. The mortgage is in the ordinary form of a Bengali mortgage and it states that the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 9 had borrowed from the 3rd defendant a sum of Rs. 25,000 on a mortgage of their right in the eleven annas share of lots Santoshpur and Mandalika. As is usual in Bengali mortgages there is no grant or conveyance of the eleven-annas share in Santoshpur and in Mandalika. On the 23rd September 1911 the mortgagors redeemed the Mandalika property. On the 13th December 1907 the 3rd defendant mortgaged to the 1st and 2nd defendants his one third share in two houses in Calcutta and also sub-mortgaged to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 his interest in the mortgage of the 30th August 1907. It appears from the document that Haridas Banerjee, defendant No. 3, assigned to Sunder Dass Khettry and Bholanath Khettry (who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2) or the survivor of them and their or his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns all the said principal sum of Rs. 25,000 due and owing to Haridas Banerjee upon the security of the mortgage of the 30th August 1907 together with all interest thereon and further interest to become due, and the benefit of the covenants, powers and provisions therein contained for securing the same, and all the right, title, interest, claim and demand of Haridas Bannerjee into and upon the premises thereby assigned and every part thereof together with full power to demand, sue for, recover and receive the principal sum of Rs. 25,000 and interest. On the 25th November 1912 defendants Nos 1 and 2 commenced a Suit No. 1083 of 1912 to enforce the mortgage of the 13th December 1907, and they obtained prior to the institution of the suit leave under clause 12 of the Charter. On the 2nd September 1914 a preliminary decree was passed in that suit and nobody appeared except the infant defendants, who appeared by their guardian ad litem and submitted their interest to the Court. I should here state that defendant No. 10 is a puisne mortgagee by virtue of a mortgage of the 13th February 1915. On the 20th June 1916 the equity of redemption in Santoshpur was purchased in the name of Jnanendra Kumar Bose as benamidar for the present plaintiff, and on the 25th January 1917 Jnanendra executed a declaration that he had purchased the property as benamidar for the present plaintiff. On the 24th May 1917 the present plaintiff and defendant No. 10 were made parties in Suit No. 1083 of 1912, and on the 14th August 1917 a decree absolute was made in that suit. I am told by Counsel for the plaintiff, and I accept his statement, that at that time notice was brought to the Court of the facts upon which the present suit is founded but that I declined to stay the passing of the decree absolute on that day and referred the plaintiff to a suit. The present suit is, therefore, brought to set aside both the preliminary decree and the decree absolute passed in Suit No. 1083 of 1912 on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the suit and that there was no jurisdiction in this Court to give leave under clause 12 of the Charter having regard to the circumstances of the case.

The following issues were raised:—

1. Having regard to the prayer (c) to the plaint is the suit maintainable in its present form?

2. Is the plaintiff entitled to have the decree of the 2nd September 1914 and the decree of the 24th August 1917 passed in Suit No. 1083 of 1912 and the order of the 24th May 1917 passed also in that suit set aside? and

3. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled? A further issue was raised, namely, are the Khettry defendants guilty of fraud and collusion as alleged in the plaint? And has the plaintiff any cause of action against these defendants? But the charges contained in paragraphs 15 and 17 of the plaint of fraud and collusion against the Khettry defendants being withdrawn, this issue was not persisted in.

Now, the real question that arises in the suit is whether there was jurisdiction in this Court to grant leave under clause 12 of the Charter so that the suit could extend as well to the Calcutta properties which were comprised in the mortgage of the 13th December 1907 as to the Santoshpur property in Howrah outside the jurisdiction of this Court. The main argument raised before me was this, that some limit must be placed upon the provisions of the clause 12 of the Charter, and that although it may be that the Court has jurisdiction, if leave is given, to entertain a suit in respect of property both in Calcutta and in the Mofussil, such a suit cannot be entertained where, as in the present case, the property sub-mortgaged is in the Mofussil. It is said that the original contract between the parties who entered into the Bengali mortgage of the 30th August 1907, relating as it did only to Mofussil properties, contemplated that any suit to enforce that mortgage should be brought in the District of Howrah, and that it is inequitable on defendants Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 9, who were the mortgagors in that mortgage, that by virtue of the sub-mortgage they should be forced to appear in this Court whereas according to their original bargain they could not have been sued here but only in the Howrah Court. And it was faintly argued before me that upon the construction of clause 12 of the Charter, there is no jurisdiction to give leave where part of the property is situate outside the jurisdiction, it being desired to limit clause 12 of the Charter, so far as leave is concerned, to what are described in that clause as "all other cases." So far as this second point is concerned, I think it is too late in the day now to raise it and that by various decisions of this Court it has been held that the question of leave applies as well to a suit for land where part of the property is situate within the jurisdiction and part without as to "all other cases" referred to in clause 12.

So far as the other point is concerned, there appears to be no direct authority on the point. But it seems to me that by virtue of the mortgage of the 13th December 1907 I can only deal with the question as being a mortgage of Calcutta properties and also of Mofussil properties and that the same principles apply as apply to other cases where leave has been obtained where the suit extends to land outside Calcutta as well as to land in Calcutta and within the jurisdiction of this Court, and I am not prepared to make the limitation which I am asked to make upon the provision of clause 12 of the Charter and to say that that must be read subject to a proviso that leave shall not be given in a case like the present where the property outside the jurisdiction of the Court is comprised in a mortgage by way of a sub mortgage. I think that this really disposes of the main questions that arise in the suit and I do not think it is necessary for me to refer in detail to some of the authorities to which I was referred. As I have already stated, so far as the main point is concerned, there is no express authority and none of the authorities to which I have referred are really helpful with regard to that point.

On behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, a further point was raised. It is said that inasmuch as the plaintiff bought pendente lite, he is bound by any order that is passed in the suit, whether that order is right or wrong, and that it is not open to him, as he is a purchaser pendente lite, to question the correctness or the validity of any order made prior to his purchase. I do not think that I am prepared to assent to that proposition, because I think that if the plaintiff were right in his present contention, then the leave that was given under clause 12 of the Charter was wrong and the suit was really a nullity.

Two other points were urged but not pressed on behalf of the plaintiff. It is said that credit has not been given for a sum of Rs. 1,651 referred to in the plaint in taking the mortgage accounts. But no evidence was tendered before me upon this point, and it was open to the parties when the account was taken to have urged this contention. They did not choose to urge that contention then, nor have they chosen to adduce evidence on the point before me; under these circumstances, I cannot now go into that matter.

The final point that was raised was with regard to the question of the guardianship of the two minor defendants in Suit No. 1083 of 1912. It is said that they had a certificated guardian, their mother, appointed by the Alipore Court and that under these circumstances she was the proper person, and not an attorney, to be their guardian ad litem in the suit. But a reference to the order of the 20th February 1914 appointing the guardian ad litem and to the petition upon which that order was founded shows that it was brought to the notice of the Court that the infants had a certificated guardian and that a letter had been written to her asking her whether she was prepared to appear in the suit as the guardian ad litem of the infant defendants and that unless she was prepared to do so, an application would be made to the Court to appoint as the guardian ad litem of the infants some officer of the Court. It is in evidence that no reply was made to that letter. It seems to me that it is not now open to the plaintiff here, who has not elected to call any evidence on the point to question the correctness of the order of appointment of the guardian ad litem of the 20th February 1914. This disposes of all the questions that arise in the suit, and in the result, the suit fails and must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2."

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit to declare the invalidity of the decree in a mortgage suit, in so far as such decree affects land situated beyond the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court, on the ground that leave under clause 12 could not have been granted and the decree was consequently to that extent made without jurisdiction. The question raised is of first impression, and the facts material for its determination are not in controversy.

On the 30th August 1907 certain persons who may be called the Mookerjees and their trustee, one Bhattacharyya (represented by defendants Nos. 4—9 in the present litigation), executed a simple mortgage in favour of Banerjee (defendant No. 3) to secure the re-payment of a loan of Rs. 25,000 which was charged upon a share of lots Santoshpore and Mandalika, Patni Mahals in sub-district Howrah within the district of Hughli. On the 13th December 1907 Banerjee executed a mortgage in favour of the Khettrys (represented by defendants Nos. 1 and 2) to secure a loan of Rs. 20,000. The properties conveyed and assured by this mortgage included a share of two parcels of land in the town of Calcutta as also the interest of Banerjee as mortgagee under the document of the 30th August 1907. On the 23rd September 1911 the Patni Taluk Mandalika was released and absolutely discharged from the mortgage of the 30th August 1907 upon payment of Rs. 10,000 by the original mortgagors and with the concurrence of all the parties interested. On the 25th November 1912 the Khettrys instituted a suit (No. 1083 of 1912) on the original side of this Court to enforce their security of the 13th December 1907 against Banerjee, the Mookerjees and Bhattacharyya. It is necessary to observe that the suit was brought by the Khettrys, not only against their mortgagor Banerjee, but also against the mortgagors of Banerjee under the transaction of the 30th August 1907. The reason for this was that the Khettrys sought, not merely to enforce their security against their motgagor Banerjee and to cut off his equity of redemption under the mortgage of the 13th December 1907, but also to enforce the mortgage held by Banerjee against the Mookerjees and Bhattacharyya under the deed of the 30th August 1907; this relief they claimed under their derivative title from Banerjee who had granted a mortgage of his interest as mortgagee. The suit was thus in essence a composite suit wherein two distinct reliefs were claimed by the Khettrys, namely, first, to enforce a right of sale of Calcutta properties under the mortgage of the 13th December, 1907, and, secondly, to enforce a right of sale of Mufassil properties under the mortgage of the 30th August 1907. The Khettrys, accordingly, prayed for and obtained leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent on the assumption that the clause was applicable. The suit was decreed ex parte on the 2nd September 1914 and the preliminary decree then passed was made absolute on the 24th August 1917. Meanwhile, the plaintiff De had purchased the right, title and interest of the Mookerjees and Bhattacharyya at an execution sale on the 20th June 1916, and on the 29th July 1918 he instituted the present suit to impeach the validity of the decree in the suit of the Khettrys in so far as it affected land beyond the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court Mr. Justice Greaves has held that the Court was competent to grant leave under clause 12 and that the decree was consequently made with jurisdiction.

It is now well settled by decisions in all the Indian High Courts that a sub-mortgagee is entitled to bring a suit against his mortgagor and to realise the dues on his mortgage by sale or foreclosure: Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Parhsad (1), Muthuviira v. Venkatachallam Chetti (2), Narayan v. Ganoji (3), Bansi Lal v. Durga Prasad (4). It is also open to a sub-morgagee, but by no means obligatory on him, to frame his suit in such a way as not only to enforce his rights under his own mortgage, but to enforce the original mortgage against the mortgagor of his mortgagor: Zaki Hasan v. Deo Nath Sahai (5). A sub-mortgagee may thus be content to cut off the equity of redemption of his mortgagor or he may at his choice, by a suit properly framed, cut off the equity of redemption not merely of his mortgagor but also of the mortgagor of his mortragor. This he is able to accomplish by reason of his derivative title. Where a mortgagee transfers his interest by way of mortgage, his mortgagee, that is, the sub-mortgagee, takes it subject to the original mortgagor's right to redeem; consequently, the sub-mortgagee who holds a fragment of the interest of the mortgagee may achieve what the mortgagee might have obtained, namely, to cut off the equity of redemption of the original mortgagor. The form of the decree to be made in such a suit, where two-fold relief is claimed by the sub-mortgagee against his mortgagor and the mortgagor of that mortgagor, is set out in Seton on Judgments (1912) p. 2009 (Derivative Mortgagee v. Mortgagee and Mortgagor) and the Code of Civil Procedure, Appendix D, Form 9. No difficulty arises in a suit of this description when the properties included in the original mortgage as also the additional properties, if any, comprised in the mortgage by the mortgagee are situated within the same jurisdictions. Where, however, as here, the properties comprised in the original mortgage are situated in the Mufassil and the additional property included in the security granted by the mortgagee is situated in the town of Calcutta, an important question of some nicety arises. The original contract of mortgage plainly contemplates a suit in the Mufassil Court for its enforcement. Is the mortgagee, by the grant of a sub-mortgage along with a mortgage of property in the town of Calcutta, entitled to have the forum altered in relation to the enforcement of the original mortgage? We are clearly of opinion that the answer should be in the negative. As between the mortgagee and the sub mortgagee, a suit to enforce the security may fittingly be instituted on the original side of this Court; this is in conformity with the intention of the parties as indicated by the inclusion of the Calcutta property in the mortgage. If, however, the sub mortgagee is not content with relief against his mortgagor alone and claims to have a remedy against the mortgagor of his mortgagor, the situation becomes entirely changed. As he can claim this relief only by virtue of title derived from his own mortgagor in respect of the Mufassil property, he can do neither more nor less than what his mortgagor could have done towards the original mortgagor. The original mortgagor, as we have seen, could have been sued by his mortgagee in respect of liabilities arising out of the mortgage transaction only in the Mufassil Court. The mortgagee, by granting a mortgage to a third person, of his interest as mortgagee and by including in that document a property in Calcutta cannot be permitted to prejudice the position of his mortgagor and to render him laible to be sued in a Court never contemplated by the parties at the time of the mortgage contract. We are of opinion that this view is consistent with a plain reading of clause 12 of the Letters Patent which, so far as it is material for our present purpose, provides as follows:

"The said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try and determine suits of every description, if, in the case of suits for land or other immoveable property, such land or property shall be situated, or, in all other cases, if cause of action shall have arisen either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court."

In the case before us, the Khettrys, as derivative mortgagees from Banerjee, could enforce the security of the 30th August 1907 against the Mookerjees and Bhattacharyya, just as Banerjee himself might have done, in the Mufassil Court. The Khettrys might also, as the mortgagees of Banerjee, have sued him alone on the original side of this Court and barred his equity of redemption. But the Khettrys plainly could not be allowed, by the inclusion of two claims in one suit against two sets of persons in respect of properties situated, as regards one set in the Mufassil alone, make the composite suit against both sets of defendants maintainable on the original side of this Court. The decisions in Matigara Coal Co. v. Shragers (6) and Sarat Chandra Roy v. Nahapiet (7) are of no avail to the Khettrys; they merely show that where some of the mortgaged properties included in the mortgage deed are within and some without the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court, the Court has jurisdiction to grant leave to sue and to entertain a suit on the mortgage in respect of all the properties including those situated beyond the local limits. This principle might be of assistance to the Khettrys in a suit by them against Banerjee alone on the mortgage of the 13th December 1907, which included properties in the town of Calcutta as also mortgagee interest in property in the Mufassil. But there is no foundation for the argument that the suit as framed could properly be treated as one to enforce a cause of action which had arisen partly within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction; the contention is fallacious, as the causes of action under the mortgage of the 30th August 1907 and 31st December 1907 were distinct and affected different sets of individuals, of whom one set held properties situated entirely in the Mufassil. We do not think it would be right to strain the language of clause 12 of the Letters Patent with a view to cover a case of this description. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the Court was not competent to grant leave under that clause, and the decree, in so far as it affects properties in the Mufassil, must be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction [cf. the judgment of Lord Moulton in Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Debi (8)].

As a last resort, it was faintly argued on behalf of the respondents that the objection as to jurisdiction might and should have been raised in the original suit, and as it was not so raised, the rule of constructive res judicata should be applied; in other words, that the parties should be placed in the same position as if the point had been raised, contested and determined in favour of the Khettrys. There is obviously no foundation for this contention. It is an elementary principle that where a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action in which an order is made, such order is wholly void, for jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties, and no waiver or acquiescence on their part can make up for the lack or defect of jurisdiction. If any authority were needed to support this proposition, reference might be made to the recent decisions in Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (9); Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (10) and Ranjit Misser v. Ramdar Singh (11); where the earlier cases will be found reviewed. But if the decision of the Court is void for want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter, it cannot operate as res judicata; in order that a judgment may be conclusive between the parties, the essential pre requisite is that it should be the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. In this case, as already stated, the question of jurisdiction was neither raised nor decided; the position might have been different if the question had been raised and decided, for where a Court judicially considers and adjudicates the question of its jurisdiction and decides that the facts exist which are necessary to give it jurisdiction over the case, the decision is conclusive till it is set aside in an appropriate proceeding. But where there has been no such adjudication, the decree remains a decree without jurisdiction and cannot operate as res judicata.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the preliminary decree in Suit No. 1083 of 1912 passed on the 2nd September 1914, the decree absolute made on the 24th August 1917 and all subsequent orders made on the basis thereof must be set aside. The consequence will be that Suit No. 1083 of 1912 will stand revived at the stage when leave under clause 12 was granted. The Khettrys as plaintiffs in that suit will be at liberty to amend their plaint if they so desire and in such manner as they may be advised; if the suit is limited as a suit to enforce the mortgage of the 13th December 1907 against Banerjee, it will be tried on the merits. The appellant is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court below including the costs of the order made on the 7th August 1918.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 40—Commutation of rent—Compromise by some landlords, whether binding on others.

Commutation of rent under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the basis of a compromise between the tenants and some of the landlords is not binding on those landlords who were not parties to the compromise.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Mezufferpore.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. Their suit was for Nagdi and Bhaoli rents. So far as Bhaoli rent is concerned, the defence was that it had been commuted, under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, into Nagdi rent and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the produce rent. The plaintiffs in answer to this plea relied upon the fact that the order under section 40, Bengal Tenancy Act, was based on a compromise to which they were not parties. The learned Judge in the Court below thinks that this objection is untenable, because in his view the Collector would be justified in commuting the rent at the rate agreed upon between the parties, though some other landlord may not be a party to that petition of compromise. He thinks that the compromise in such a case is simply an admission by some of the landlords as to what would be the proper rent. If the Collector merely acts on that admission, that act cannot be challenged by any other landlord. I am unable to agree with this conclusion. Section 40 provides that an elaborate inquiry is to be held by the officer dealing with the application for commutation. That inquiry was admittedly not held in this case. The tenants say that there was a compromise between the landlord and tenants, but then the plaintiffs were not parties to the compromise. I do not think that any compromise order is admissible in evidence against any person who is not a party to the compromise. The learned Judge says that the compromise is merely an admission by some of the landlords as to what would be the proper rent. Here again I do not agree. Some of the landlords may compromise the matter on grounds other than the ground suggested by the learned Judge. I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the learned Munsif. The appellants will be entitled to their costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Surety-bond, forfeiture of—Agreement to indemnify surety, enforceability of—Public policy.

A contract to indemnify a surety against loss in the event of the surety-bond being forfeited is illegal and cannot be enforced.

Rule against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Howrah, dated the 25th July 1919.

FACTS.—The plaintiff at the request of the defendant executed a bail-bond and stood surety for the appearance of the defendant's man, who was an accused in a criminal case. It was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that if the accused failed to appear and there was a consequent forfeiture of the bail-bond, the defendant would make good any loss that might result to the plaintiff on that account. The accused having failed to appear, the bail-bond was forfeited and a sum of Rs. 300, being the amount of the bond, was realised from the plaintiff. Thereupon, on the basis of the aforesaid agreement, the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for the recovery of the amount of the bond. The Small Cause Court Judge found that the allegations of the plaintiff were true and decreed the suit. The defendant moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Haradhon Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Narendra Nath Choudhury, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule must be made absolute on the authority of the case of Prosonno Kumar Chakravarti v. Prokash Chandra Dutta (1). That case followed the decision of Mr. Justice North in the case of Consolidated Exploration and Finance Co. v. Musgrave (2). The judgment and decree of the Judge of the Small Cause Court are set aside. In the circumstances of the case I make no order as to costs. If the defendant has deposited the decretal amount or any portion of it, he will be entitled to ask for a refund.

Consent decree - Limitation, plea of, waiver of—Appeal, whether lies.

Where a suit is time-barred but the defence of limitation is waived and a decree is passed, such decree is a consent one, and no appeal lies therefrom. [p. 540, col. 2]

Appeal from the decree of the High Court of Madras (Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Coutts Trotter, J.), dated the 29th March 1915, which varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Ganjam.

FACTS.—The suit was brought to recover monies alleged to be due on a settlement of accounts. It was found by the Subordinate Judge that the account was false and fraudulent and that the claim, apart from the alleged settlement, was barred by limitation, but it having been stated on behalf of the defendant that he would pay whatever sum was rightly due, an account of the dealings between them was taken from the beginning, and judgment passed for a particular sum. On appeal the High Court (Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Coutts Trotter, J.), whilst not reversing the finding that plaintiffs' claim was barred, proceeded to re investigate the items of account and made certain further allowances in favour of the respondents.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. (with him Mr. Kenworthy Brown), for the Appellant, submitted that apart from the fraudulent settlement of accounts the respondents' claim was barred by limitation, and the High Court ought not to have varied the decree of the trial Judge which was granted because appellant consented to it.

Mr. Parikh, for the Respondents, submitted that the directions given by the High Court for the drawing up of the account were right, and the amount found due on the account being taken should be allowed to stand.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships think that this appeal can be dealt with in a very few sentences.

The respondents brought an action against the appellant upon an account stated and the learned Subordinate Judge, before whom the case was heard, found that the account stated was a deliberate fabrication and fraud on the respondents' part. It followed that they were compelled to rely entirely upon the items of claims contained in a general account against the appellant. On examination of that account the explanation of why the stated and settled account had been fraudulently prepared became obvious. It was because each one of the items was barred by the Statute of Limitations, the result being that when once the settled account was displaced the plaintiffs had no foothold whatever in the Courts. The defendants, however, considered that they ought not to rely upon the lapse of time to deprive the plaintiffs of the benefit of any item which they were in a position to prove and the case proceeded upon this footing. There can be no doubt that the learned Subordirate Judge before whom the case was tried thoroughly realised the position. He pointed out more than once that the plaintiffs' action must fail, and he concluded by saying that the plaintiffs only got a decree 'owing verily to the defendants' charity and not because of any legal right yet alive." The defendants having, however, consented, the learned Judge made an order for the particular sum, directed that the plaintiffs should pay the costs of the suit and disallowed interest from the plaint to the date of the decree. It might have been thought that the plaintiffs would have been satisfied with such advantage, but they appear to have appealed to the High Court and the High Court have, unfortunately, as their Lordships think, proceeded to re-investigate the items of the account and have made certain farther allowances in favour of the respondents than those which were originally allowed by the Subordinate Judge. In doing this it appears to their Lordships that the High Court misunderstood the true position of the case. In truth the original judgment was a judgment by consent and it could only have been by consent that any judgment for the plaintiffs could have been obtained at all, for, as the learned Subordinate Judge said, the plaintiffs only got any decree owing verily to the defendants' charity. If it were regarded as a consent judgment there could be no appeal; if it were not regarded as a consent judgment it then became necessary once more to examine into the conditions associated with the Limitation Act and it would have followed that the plaintiffs' action would have been dismissed with costs. The truth is that the real substance of the appeal was the question of the fraudulent and fabricated settled account, in which the High Court entirely agreed with the Subordinate Judge, and it is possible that, their attention having been diverted to that main issue, they overlooked what was the true nature and character of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. However that may be, their Lordships have no hesitation whatever about this case. They think that the appeal ought to be allowed, the judgment of the High Court (except as to costs) reversed and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge restored. The respondents will pay the costs in both the Courts below and of this appeal.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 14—Award, suit to impeach, maintainability of.

When an award has been made and filed, and has become enforceable as a decree of Court, a party affected thereby can maintain a suit to impeach it on grounds not included within the scope of section 14 of the Arbitration Act, and to investigate and determine the controversy according to the procedure prescribed by law, especially where the ground of the attack goes to the root of the matter. [p. 549, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Rankin, dated the 19th August 1919.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of

RANKIN, J.—By a contract in writing No. 113, dated the 2nd August 1918, the applicant agreed to buy from the respondents 16 bales of a certain kind of grey Dhoties at Rs. 56 per pair. These bales were to comprise two sorts distinguished by numbers 736 and 7036. The printed contract is headed Forward Contract but in the writing at the foot of the form are the words "shipment May, June, 1918." The contract contains a submission to arbitration which reads, so far as I am concerned with it, as follows:—"Any dispute or claim under this contract is to be settled by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce."

The goods tendered by the sellers in fulfilment of contract were rejected by the buyer on the ground that each bale did not contain Dhoties having borders of seven particular colours. There is no dispute about this fact, but the sellers say that there is no such stipulation as to particular colours in the contract of sale.

Upon this dispute an arbitration was held under the rules of the Chamber of Commerce and on 5th June 1919 an award was made against the buyer for Rs. 16,076-11-0 with certain interest and costs.

The buyer now seeks to impeach the validity of the award.

The facts upon which the buyer founds are these. He says that these particular goods are a new and not an established line of merchandise in Calcutta and that at the time of the contract they had already arrived. That the contract was made by a broker Idan Chandak, employed by the sellers to dispose of these goods and furnished by them with a shipment sample which is an exhibit in these proceedings. That sample contained a specimen of No. 736 and No. 7036 each with a coloured border. It also contains seven small cuttings each with a coloured border, which cuttings can only be intended to show the colours of the borders. Included among the seven are the same borders as are on the two specimens above mentioned. In the margin opposite to each cutting and under the heading "assortment" are figures which denote the number of pairs having each border. The figures for the seven are 56, 28, 28, 28, 28, 28, 29 which total 225, and there is a note which states that in each bale there are to be 225 pairs of No. 736 and 225 of No. 7036. On the back of the cover is a label which contains the figures 126-136.

The buyer's case is that he bought on or with reference to this shipment sample and intended to obtain the assortment of borders therein so carefully shown. He files an affidavit of the broker, stating that the sample was given to him to explain to intending buyers the assortment of borders as well as the kind of material and that at the time of the sale he told this buyer that the goods would contain the seven different borders illustrated in the sample.

The sellers' case on the merits is that the shipment sample refers in its entirety to the eleven particular bales, whose numbers 126-136 are on the back; that the contract was for 16 bales not 11; that the sale was not of individual bales by separate samples appropriate to that special lot; that this sample was provided to show the material, and that nobody in the piece-goods business could believe for a moment that the buyer did not understand perfectly well that he was not contracting for these particular bales and could not expect to get exactly that assortment of borders. The sellers point to the contract which is in writing, and they say that it is not a sale by sample at all.

How much substance there is in the discrepancy between the borders on the goods tendered and the borders illustrated in the sample, I do not know. The buyer's chief grievance seems to be that a red border illustrated in the sample in not present, at all events in due proportion. In law the discrepancy is sufficient in any case if the buyer be otherwise in the right.

This being the general nature of the dispute, the sellers called an arbitration in March 1919. It is important to see what was the defence taken by the buyer in his case, dated 23rd May 1919, before the arbitrators. The document, which is exhibited with his affidavit, is divided into two parts: objections to the jurisdiction and defence on the merits. The objections to jurisdiction are five in number and all five are pointless and bad. The only observations which need be made about them are two, first, that they nowhere contain or even adumbrate a suggestion that there was no contract between the parties; secondly, that they do contain an allegation that the re sale on the basis of which the seller's claim for damages is computed was fraudulent. This latter charge is made without any particulars, but I now understand it to mean that the sellers did not have the goods and that the re-sale was only a pretence. The defence as to merits is that already explained; it contains a statement of an express verbal promise by the broker that the borders in each bale would be those shown by the sample, or of an admission verbally made to this effect by the broker in the presence of both parties.

On the 28th May, the buyer's Solicitor by letter to the Tribunal says this:—"My client is desirous of being represented by Counsel before the Tribunal, when it is sitting to decide on the said questions, which are highly technical, and I have no doubt that your Court will avail itself of legal assistance. If you inform me of the date fixed by the Tribunal for hearing, I will appear with Counsel and client and his evidence." The reply of the same date is this:—"With reference to your letter of the 23th May, I am directed by the Court which has been constituted to adjudicate on this dispute to say that they do not require the attendance of either of the parties with or without Counsel or legal adviser. The arbitration will be held at 3 P. M. to-morrow, Thursday, the 29th May."

On the 5th June the arbitrators found against the buyer, who now seeks to set aside the award, on grounds which, in my mind, reduce themselves to two.

The first line of attack is one discovered since the arbitration and produced for the benefit of this Court. It is based not indeed upon an allegation that the parties were not ad idem but upon an allegation that the contract was as the buyer says, and that the broker made the express verbal representation as to the borders; but that if this be wrong, contrary to the buyer's view, then the parties were not ad idem; then there was no submission and then the award falls with the contract.

Now if the buyer desired to impeach the contract on the grounds of fraud, misrepresentation or mistake, he could have brought his suit and had the arbitration restrained on the rule in Kitts v. Moore (1). If he did not desire to adopt this course, he could prior to the arbitration have claimed that the contract was voidable on those grounds and have elected to avoid it. This would have been a dispute which went to the existence or validity of the submission itself, and on such a dispute the arbitrators could not at all events finally adjudicate so as to bind him at all. Now so far as I know, at no time prior to the award did the buyer ever even elect to avoid the contract on these grounds or any others. He has gone before the arbitrators taking all sorts of objections, but these are on the footing that there was a contract and on the footing that the submission therein contained was valid. Their jurisdiction depended upon what the dispute was and it cannot be ousted now by the buyer seeking to dispute something else.

Having no dispute before them as to the existence of the contract or as to the validity as distinct from the scope of the submission, the arbitrators rightly rejected the invalid and unsubstantial pleas to their jurisdiction. If they have properly dealt with the merits, the award cannot in my judgment be impeached at all. Still less will such a case be entertained as a pis aller, when the facts to which the buyer swears are that both parties were agreed about what they meant, that the sellers are falsely alleging that both parties meant something different but perhaps both parties may be wrong. Such a case in my judgment calls for and admits of no investigation whatsoever, save a comparison of the buyer's case before the arbitrators with the contentions which he raises now. His statements may be true or false about the merits; they matter nothing for this purpose.

The second line of attack is that the award should be set aside under section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act. On this there are two matters for consideration. First, the allegation that the re-sale on the 25th February 1919 was fraudulent or only colorable on the sellers' part and that the award has, therefore, been improperly procured. Secondly, the fact that the arbitrators did not allow oral evidence and did not permit the buyer to attend by Attorney and Counsel.

The alleged fraudulent re-sale is mentioned in the buyer's case before the arbitrators as an objection to their jurisdiction. What the buyer states as to the facts in his affidavit on this motion is wild hearsay from unnamed sources and is not evidence at all. The one element of fact is that the goods were with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, and this circumstance which is not in the least degree suspicious is fully explained by the sellers. It is manifest that the buyer has not now and never has had a tittle of evidence to support his charge. On the measure of damages it does not matter whether the sellers re-sold the Dhoties, wore them, or lost them: unless the alleged figure of re sale was below what the goods should have fetched at the date of the breach, the arbitrators who are experts on such questions would be quite entitled to award the full amount of the sellers' claims. This allegation of fraud was introduced, as the buyer's case shows, for another object altogether, namely, under an erroneous notion that the mere allegation of fraud would oust the arbitrators' jurisdiction and defeat the arbitration clause. If I am now asked to re try the issue on the question whether the award has been improperly procured, I hold that there is no evidence worthy of attention to sustain the charge.

This second use of the allegation failing, learned Counsel for the buyer explained to me a third. He said that he was not so much relying upon having proved in this way that the award was procured by fraud as contending that this part of the buyer's case made it particularly easy to regard as misconduct the arbitrators' refusal to hear oral evidence. Whether this is a more reasonable proposition, I shall consider later.

I pass to the complaint which arises out of the letters of the 23th May exchanged between buyer's Solicitors and the Tribunal.

In the first place the buyer's complaint that he was not allowed to appear by Counsel or Attorney may be dismissed. The matter is clearly covered by Rule XIV of the Chamber of Commerce Rules, which are really part of the arbitration clause in the contract. Assuming that this rule does not deprive the buyer of the right to the proper exercise of a discretion by the arbitrators and that this may be called in question under section 14 of the Arbitration Act, I should require very plain and solid reasons before finding misconduct upon such a matter. These arbitrations exist largely to obviate protracted and expensive litigation and if this be one of the sacred rights of man, this buyer has contracted out of it.

The refusal, after demand made, to hear oral evidence at all is a more difficult and important matter and the buyer's written case must be looked at carefully and as a whole.

The arbitrators' first duty was to examine this. It is not, and is not required to be, a formal pleading and in it the buyer could and did indicate both the facts relied upon and the nature of his evidence. It cannot be that arbitrators are guilty of misconduct in not entertaining any case which is not fairly and clearly raised. I have, therefore, to put aside altogether any question of there having been no contract, or of the contract having been voidable and having been avoided by election of the buyer. This being so, the fundamental thing for the arbtirators was the fact that this contract was in writing. Apart altogether from the 13th clause, the ordinary rule that it could not be varied or added to by oral evidence was the most plain stepping stone to a decision. The writing says nothing about a sample. It is a sale by description. "Upon a sale of goods described in a written contract, evidence that a sample was exhibited at the time of the sale is not admissible for the purpose of showing either that the seller was entitled to deliver goods according to the sample but not answering to the description or that the buyer was entitled to refuse goods answering to the description because not corresponding to the sample." Leake on Contracts, 6th Edition, page 120; Evidence Act, section 92; Tye v. Fynmore (2), Meyer v. Everth (3), Syers v. Jonas (4) and Harnor v. Groves (5).

Now on the buyer's case this simple consideration was in my judgment sufficient to decide the only issue raised. If the statements of the broker are to be treated as a verbal warranty, they could only be put in evidence on the footing that they did not add to or vary the contract but were a purely collateral matter. The arbitrators' duty in face of the buyer's case was, simply to hold, first that it was not a collateral matter, and, secondly, that if it was, it had nothing to do with them. Their duty was to decide disputes under the contract and only these. If again the statements of the broker are tendered under the contract as evidence to enable the arbitrators to apply the contract to its proper subject-matter, "Grey Jaconet Dhooties No. 736 (16 into 14) and 7036 (17 into 15) 39 into 2 9 yards 7/16 col," the arbitrators were quite right to ignore such evidence. No one even now contends that the numbers 736 or 7036 import a particular assortment of borders or that such an assortment is conveyed by the words "7/16 col." or that the 16 bales contracted for were the specific bales 126-136 which are eleven only.

No doubt it is still possible for the buyer, if allowed to invent a new case to, suggest a custom in the piece goods trade by which all sales are sales by sample even when reduced into writing so as not to express this term. Such a case was not raised before the arbitrators and if it had been, I think that it is just the sort of point which these arbitrators could validly decide by their own knowledge.

The truth is that the buyer's case was put forward as a case of sale by sample and the arbitrators were bound in law to rule against him on this point.

The whole of the six paragraphs which form the buyer's case upon the merits—they form the buyer's whole case apart from his futile pleas to jurisdiction—are governed and introduced by words which show this plainly (without waiving..... reasons given below). There is not anywhere in the whole case—not in the 5th plea to jurisdiction, for example—a trace of a suggestion that sellers were not able and ready to deliver, apart from the question about assortment of borders.

The evidence proffered is described in paragraph 3 "as evidence of himself and the said Babu Idan to prove that the sale was by the said sample and that it was specifically agreed that goods of 7 different borders in a bale according to the said sample would be supplied."

So far as regards the alleged fraud as to the re-sale, it is clear from the buyer's case that he was not proposing to prove the fraud before the arbitrators at all. He says that it can only be proved before the High Court. He says that he "has recently come to know" giving no indication of the source. The charge of fraud is itself so bald and empty that any tribunal would be well entitled to ignore it: Wallingford v. Mutual Society (6).

It is put forward as an allegation which merely as an allegation ought to oust the arbitrators, from the case and beyond the function it has and professes to have no other point, sense or purpose.

In these circumstances I have to enquire whether the arbitrators have exceeded their rights under Rule XIII of the Chamber of Commerce Rules. I think they have not. The intention is first that the parties' contentions shall be put in writing; that thereupon the arbitrators shall have jurisdiction to decide whether a formal hearing is necessary. If oral evidence beyond the mere proof of documents of which the factum is not disputed is on the face of the written cases relevant and admissible, I think that upon these rules a refusal to hear such evidence would be very difficult to support, except perhaps upon such questions as market values, as to which the arbitrators may themselves be entitled to act on their own expert knowledge or (under Rule XVII) that of others. I think, however, this case fails to satisfy the condition which I have stated. The letter of 28th May to the Tribunal must be read with reference to the buyer's case and is an offer of irrelevant and inadmissible evidence only, coupled with argument of Counsel. The reply is in terms of Rule XIV and the arbitrators' conduct is in my judgment within Rule XIII as to procedure. I think they were entitled to proceed without a formal hearing and that an award in favour of the sellers was the only possible decision. If the allegation of fraud as to the re-sale had been seriously stated and not mera palpatio and if it had been mooted upon the question of the amount of damage, I should at least have remitted the award to the arbitrators to make sure that they had not assessed the damages on the strength of the alleged re-sale, as distinct from merely limiting the figure by the amount admitted to have been received upon re sale. It would be utterly wrong, however, to do so in the absence of these conditions and I see no reason to think that this assessment of damage was not right.

If it was desired to have it set aside either as a nullity by reason of its not being within the scope of a valid submission or under section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act, the proper course under the rules was to apply by petition to have it taken off the file or to have it set aside. Instead, the buyer commenced a suit on 16th June and brought on a motion for an interlocutory injunction. I will not here repeat what in previous cases I have said about this particular abuse. It is defended sometimes when the submission is attacked, on the ground that the application is not within section 14 or any other section of the Act. This is no valid reason. The award here was filed under the Act before action brought, and became enforceable in execution under the Act as though it were a decree. If it is to be taken off the file as a nullity, the application should be made under the Act which has been abused. In England awards, save by leave obtained on summons, are not enforceable except by an action. It is not usual or necessary, therefore, to apply to set aside an award on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the arbitrators. The old English cases, however, show that this was done where a step could be taken to enforce the award and the interference of the Court was necessary: Russell, 9th Edition, page 369: Doe d Turnbull v. Brown (7), Worral v. Deane (8). This under the Indian Arbitration Act is always the position and all applications to set aside an award which has been filed should be made by petition, whatever be the ground.

At the hearing of the motion I declined to entertain it except on the basis that it be treated both as the trial of the action and as a petition under the Indian Arbitration Act. To this Counsel on both sides consented. I pointed out that if any oral evidence became necessary in these cases, it is open to the Court on petition and either by first directing an issue or otherwise to take such oral evidence. Also that it is not by any means intended that such matters should be disposed of without full consideration. What is intended is that they should be disposed of finally with promptness; without unnecessary vexation, delay or expense; and in a proceeding in which the power to remit an award can, if necessary, be properly exercised.

I see no reason in this case to exercise the power of taking oral evidence and I dismiss the motion and the action with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that a contract for sale of piece-goods, alleged to have been made between him and the defendants on the 2nd August 1918, was invalid, and that an award made by the arbitration tribunal of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce in their favour on the 5th June 1919 for damages for breach of the said contract was equally void and inoperative. The plaintiff also prayed for a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants from enforcing the award. The suit was instituted on the 16th June 1919. On the 20th June, the plaintiff applied for an interlocutory injunction during the pendency of the suit and an ad interim injunction during the pendency of the Rule on the application. A Rule was issued and an ad interim injunction was granted on terms as to security. The Rule for interlocutory injunction was heard on the 25th July 1919. Mr. Justice Rankin, as appears from his judgment, declined to entertain the hearing of the motion except on the basis that it be treated both as the trial of the action and as a petition under the Indian Arbitration Act." He further thought that Counsel on both sides consented to this, and thereafter heard the matter on the affidavits, as he saw no reason to exercise the power of taking oral evidence. On the 19th August, judgment which had been reserved was delivered, whereby the motion and the action were dismissed with costs. The plaintiff has now appealed against this judgment. We have not been invited to consider the propriety of the order in so far as it dismissed the application for interlocutory injunction during the pendency of the suit. The plaintiff has, it was stated, brought into Court the money due on the award and no longer desired an ad interim order. The substantial question argued in the appeal is, whether the suit has been properly tried without oral evidence, as if the plaint were a petition under the Indian Arbitration Act.

We have at the outset to consider whether the procedure adopted in the Court below was followed with the consent of Counsel on both sides, for, as Lord Hardwicke held in Bradish v. Gee (9), it is well settled that a judgment obtained by consent of Counsel acting in Court, in a matter within their authority, cannot form the subject of an appeal. To determine this question, we shall refer to the Minute Book where we find the following entry:

"Friday, the 25th July, 1919.

Mr. James addresses the Court on the Rules of Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

The Court—I reserve judgment."

The only matter for consideration before the Court on the 25th July 1919 was, as already stated, the application by the plaintiff for an interlocutory injunction. Mr. Langford James, who appeared on behalf of the defendants, gave his consent that the motion should be treated as petition under the Arbitration Act. Mr. Ghose, who appeared for the plaintiff, did not give his unqualified consent, for while he stated that he had no objection, he expressly added that to prove fraud the Court would have to hear oral evidence. case was then opened, the affidavits were read and reference was made to the decisions in Hurdwary Null v. Ahmed Musaji (12), Gajanand v. Shaik Taleb Jalaluddin (11) and Sardarmull Jessraj v. Agarchand Mahata & Co. (10). After the addresses of the Counsel, judgment was reserved. Judgment was delivered, twenty-five days later, on the 19th August. The entries in the Minute Book do not support the statement in the judgment that Counsel on both sides had consented that the hearing of the motion should be treated both as the trial of the action and as a petition under the Indian Arbitration Act. We cannot, in these circumstances, hold that the procedure followed was adopted by consent of Counsel on both sides.

But it is material to add that even if the Minute Book had shown the factum of consent, it could not be treated as consent freely given by Counsel in the exercise of his discretion as an Advocate invested with a general control over the conduct of the case of his client. The learned Judge states in his judgment that the consent (which he thought was given) was accorded only when he intimated that he would otherwise decline to entertain the motion. If Counsel had consented, after the expression of such determination by the Court, the consent could not be deemed free and fair, and might well be regarded as constrained and involuntary acquiescence in a mode of trial which the Court had decided to adopt. The respondents have argued that, even in such circumstances, the Counsel should not yield, but let the Judge dismiss the case and then appeal with a view to obtain a reversal of his order. It may be conceded that this is a possible course for Counsel to adopt. But it is important to observe that whichever course were followed, the ultimate result would make no difference to the respondents. Assuming that Counsel had as a matter of fact consented, if we were to set aside the order on the ground that there had been no free consent, the suit would stand restored. If, on the other hand, the suit were dismissed because Counsel did not agree to adopt the course indicated by the Court, the reversal of the order of dismissal by the Court of Appeal would also result in the revival of the suit. But we need not elaborate this aspect of the matter further, because, as the Minute Book shows that Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff did not consent to the course adopted by the learned Judge, his decree must be set aside, provided it is established that the plaintiff was entitled to have the action tried, not merely upon affidavits but also upon oral evidence. This question must consequently be now investigated.

The plaintiff buyer seeks to set aside the award of the arbitrators on the ground that there was no valid contract between the parties and also imputes fraud to the defendants, inasmuch as they have claimed damages for refusal to accept goods which they never offered and were indeed not in a position to deliver. The case for the defendants sellers is that there was a valid contract made on the 2nd August 1918 for the sale of 16 bales of grey Dhotis, that they delivered the goods according to the contract on the 24th September, that the plaintiff buyer wrongfully refused to accept the goods and then cancelled the contract on the 17th October. They thereupon gave notice on the 22nd February of their intention to re-sell and actually re-sold the goods three days later. They next applied to the Chamber of Commerce on the 7th March for arbitration and notice was served upon the buyer on the 11th March. The buyer, on the 23rd May, repudiated the authority of the Arbitration Tribunal to deal with the matter, but, under protest, submitted to them his own version of the affair. The buyer also applied to the Tribunal for leave to appear by Counsel and to tender oral evidence in support of his case. This request, however, was refused, and an award was made against him on the 5th June. The award was forthwith filed in Court and the buyer instituted the present suit on the 16th June. As regards the alleged contract, the buyer and the sellers are disagreed upon a fundamental point. The case for the buyer is that the sale was with reference to the shipment sample and was intended to include the assortment of borders therein carefully shown. The case for the sellers is that the sample was provided only to show the material, and the buyer could not expect to get exactly that assortment of borders. In these circumstances, the plaintiff urges that the parties were not ad idem, and there was no valid contract between them in fact and in law. The plaintiff further urges that the defendant was not ready to deliver goods according to sample and that the claim for assessment of damages on the basis of a pretended re-sale was fraudulent. It cannot be seriously maintained for a moment that a suit is not maintainable for the determination of this controversy between the parties. Section 9 of the Code of civil Procedure provides that the Courts shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. This is unquestionably a suit of a civil nature, and we have not been able to discover how its cognizance is barred expressly or impliedly. There is no provision in the Indian Arbitration Act which bars this suit. Section 14 empowers the Court to set aside an award where an arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself or an arbitration award has been improperly procured. Assume for a moment that this authority of the Court may be invoked by way of an application; still the question may arise, whether such remedy is exclusive, or, whether the party affected may not, at his choice, have recourse to a suit as the more preferable course. We need not decide that question, because, in the case before us, the grievance alleged is deeper and broader than what is contemplated by section 14. But it may be observed parenthetically that if the view is taken that where the grounds of attack are completely covered by section 14, an application is the exclusive and not merely an alternative remedy, the adjudication by a Court other than a Chartered High Court will be final and not liable to be challenged by way of appeal, as the Indian Arbitration Act contains no provision for an appeal: Ripley v. Nahapiet (13). But we need not examine that aspect of the matter further, for here the buyer disputes the very existence of the contract and adds that the claim of the sellers to recover damages is tainted by fraud. This is plainly a matter for investigation in a suit. The learned Judge has taken the contrary view for reasons set out in the following passage of his judgment:

"This award was filed in Court on the 13th June 1919. If it was desired to have it set aside either as a nullity by reason of its not being within the scope of a valid submission or under section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act, the proper course under the rules was to apply by petition to have it taken off the file or to have it set aside. Instead, the buyer commenced a suit on 16th June and brought on a motion for an interlocutory injunction. I will not here repeat what in previous cases I have said about this particular abuse. It is defended sometimes when the submission is attacked, on the ground that the application is not within section 14 or any other section of the Act. This is no valid reason. The award here was filed under the Act before action brought and became enforceable in execution under the Act as though it were a decree. If it is to be taken off the file as a nullity, the application should be made under the Act which has been abused. In England, awards, save by leave obtained on summons, are not enforceable except by an action. It is not usual or necessary, therefore, to apply to set aside an award on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the arbitrators. The old English cases, however, show that this was done where a step could be taken to enforce the award and the interference of the Court was necessary; Russell, 9th Edition, page 369; Doe d Turnbull v. Brown (7), Worral v. Deane (8). This, under the Indian Arbitration Act, is always the position and all applications to set aside an award which has been filed should be made by petition, whatever be the ground."

We are not prepared to adopt this as a correct exposition of the law and to hold that an award which has been filed can be set aside only by application, whatever the ground on which it is impeached. Indeed, the learned Counsel for the respondents has made no attempt to support the proposition. There is no trace in the Indian Arbitration Act of any provision indicating that the Legislature intended to prescribe such a restrictive rule and to take away the right of suit. The learned Judge refers to his observations in previous cases; our attention has been drawn to only one such, namely, Sardarmull Jessrai v. Agarchand Mahata & Co. (10). There, the question primarily under consideration related to the grant of interlocutory injunctions to restrain arbitration proceedings commenced on the basis of a contract which was either denied or impeached on equitable grounds. The earlier decisions reviewed in that judgment do not justify the inference that when an award has been made and filed and has consequently become enforceable as a decree of Court, a party affected thereby cannot maintain a suit to impeach it on grounds not included within the scope of section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act, for example, such grounds as that the contract was never made or is not enforceable by reason of fraud, mistake or surprise. Nor do the cases of Doe d Turnbull v. Brown (7) and Worrall v. Deane (8) lead to that conclusion. Besides, we should not interpret our statutory law, when it provides for a specific procedure, by reference to decisions pronounced under a different system of procedure. We need not decide whether a suit does or does not lie to set aside an award on grounds covered by section 14, which contemplates two classes of cases, namely, first, where there has been legal misconduct on the part of the arbitrator or umpire, and, secondly, where there has been impropriety on the part of the litigant in the procuring of the award, both relating plainly to events between the commencement and termination of the arbitratior proceedings. But where the ground of attack goes to the root of the matter and arises as it were before the constitution of the domestic forum, a suit is maintainable for the investigation and determination of the controversy according to the procedure prescribed by law. The case before us clearly falls within this category.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the suit remanded for trial. The appellant will have the costs in this Court; all the costs in the Court below mentioned in the decree and order of the 19th August 1919 will be costs in the suit.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 8th October 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—(Feburary 19, 1920.)—This is a second appeal in a case in which on being sued for ejectment, the defendants-respondents set up the case that they were not holding the land in suit as tenants of the plaintiffs but as their own khudkasht without liability to pay rent to any one. The question whether the appeal lay to the Commissioner at all was raised in first appeal before the Commissioner, but he, relying on a High Court decision, Udit Tewari v. Bihari Pande (1), held that no question of proprietary title had actually been raised in this suit. Apparently, the later Full Bench ruling of the High Court in Bindeshwari Pande v. Gokul (2) was not brought to his notice. This ruling deliberately overruld that on which the Commissioner relied, and it is desirable to have a settled practice. I would follow a later ruling, as indeed the Board has already determined to do in Selected Decision No. 14 of 1914 [Maharaja of Benares v. Babu Vijai Narain Singh (3)]. I would, therefore, set aside the Commissioner's decree as having been passed without jurisdiction and would direct him to return the memorandum of appeal of his Court for presentation to the District Judge. In the circumstances I think the parties may fairly bear their own costs in both Appellate Courts. My decision on this case is also supported by Court Fees Act (VII of 1870, s 7 iv) (c)—Suit for declaration that decree is void, nature of—Prayer for setting aside decree—Court-fee payable.

A suit for a declaration that a decree is null and void and for setting it aside is one both for a declaration and for consequential relief and is governed by clause (iv) (c) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. [p. 551, col 1]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 143 of 1917, decided on the 4th January 1918.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede and M. D. Khandekar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and V. D. Kale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order rejecting a plaint under clause (c), rule 11, Order VII, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code.

The relief claimed in paragraph 15 of the plaint is "that the decree absolute obtained by defendant No. 1 on 25th April 1916 be set aside on the ground of fraud and declared null and void against the plaintiff."

The plaint is written upon a ten rupee stamp paper. The defendants raised a prelimimary objection to the sufficiency of the stamp. The lower Court held that the suit is governed by clause (iv) (c), section 7 of the Court Fees Act, and directed ad valorem Court-fees to be paid on the value set upon the claim by the plaintiff for purposes of jurisdiction. The plaintiff failed to supply the requisite stamp and the plaint was in consequence rejected.

It is urged that the suit is governed by clause (iii), Article 17, Schedule II, Court Fees Act, which refers to a plaint in a suit "to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed." The question for decision is whether the decree sought to be obtained is purely a declaratory one or whether consequential relief is also asked or involved in the suit.

The cases relied on by the appellant are Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (1), Shrimant Sagajirao v. S. Smith (2) and Zinnatunnessa Khatun v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (3). In Zinnatunnessa Khatun v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (3) and Shrimant Sagajirao v. S. Smith (2) there was not as a matter of fact any prayer for setting aside the decree. The head note in the latter case appears to be incorrect. It appears from the judgment at page 741 that the only prayer was that the decree may be declared null and void. At page 742 it is observed:—

"The suit is analogous to one under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), merely to have the decree adjudged void, leaving it to the Subordinate Judge to do what he likes with his decree if he so adjudges it void."

In the present case the decree is sought to be set aside so that nothing will be left to be done by the Court passing it. In Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (1) a suit for the cancellation of a mortgage-deed was held to be in the nature of a simple declaratory suit. This case has been dissented from in Samiya Mavali v. Minammal (4) and Parvatibai v. Vishvanath (5). In the case last mentioned a prayer for an order to have a sale deed cancelled was held to be a prayer for a relief as distinguished from a mere declaration which is not a relief. In the present case both a declaration and a relief are sought: declaration that the decree is null and void and relief that the decree be set aside. In Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (6) it was held that a suit to set aside a decree is not a suit for a declaration within the meaning of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act for which alone a Court-fee of Rs. 10 is sufficient. In Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (7) it was held by a Full Bench that a suit for a declaration that a decree passed against the plaintiff is not binding on him is, although it asks for a mere declaration, nonetheless a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief within the meaning of clause (iv) (c) of section 7, Court Fees Act.

We are of opinion that a prayer to set aside a decree is not of a declaratory nature and that the present suit is one for both a declaration and consequential relief and is governed by clause (iv) (c) of section 7, Court Fees Act. Ad valorem Court-fees should, therefore, have been paid. The plaint was rightly rejected. This appeal is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 30.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule which was obtained by the defendant in a suit which was brought in the Small Cause Court of the Subordinate Judge at Berhampore.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff for Rs. 125 and at the first hearing the suit was dismissed, and I assume it was dismissed with costs. Thereafter, the plaintiff made an application for review of judgment. The ground of the application was that he had discovered new evidence which he could not have discovered before by the exercise of due diligence. The learned Judge entertained the application for review, and eventually gave judgment for the plaintiff.

This Rule had been supported on the ground that the plaintiff did not comply with the provisions of section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887. It is clear that under the provisions of Article 161 of the Limitation Act of 1908, the period within which an application for review of a judgment given by a Provincial Court of Small Causes must be made is fifteen days from the date of the decree or order. It appears from the learned Judge's judgment that the application was made on the last day of the fifteen days, allowing the plaintiff one day for taking a copy of the judgment. It is provided by section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act that "an applicant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte or for a review of judgment shall, at the time of presenting his application, either deposit in the Court the amount due from him under the decree or in pursuance of the judgment, or give security to the satisfaction of the Court for the performance of the decree or compliance with the judgment, as the Court may direct." The plaintiff did not comply with the provisions of section 17 but on the following day the Court, I assume upon the application of the plaintiff, made an order that the amount of costs should be deposited within four days. The amount of costs was not so deposited, and a further order was made on the 2nd of July granting the plaintiff five more days, and eventually the amount of costs was deposited on the 5th of July 1919. The learned Judge has said that in his opinion section 5 of the Limitation Act applies to this, case and applying section 5 he has extended the period for making the application for review up to the 5th of July, the date upon which the amount of costs was deposited. I think it is doubtful whether section 5 of the Limitation Act applies to this case at all, because it seems to me that the application for review was made within time, and consequently it may be urged that section 5 does not apply at all. But assuming for the sake of argument that section 5 does apply, then it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within the time specified. I fail to understand on what ground it can be said that the plaintiff has sufficient cause for not making his application not only within the proper time but in the proper manner by depositing the amount of costs or giving security for the same at the time of making the application. The learned Judge seems to have thought that the plaintiff may have been misled by the orders of the Court. So far as I understand the dates, there was no order of the Court made until after the period within which the application should have been made and in a proper manner in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

For these reasons in my judgment the Rule should be made absolute, and the order granting a review of judgment should be set aside and the application for review dismissed. The defendant must have the costs of this Rule, hearing fee one gold mohur, and also the costs of the application for review.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Where a village is held by agraharamdars, they are jointly and severally liable to the zemindar for the whole of the jodi due on the entire village; the fact that they have split up the village into separate holdings will not relieve them of this liability, because any arrangement among themselves to enjoy the land in shares and pay the jodi proportionately is not binding on the landlord, unless he consents to it. There was an arrangement among the Agraharamdars whereby each of them was paying his proportionate share. That was recognised by the Zemindar for a long lime. He cannot now be allowed to recede from that position. The decisions laying down that the liability to pay Jodi is joint and several were based on the then prevalent view that Jodi was a charge on the land. It is now settled that Jodi is not a charge on the land in favour of the Zemindar in the absence of contract or custom, and consistently with the present state of the law, there is no reason for holding that the liability attaches to all Agraharam tenants as joint and several.

As the present Agraharamdars had purchased lands in the village, their liability arises only from privity of estate and they are liable only for the share rateably chargeable on their lands. See Kamala Nayak v. Ranga Rau (1), Kunhi Sou v. Mulloli Chathu (2).

The Zemindar's claim for interest is not sustainable. There is no custom proved to enforce the payment. It does not arise under the Estates Land Act as the relationship between Zemindar and Agraharamdar is not that of landlord and tenant. The Interest Act will not apply as no written demand was made. And there are no special equities in favour of the award in the form of damages. Non-payment on the due date will not be a ground for an equitable claim.

Messrs. S. Subramanya Aiyar and S. Ramachendra Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The liability of the Agraharamdars to pay Jodi has always been treated as joint and several. See Zamindar of Ramnad v. Ramamany Ammal (3), Ramayya v. Subbarayudu (4), Subhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopalkrishnamma (5).

(4) 13 M. 25; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 728.

(5) 16 M. 34; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 731.

The finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal is that the liability is joint.

The arrangement among the Agraharamdars themselves to pay the Jodi in a particular manner will not create an estoppel against the Zemindar. It is not shown that the Zamindar did not receive the payments on account or that he gave up his right to proceed against them all jointly. The Jodi was fixed at a particular figure for the whole village. See Subhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopalkrishnamma (5) and Zamindar of Ramnad v. Ramamany Ammal (3). Unless facts constituting an estoppel are proved, these private arrangements will not affect the Zemindar's right.

Whether Jodi is or is not a charge on the land is not relevant for the purpose of the question at issue. The joint liability is not based on the existence of a charge but on contract.

The position taken up by the appellants' Vakil that, as assignees, the Agraharamdars are only liable for their proportionate shares of the Jodi was not taken in the lower Courts. The case was tried on the footing that the defendants were joint Agraharamdars. A new point cannot be taken in second appeal as its recognition would necessitate further enquiry.

I claim interest by way of damages. See Muhammad Abdul Ghaffur Rowther v. Hamida Beevi Ammal (6).

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The question for our decision in these appeals is whether the lower Courts were right in holding that the defendants who appeal are jointly and severally liable for the Jodi on their Agraharam or whether they are only liable for the payment of shares of the total amount of Jodi proportionate to the extent of the holding of each defendant. I agree with my learned brother, whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading, that the answer depends mainly on an issue of fact as to the terms prevailing between the Zemindar and the Agraharamdars, but there are besides certain judicial decisions in which it has been recognised that Agraharams are ordinarily held on a single and indivisible tenure.

(6) 52 Ind. Cas. 505; 42 M. 661; 25 M. L. T. 242; 36 M. L. J. 456; (1919) M. W. N. 484.

In Elliaya v. Late Collector of Salem (7) it was found that joint liability for Teervai was a well-understood condition attached to the holdings of Agraharam tenants; and in this matter the High Court treated the decision of the lower Courts as final. In Zamindar of Ramnad v. Ramamany Ammal (3) the grant of a Maganam or division of a Zemindari was contrasted with Agraharams or Dharmasanam villages which are granted to several persons on a single rent. In Ramayya v. Subbarayudu (4) the jural relation of Agraharamdars was stated to be not that of co-parceners but that of joint owners of an Agrahara village.

Subhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopalakrishnamma (5) was another case in which an argument was put forward that, as the holders of an Agraharam had divided it and were holding it in separate shares, they were each only liable for a part of the Jodi proportionate to their shares. This Court held in first appeal that the defendants were jointly and severally liable to the Zemindar's claim and observed that any division among themselves to which the Zemindar was not a party could not affect his right to look to all the lands of the village for his Jodi.

In the present appeals the lower Appellate Courts, the Subordinate Judge in Second Appeal No. 359 and the District Judge in Second Appeal No. 1789, have found as a fact that the demand of the Jodi was fixed for the entire Agraharam as a unit in a lump sum. In support of this finding they refer to the D. C. B. accounts and the prevalent system in the village of periodical exchange of holdings, which would make it difficult for the Zemindar to collect Jodi from the Swasthayamdars separately.

The position of mere transferees of portions of the Agraharam village would be different. There would be no privity of contract between them and the Zemindar; and the privity of estate occasioned by their occupation of land within the Zemindari would not create a liability out of proportion to the quantum of estate occupied by them [Vide Kunhi Sou v. Mulloli Ohathu (2) and Stevenson v. Lambard (8)]. But for the defendants to escape liability on the ground that they are only transferees or assignees of portions of the Agraharam from the original Agraharamdars it was necessary for them to set up such a special case at the trial. They did not do so. The plaint speaks of them all as Agraharamdars, and the written statement speaks of their ancestors and their partners but not of their assignors or vendors. Only the 19th defendant in Original Suit No. 8 of 1913 pleaded that he was a purchaser, and he was exonerated in the lower Appellate Court on the ground that he purchased the land in his enjoyment after the date when the arrears claimed by the plaintiff fell due on it. The joint and several liability of the defendants is not based on the assumption that the Jodi is a charge on the Agraharam, as suggested in ground No. 4 of the Appeal Memorandum in Suit Appeal No. 359 of 1918, but on contract.

It has been held that Jodi is not a charge upon a Shrotriam or an Inam, except where the grant is by Government and the Jodi is collected as land revenue under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act (Act II of 1864), when section 2 of the Act comes into play and makes it a first charge upon the land and its produce. See Subbaraya Goundan v. Ranganatha Mudaliar (9). Jodi due upon an Inam or Agraharam situated in a Zemindari estate is not rent of ryoti land which becomes a charge on the holding under section 5 of the Madras Estates Land Act. There is no charge in the present case, but the defendants are jointly and severally liable on their contract as Agraharamdars on the findings as to the terms of that contract.

As regards the plaintiff's claim for interest, which is the subject of the Memorandum of Objections in Second Appeal No. 359 in the plaint, it is stated to be claimed at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem "under rent law and damages."

It has been found that there is no established custom to pay interest in this Agraharam and that there have been no notices in writing demanding interest.

As Jodi is not "rent" as defined in section 3, clause 11 of the Madras Estates Land Act, Act I of 1908, interest cannot be claimed under section 61 of that Act.

In cases where neither the Interest Act, Act XXXII of 1839, nor the rent law apply and where there is no contract, express or implied, to pay interest Courts of Equity sometimes award interest in the form of damages [see Abdul Goffur Rowther v. Hamida Beevi Ammal (6)], but there is no equity in the present case for allowing the plaintiff interest when he has allowed the Jodi to fall into arrears without making any demand for interest.

These second appeals are dismissed with costs of 1st respondent and the memo. of objections is dismissed with costs of appellants.

KRISHNAN, J.—The only question raised for decision in this second appeal is whether the Agraharamdars, the defendants, are jointly and severally liable to the Raja who owns the Zemindari for the whole of the Jodi due on the entire Agraharam village or whether they are only separately liable, each of them for the proportion of the Jodi properly chargeable on the share of the village owned by him.

The village has been enjoyed in $86\frac{1}{2}$ Swasthyams or shares, but how it came to be so divided there is nothing to show. The lower Appellate Court has found on the evidence that the Agraharam was always treated as a single unit by the Raja and his predecessors and that the plea of the defendants that they, the landlords, have by their course of conduct split it up into parts and have recognised the several holdings of the various defendants as separate and independent is not established. This is a finding of fact which we must accept in second appeal, especially as it is justified by the evidence. Though payments were accepted from individual Agraharamdars from time to time by the Zemindar's agent of the share of the Jodi payable by each on his individual holding, such payments were always treated as made on account towards the total Jodi payable on the village and receipts were given and accepted accordingly. The re-distribution of the lands among the Agraharamdars once in 12 years without reference to the Zemindar is a strong indication that the holding of the Agraharam lands in shares by them had nothing to do with the Zemindar. The Jodi was fixed for the whole village as a single amount. All these would show that the Agraharam was held as a single estate on a single rental by the Agraharamdars. That they are usually held as single holdings on single rents and where there are several tenants in an Agraharam they are jointly liable for the whole rent, has been recognised by this Court in Elliayav. Late Collector of Salem (7), Zamindar of Ramnad v. Ramamany Ammal (3) and in Subhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopal Krishnamma (5). As pointed out in the last case, any arrangement made between the Agraharamdars to enjoy the lands in shares and pay the Jodi proportionately is not binding on the landlord unless he consents to it. He would be entitled to get his Jodi as a whole from all persons who are bound by the original contract of letting. No doubt the original parties in this case must have died out long ago, but their heirs and descendants who enjoy the Agraharam, will equally be bound and they would, therefore, be liable jointly and severally for the Jodi.

It was urged by Mr. Venkatarama Sastry for the appellants that the cases above cited, recognising the joint liability of the whole body of Agraharamdars, proceeded on the view that the Jodi was a charge on the lands, which was the then prevalent view, and that as it is now settled by the ruling in Subbaraya Gounden v. Ranganatha Mudaliar (9) that in the absence of a contract or custom to that effect, Jodi is not a charge on land in favour of the Zemindar, they should not be followed. The joint liability to pay the whole rent personally is not, however, based on the existence of any charge but on contract, and no doubt only persons bound by the contract will be subject to it.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastry then contended that persons who had become Agraharamdars by purchase of lands in the village will not be liable on contract but only on the ground of privity of estate and so far as they are concerned, their personal liability will be restricted to the share of Jodi rateably chargeable on their lands. The authorities cited by him, Gamon v. Vernon (10), Stevenson v. Lambard (8) and Kamala Nayak v. Ranga Rau (1) and the observation in Kunhi Sou v. Mulloli Chathu (2), do establish the position that an assignee from a lessee of a part or share only of the leased property is personally liable for his proportionate share of rent on the ground of privity of estate. But so far as I can see, only question of privity of estate was not raised in this case in the lower Courts. None of the appellants before us nor any of the other defendants except the 15th defendant, who has been exonerated, pleaded that he was an assignee and, therefore, not liable for the whole rent. The case proceeded on the footing that they were all joint Agraharamdars and the only plea put forward to make the liability several was that the landlord had recognised their separate holdings by his conduct. As already stated, that plea was found against. I do not think we can properly allow the plea that the defendants or any of them are only assignees to be raised for the first time in second appeal, as it would require a fresh trial on facts. I would disallow the plea and accepting the findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court dismiss the second appeal with costs of the 1st respondent.

The memo. of objections by the Zamindar raises the question of interest on arrears of Jodi found due. It was claimed in the plaint as payable by "rent law" and as damages; subsequently it seems to have been also claimed as payable by custom. The lower Courts have found that no such custom has been proved. The Estates Land Act does not apply to this case as the relationship between the Zamindar and the Agraharamdars is not that of landholder and ryot. The Interest Act, Act XXXII of 1839, does not apply as no demand was made in writing for interest. The only ground that remains is the claim by way of damages, and it was pressed before us that interest should be awarded by way of damages for non-payment on due date. No doubt in a proper case interest may be decreed by way of damages even though it is not claimable under the Interest Act. That was so laid down in the recent ruling of this Court in Abdul Goffur Routher v. Hamida Beevi Ammal (6), where the previous decisions are all considered. But no proper ground has been shown in this case to award interest as damages; mere non-payment on due date is not in my opinion sufficient to justify such an award. Plaintiff has shown no equity in his favour for it. In fact he does not seem to have relied on it as a ground of claim in the lower Appellate Court, where custom was the main ground urged. I would, therefore, dismiss the memo. of objections also with costs of the appellants.

This second appeal has not been separately argued. Following the judgment in Second Appeal No. 359 of 1918, this second appeal is also dismissed with costs of 1st respondent.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 3 OF 1919.

January 14, 1920.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Justice Sir Ernest Fletcher, Kt.

MOHAMED KALIMUDDIN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

A. B. STEWART AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Association—Membership, expulsion from—Procedure—Duty of association.

Where an association, which is empowered to expel members for misconduct, decides to expel a member after making a fair inquiry into the truth of the facts alleged against him and after notice to him that his conduct is about to be inquired into and giving him an opportunity of stating his case, and its decision is arrived at in good faith with a view to the common interest of the association, its decision cannot be successfully challenged in a Court. [p. 562, cols. 1 & 2.]

Tribunals which exercise a punitive jurisdiction on an alleged charge of misconduct, whereby a man may be deprived of his property, must act in accordance with the ordinary rules of justice and fairplay and fairly listen to both sides. In order to determine whether a tribunal of this character in the exercise of quasi-judicial powers has given a decision which cannot be successfully challenged, the Court has to investigate whether they have observed the rules of natural justice and also the particular statutory or other rules, if any, prescribed for their guidance. [p. 562, col. 2.]

MOHAMED KALIMUDDIN v. STEWART.

The rules of natural justice demand that a man is not to be removed from office or membership or otherwise dealt with to his disadvantage, without having a fair and sufficient notice of what is alleged against him and an opportunity of making his defence, and that the decision, whatever it is, must be arrived at in good faith with a view to the common interest of the society or institution concerned. If these conditions are satisfied, a Court of justice will not interfere with the decision. [p. 563, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Rankin, dated the 26th November 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment of RANKIN, J.—The plaintiff sues in this action the members of the Committee of the Calcutta Stock Exchange Association for the purpose of having it determined that the proceedings of the Committee which took place on 27th September 1916 and 2nd December 1916, and by which he was expelled from the Association, were invalid, and for relief accordingly. The defendants have dropped all questions as to any errors there might be in the exact persons who ought to have been sued.

It appears that some days before the 15th September 1916 the plaintiff, who was a broker and a member of the Association, had a certain verbal conversation or negotiation with a representative or representatives of a firm called Ram Kissen Surajmull as to the proposed sale by the plaintiff to this firm of 100 ordinary Empire Jute Mills shares. The plaintiff says that this negotiation was held in the presence of a considerable number of persons at a busy time of the day, but that in fact in the end no bargain was concluded. Ram Kissen Surajmull alleged that the verbal contract for sale of these shares was concluded, and the plaintiff, not having made delivery, Surajmull complained to the Committee of the Stock Exchange by a letter of 15th September 1916, which is in evidence in this case. The complaint having been received, the matter came before the Committee at three meetings: 27th September, 2nd December 1916, and 12th January 1917. I am satisfied that the minutes of those meetings, though not nearly so full as is to be desired, are correct so far as they go. Now, by the rules of the Stock Exchange produced before me it appears that there is but one rule, and that a simple one, under which the Committee could exercise any jurisdiction over the plaintiff in such a matter, and it is clear law that there is no inherent or implied jurisdiction on the part of an association such as this to expel any member; an leaving out all words which have no bearing upon this case, rule 10 provides that the member shall cease to be such on the happening of any of the following events: (a) On the Committee being of opinion that he has failed to deliver in due course securities sold; (b) On his being found guilty in the opinion of the Committee of conduct justifying his expulsion.

For purposes of this case I may confine myself to (a), because I think that the attempt to put any case at all upon clause (b) merely burdens the defendants' case. I am quite satisfied that no charge under clause (b) was even mooted at the meeting of 27th September, and I find in the result that apart from the trial on the 27th September there was, and purported to be, no trial at all. I confine myself, therefore, to clause (a) of the rule. Now it is to be noticed that the jurisdiction given by rule 10 is not given as a jurisdiction for the settlement of disputes or as the establishment of a domestic Court of arbitration. Though the matters specified in rule 10 probably comprise everything that can well become matter of dispute so far as ordinary Stock Exchange business is concerned, the only jurisdiction to enquire into and to determine them is the jurisdiction to come to a finding upon which the membership of the party against whom it is pronounced, shall cease. The ultima ratio is the only ratio. Putting aside the provision in rule 4 that 5 members shall form quorum (on which nothing in this case turns), no regulations have been proved or even suggested by which a procedure is laid down for the Committee. There is no rule as to the giving of a written notice to the parties concerned. There is no rule requiring a definite length of notice. There is no rule as to what information any notice must contain. Still less is the committee hampered in the exercise of its single and drastic power by the requirements of any special majority. The only thing it can do is to expel, and subject to the law of the land, it can do that as it likes. Now, it is quite clear in a case of this sort, where there is no contention that the rules of the society are themselves unreasonable, that the law will jealously consider, first, whether the rules have been strictly obeyed; secondly, whether the decision has been bona fide; and thirdly, whether the proceedings have been conducted according to the principles of natural justice; and in this last matter there is included as part of the requirement of natural justice the requirement of a reasonable notice to the party complained of as to what he is going to be tried about. Now, the plaintiff in this case complains, not of breaches of any procedure rules of the association (for such rules there are none), but of the general and paramount principle of law that such a jurisdiction must be exercised bona fide, and in accordance with natural justice. Turning to the plaint for particulars I find that paragraphs 7 to 12 of the plaint disclose the following specific allegations and no others—that on the 27th September the Committee heard the complainants and their witnesses, but did not, and would not, allow the plaintiff to cross-examine in spite of his request, or to call evidence on his own behalf although his witnesses were present. Paragraph 10 charges that the Committee acted in bad faith. paragraph 11, as I read it, is meant to allege that the plaintiff's expulsion was determined on this meeting of 27th September, and paragraph 12 intimates no fresh complaint of the Committee's procedure when referring to the meeting of the 2nd December. The meeting of January 12th is not referred to as a meeting at all, though the plaintiff was present thereat as he himself told me in the box. The case then with which the plaintiff comes into the Court is simply this; that the Committee at the meeting of 27th September decided upon his expulsion without allowing him to cross-examine the witnesses against him or to call evidence on his own behalf; and speaking for myself, if this were proved, I for one should have little difficulty in holding the charge of mala fides proved.

When the case was opened to me by plaintiff's Counsel the only issue offered by him or settled by me was as follows, and this was accepted by both sides :—

"Whether the action of the Committee on 27th September 1916, and 2nd December 1916, or one or other of these dates was contrary to natural justice in respect of the absence of an opportunity to the plaintiff to cross-examine or to call witnesses on his behalf."

When the plaintiff came to give his evidence, however, he alleged two further facts as matters of complaint against the conduct of the Committee at both meetings, but more particularly at the first meeting. The first complaint was that he had no notice or no sufficient notice of the meeting. The second was that he never knew until after the third meeting of the 12th January that the Committee had decided against him at the first meeting and ordered him to make delivery by the 6th October. Having regard to the charge of mala fides and to the fact that the question of notice might have a bearing upon the question as to whether the plaintiff had a real and proper opportunity of producing evidence and of cross-examination, I did not think it necessary or advisable to shut out this evidence of new grounds of complaint. It was proved before me in the course of the case, however, that the one person who could give any proper or valuable evidence for the defendants as to these new grounds, was the gentleman who at the time acted as secretary to the association, and that as he was serving with His Majesty's forces, his evidence could not, without some time and difficulty, be obtained. In these circumstances I drew the attention of learned Counsel for the plaintiff to the position thus created when the question of insufficient notice was referred to by him in his reply. He very properly and frankly explained that the first time he had heard of this ground of complaint was when the plaintiff gave his evidence in the box and after the opening of the case and settlement of the issue. On being put to his election whether or not he would ask leave to amend his pleadings so as to enlarge his case, and upon being told by me that such leave, if granted, would only be granted upon terms as to costs, he elected not to ask for such leave but to go on with his case, as it was. The two new grounds are both of them in the same position; the only difference between them being that on the evidence I am fully satisfied, without further evidence from the defendants, that the second ground is utterly unfounded in fact. Neither ground is now open to the plaintiff.

I come now to the meeting of 27th September, and to the question whether the plaintiff was refused leave to cross-examine the complainant's witnesses. In answer to his own Counsel when examined-in chief, the plaintiff gave the following answers:—

"Did any question of cross-examination arise?—No."

"Did you want to put any question to anybody?—I said that their statement was incorrect; and asked the committee to take the evidence of my witnesses, and that I was in a position to prove it."

Now, that is the only piece of evidence given by the plaintiff on the subject so far as I can find. In my opinion this statement of the plaintiff's is not true. I find it proved that he did in fact cross-examine the witnesses for the complainant as is deposed to by the committee members called for the defence, but it is enough to say that reading the plaintiff's own evidence by itself, there is not a tittle of evidence that the right of cross examination is demanded by, and refused to, the plaintiff. When challenged to enumerate his grievances in cross examination, the plaintiff does not include this as one. The witnesses summoned, Sham Lal Laha, Girendra Nath Roy, and the evidence of the Chairman, Mr. Berridge, taken before this Court in June, leave me no room for doubt that the committee was most anxious to be fair to the plaintiff. The mere fact as to what they did to give him time to comply with their decision showed that they were willing to be not only fair, but considerate. The plaintiff himself disclaimed the suggestion that the committee were inimical to him and the plaintiff's own Counsel withdrew in his reply the suggestion that there was any malice towards the plaintiff. In these circumstances it is not easy to see how the Court can be invited to believe that this committee of representative brokers allowed themselves to deprive the plaintiff of what every one knows to be essential to the very semblance of a fair trial. It gives me a very bad impression of the plaintiff's case when I find that if I look back to the letter of 19th January 1917, in which, the plaintiff having just been excluded from the Exchange and having taken legal advice, his Attorneys put forward his case for the first time, the allegation that "he asked for an opportunity to cross-examine the complainant to falsify the complaint, we were informed that he was not given a chance" is the only specific allegation in that letter. It is highly improbable—there is no evidence in support of it—the untruth of it has been plainly established before me.

The next complaint is that the defendant was not allowed to call witnesses on his own behalf. The plaintiff's evidence in examination-in-chief is on pages 4, 5 and 6 of the short-hand notes; in cross-examination his story is the same, and it is often repeated. Pressed in cross-examination for the names of the witnesses whom he wished to call, he gave four names, one of which is Raghubir Chobey. When re-called into the witness-box at a later stage and asked by me what these four witnesses were to give evidence about, he answered that they were not witnesses who were present at the time of the alleged contract, but were to prove that he had taken an oath in the name of the Koran, an episode which I find described on page 3 of the notes. I find it proved by the defendants that the plaintiff's story here again is utterly untrue. It is quite true that the defendants' evidence is not so precise or so clear as I should have been entitled to expect. The reason is that no proper record of what happened at the meeting in the way of calling and examining witnesses was made at the time, and the defendants' witnesses have nothing whatever to assist their recollection of what took place some two years ago. The committee certainly would be well advised to record such matters if only as a protection to themselves, but still I find as a fact that he did call witnesses; that he could have called, and did call, as many witnesses as he liked; that one of the witnesses actually called by him was the very Raghubir Chobey, whose name the plaintiff mentioned. No charge could be more clearly a charge of malice and bad faith against the members of the committee than to say that in a dispute as to the existence of a verbal bargain, evidence was offered by one side and that evidence was summarily shut out and judgment then given against him. Take away the suggestion of malice, and the charge becomes practically incomprehensible. Business men may be amateur lawyers; they may be summary in their methods or have inaccurate notions of procedure, but to shut out all dependent evidence in a case such as this was would not occur to one man in a thousand or even one dishonest man in a hundred. The evidence of Mr. Somers for example according to what happened at this meeting was extremely hazy. He would hardly pledge himself to any precise and particular fact, but I am quite sure, having seen Mr. Somers in the box, that if anything such as the plaintiff alleges had taken place, Mr. Somers would have noticed it and would have remembered it for a very long time. I am quite sure that he would not have forgotten what was contrary to all his ideas of fairplay, and I am quite satisfied the evidence of Mr. Somers, however vague, is strongly in support of the defendants' case upon an issue such as this. I have seen three members of the committee in the box; I have had some opportunity of gauging the account given by the Chairman in June. I am convinced not only that they were honest, not only that they were reasonable, but that they were conscientiously determined that the plaintiff should have fairplay. My opinion on this is confirmed when I look at the plaintiff's Attorney's letter of 19th January, the letter in which the refusal of leave to cross examine is alleged. There is not a word in that letter of this yet more crude injustice, the refusal of leave to call his own witnesses. The letter of 9th February is equally without a reference. Whatever else might have been left to be covered by general expressions, this at least any Attorney would have put in the forefront of his case, and most with caustic comment. I think I should be doing less than justice to the members of the committee if I failed to say that I do not think that the plaintiff's evidence as to the way in which their business was conducted at the meeting of the 27th September has any degree of credibility at all; that I accept the evidence of the defendants' witnesses as vindicating the committee and every member of it from the allegations upon which this action has been brought.

Now, the committee tried the issue between the plaintiff and complainant once and only once; they decided against the complainant on the 27th September. Their decision was, and could be only one thing in substance, viz., that he had failed to deliver in due course securities sold. In justice, or perhaps in mercy to the plaintiff, instead of putting forward at once the formal expression of their finding in such a way that the plaintiff would necessarily be expelled, they delayed giving such expression to it in order to give him a chance. He was given till the 6th October to deliver, and, as we know, he did not deliver. The next meeting was the 2nd December. It is common ground that at the meeting of the 2nd December the case was not reheard. The question, and only question, then was whether the plaintiff had availed himself of the indulgence accorded to him to enable him to evade the necessity for formal expression of the finding come to at a previous meeting, and to evade the penalty which was attached thereto. It is quite clear that his own statements at the second meeting showed that he had thrown his chance away. The plaintiff now alleges that not even at this meeting did he know—not indeed till after the 12th January did he know—what the finding of the Committee of the 27th September had been. I disbelieve this altogether. I think that that is a farrago of sheer untruth. I am satisfied that what happened at the meeting was that the plaintiff was obstinate, that he was reasoned with, and was warned. Unfortunately he was reasoned with and warned in vain. Not only so, but it appears from the evidence of Sham Lal Laha that a kindly suggestion of settlement was pressed both on the plaintiff and complainant. Even at this late stage the matter might have been settled by agreement between them. Nothing was done. The matter came again before the meeting of the 12th January, and not till then when it was evident that the plaintiff had done nothing, and was permanently minded to do nothing—were the full consequences of the decision of 27th September carried into effect. The committee did their best to save him, but he would not be saved.

I must add a word as to another issue which has been abandoned. That is the issue that plaintiff was entitled to take some advantage of the fact that the complainants were an insolvent firm, and had no right to be members of the association. It turned out before me that the complainants were adjudicated insolvents on 27th November 1912, but that they were discharged prior to the proceedings about which I am now concerned, viz, on the 24th March 1916, so that this point also has failed. Finding as I do that the committee's proceedings were not unfair, that they have been attacked as to their bona fides most unjustly, the plaintiff's case is disproved in every point. I do not think it my duty to examine into the question whether any more points could possibly have been taken by way of objection to the proceedings. But I may add that if there are any more of these cases, the committee would be well advised to bear in mind what I have said as to the true construction of rule 10, to remember that a tribunal which is slack about keeping a full record of its proceedings will always find itself in trouble; that they should be as full, formal and accurate as possible in all matters of recording their proceedings giving notice as to complaints and decisions. I leave it to them to obtain advice from others as to the application in detail of these criticisms.

The action must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the proceedings of the committee of the Calcutta Stock Exchange Association expelling him from its membership were void and inoperative. Mr. Justice Rankin has dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to establish that the proceedings were vitiated by illegality.

The tenth paragraph of the Rules and Regulations of the Association contains the following provisions: "Cessation of membership:—A member shall cease to be such on the happening of any of the following events: (a) Subject to the present existing regulations regarding adjudication on time bargain contracts, on the committee being of the opinion that he has failed to pay in due course for securities delivered or to deliver in due course any difference in respect of any bargain or fail to pay any money due by him in any way arising from any Stock Exchange transaction, either directly or indirectly, or that he has become or been adjudicated a bankrupt: (b) On his being found guilty, in the opinion of the committee, of conduct justifying his expulsion."

On the 15th September 1916, Ramkisen Dass Soorajmull reported to the Honrary Secretary of the Calcutta Stock Exchange Association that on the 6th September they had purchased from Mahomed Kalimuddin (the present appellant) 100 ordinary Empire Jute Mills shares at Rs. 37-4-0 per share, delivery for one week's time from the date of sale, and that he had failed to deliver the shares due. As this was a matter which could be dealt with by the committee under clause (a) of rule 10, a meeting of the committee was held on the 27th September 1916, when the following resolution was recorded: "Dealt with a complaint of Ramkishen Soorajmull against Kalimuddin Khan with regard to an alleged transaction; the committee being of the opinion that the transaction actually did take place, the Honorary Secretary was instructed to inform Mahomed Kalimuddin that he must deliver the shares to the complainant within 6th October." The matter was next considered at a meeting held on the 2nd December 1916, when the following resolution was recorded: "Further, a letter was received again from Ramkissen Dass Soorajmull complainant against Mahomed Kalimuddin. It was resolved that the decision of the committee arrived at on the 27th September must be enforced or Mahomed Kalimuddin be expelled." Finally, on the 12th January 1917, the committee recorded the following resolution: "Received a further complaint from Ramkissen Das Soorajmull against Mahomed Kalimuddin and it was resolved that in view of the decision of the committee arrived at on the 27th September and again confirmed at a committee meeting on December 2nd, at both of which meetings the latter attended, was duly informed of such decision, the Honorary Secretary was instructed to notify him that under the Rules of the Association his membership had ceased and thereby warned not to enter the rooms of the committee." This decision was intimated to the plaintiff on the same day; and he thereafter instituted the present suit on the 7th September 1917.

Mr. Justice Rankin states in his judgment that when the case was opened by the plaintiff's Counsel, the only issue offered by him was as follows and this was accepted by both sides:—"Whether the action of the committee on 27th September 1916 and 2nd December 1916 or one or other of these dates was contrary to natural justice in respect of the absence of an opportunity to the plaintiff to cross examine or to call witnesses on his behalf." At the trial, however, two further facts were stated as matters of complaint against the conduct of the committee at both meetings, namely, first, that he had no notice or no sufficient notice of the meeting: and secondly, that he never knew, until after the third meeting of the 12th January, that the committee had decided against him at the first meeting and ordered him to make delivery by the 6th October. The learned Judge held that if the plaintiff desired to rely upon these two grounds, the plaint must be amended, and expressed his willingness to grant leave to amend on terms as to costs. The plaintiff, however, elected not to ask for such leave and to go on with the case as it was. Consequently the substantial question in controversy which has been decided is that formulated in the case as opened by the Counsel for the plaintiff. The learned Judge has held that the story of the plaintiff cannot be accepted as true. We have considered the whole evidence which has been placed before us and commented upon by the learned Advocate General, and we have arrived at the conclusion that the decree made by the Court below should not be disturbed.

The rules applicable to cases of this character are well settled and are based on the principle that the committee empowered to expel a member must make a fair enquiry into the truth of the alleged facts, after giving notice to the member concerned that his conduct is about to be enquired into and giving him an opportunity of stating his case to them. The leading decisions on the subject are the judgments of Sir George Jessel in Labouchere v. Earl of Wharncliffe (1), Russell v. Russell (2) and Dawkins v. Antrobus (3). The first case emphasizes the importance of fair enquiry after notice to the member concerned and opportunity given to him to meet the charge. In the second case Sir George Jessel referred with approval to the decision of Kelly, C.B., in Wood v. Woad (4) and observed as follows "I must say it contains a very valuable statement by the Lord Chief Baron as to his view of the mode of administering justice by persons other than Judges who have judicial functions to perform. The passage I mean is this, referring to a Committee; they are bound in the exercise of their functions, by the rule expressed in the maxim audi alteram partem, that no man shall be condemned to consequences resulting from alleged misconduct unheard and without having the opportunity of making his defence. This rule is not confined to the conduct of strictly legal tribunals but is applicable to every tribunal or body of persons invested with authority to adjudicate upon matters involving civil consequences to individuals."

In the third case, stress was laid on the aspect that a power of expulsion must be exercised bona fide and not from any indirect or improper motive, and this view was approved by the Court of Appeal. These and other decisions were reviewed by Astbury, J., in Cassel v. Inglis (5), where the rule was stated to be that tribunals which exercise a punitive jurisdiction on an alleged charge of misconduct, whereby a man may be deprived of his property, must act in accordance with the ordinary rules of justice and fairplay and fairly listen to both sides. The essence of the matter thus is that, in order to determine whether a tribunal of this character, in the exercise of quasi-judicial powers, has given a decision which cannot be successfully challenged, the Court has to investigate whether they have observed the rules of natural justice and also the particular statutory or other rules, if any, prescribed for their guidance: Andrews v. Mitchell (6). The rules of natural justice demand that a man is not to be removed from office or membership or otherwise dealt with to his disadvantage, without having a fair and sufficient notice of what is alleged against him and an opportunity of making his defence; and that the decision, whatever it is, must be arrived at in good faith with a view to the common interest of the society or institution concerned. If these conditions are satisfied, a Court of justice will not interfere with the decision.

Now, in the case before us, the first meeting of the committee was held on the 27th September 1916. There is no doubt upon the evidence that the plaintiff was present on that occasion, brought forward witnesses, and cross examined the witnesses who were produced by his opponent. An objection could have been raised by him that he had no notice or sufficient and precise notice; but that was not the position taken up by him. He did not complain that he had not such notice and was placed at a disadvantage because he did not know what was alleged against him. On the other hand, the evidence makes it clear that he knew what the case against him was; viz., that the complainant alleged that there had been a breach of the contract entered into with him on the 6th September 1916 for the sale of 100 Empire Jute Mills shares to be delivered within a week. He denied the existence of the contract. The committee came to a different conclusion; and thereupon it was within the competence of the committee to make an order forthwith for his expulsion. This, however, they did not do. They instructed their Honorary Secretary to inform the appellant that he must deliver the shares to the complainant within the 6th October. The Advocate General has contended that by this the committee really made a new contract between the parties and that the plaintiff has been expelled from the association not because of his failure to carry out the original contract, but because of his failure to carry out the order of the committee. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention, and the action of the committee cannot be successfully impugned on this ground. The order of the committee recorded on the 12th January shows that the plaintiff had attended both the previous meetings and that he had been duly informed of their decision. The oral evidence also shews that the plaintiff was present at the meeting held on the 2nd December 1916. It has been argued, however, there is no satisfactory evidence to show that the decision of the committe, dated the 22nd September, was ever communicated to the plaintiff. But the plaintiff did not take up this position on the 2nd December. He did not urge that he was willing to abide by the decision of the committee and that he had failed to deliver the shares to the complainant on or before the 6th October, because he had no intimation of their order. On the other hand, the evidence shows that he took up a determined attitutde not to abide by the decision of the committee. Ultimately, on the 12th January 1917, the committee came to the conclusion that the plaintiff must be expelled. This expulsion in substance was by reason of his failure to carry out his contract with the complainant; and the leniency which the committee had shown to the plaintiff unquestionably did not vitiate the proceedings.

The result is that the judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST APPELLATE ORDER No. 19 OF 1917.

December 3, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

A. C. GANAPATHIYA PILLAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS Nos. 2 AND 3—APPELLANTS

GOPALA AIYER AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 88, 89—

GANAPATHIYA PILLAI v. GOPALA AIYER.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, O. XXXIV, r. 5—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182—Mortgage-decree—Application for order absolute—Repeal of ss. 88, 89, Transfer of Property Act, before expiry of time fixed for payment—Prior application within three years, dismissal of—Final decree, application for, whether necessary—Limitation.

A mortgage decree having been passed on 10th December 1908, the decree-holder applied on 2nd December 1911 for an order absolute for sale. That application having been dismissed for default, the decree-holder again applied for an order absolute on 29th April 1914:

Held, that the decree-holder had a right to make the application for order absolute on 29th April 1914 and that the right was not barred by Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act or by section 48, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 566, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A decree passed under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act gave a vested right to the decree-holder to apply in execution for an order absolute and the repeal of the said section by Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, could not take away this right. [p. 555, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J—The application of 2nd December 1911 was a step-in-aid of execution: but if it were deemed necessary, owing to the introduction of Act V of 1908 while the suit was pending, that the decree-holder should apply for a final decree, the applications of 1911 and 1914 might be treated as applications under Article 181 of the Limitation Act for a final decree, the second application being treated as a continuation or revival of the first. [p. 566, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order dated the 25th September 1916, of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 328 of 1915, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvadi, in Second Appeal No. 102 of 1914, in Execution Petition No. 292 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 206 of 1907.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Appellants.—The lower Court should not have applied the provisions of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, to the case. The mortgage decree was passed in 1908. The first application for order absolute was in 1911, within three years of that date. The second application was in 1914 also within three years and in time. The repeal of sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act before the time fixed for payment, i.e, March 1909, could not affect the vested right acquired by the decree holder to apply in execution for an order absolute.

As there is no preliminary decree in the case, the decree holder cannot apply for a final decree.

The present application is not barred by Article 182 of the Limitation Act or section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

In any event the decree-holder should be permitted to treat his applications of 1911 and 1914 as applications for final decree.

Messrs. A. Venkatrayaliah and L. Venkatanarasiah, for the Respondents.—The sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act having been replaced by Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, before the time fixed for payment, the proper course for the decree-holder was to apply for a final decree. He had no right to apply for an order absolute.

See Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1).

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The decree-holders are the appellants. Their application was under section 89 of Act IV of 1882 for an order absolute. The application was made in 1914 within three years of a previous application of December 1911 for the same relief, the right to obtain that relief under the decree of December 1908 having accrued in March 1909. That application was dismissed by the Munsif on the grounds:—

(a) that Article 181 (old Article 178) applied to the application for an order absolute under the ruling in Rungiah Goundan & Co. v. Nanjappa Row (2);

(b) that, therefore, it was barred as made after three years from March 1909;

(c) that the decree-holders had no right to apply for an order absolute but could apply only for the passing of a final decree according to the provisions of the new Civil Procedure Code.

The District Judge confirmed the order of the District Munsif on only the ground (c), namely, that the decree holder had no right to apply for an order absolute but only for a final decree and such an application was barred under Article 181.

Following the reasoning of the decision in Balaji Rao v. Harirama Chetty (3), which approves of the decision in Mahommad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (4), I would hold that the decree passed in December 1908 under section 88 of Act IV of 1882 gave a vested right to the decree-holder to obtain an order absolute in execution proceedings and that he could, therefore, apply under section 89 of Act IV of 1882 for such an order.

Though sections 83 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act had been repealed before the time allowed to the judgment-debtor for making the payment (March 1909), the vested right of the decree-holder to apply in execution for an order absolute on the expiry of the time granted to the judgment-debtor for payment cannot be taken away by the said repeal [see section 6 of clauses (c) and (e) of the General Clauses Act]. If his right to apply under section 89 is held to have been taken away by the new Code, he cannot also obtain a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 5, as a final decree presupposes a preliminary decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, and the decree of December 1908 was not a preliminary decree (see Malikarjunadu Setti v. Lingamurthi Pantulu (5)).

The result would be that the decree-holders have got a final decree under section 88 of Act IV of 1882 but can neither get an order absolute nor a final decree to make it executable.

The respondents' learned Vakil relied on the case in Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1). I am not quite sure whether I have been able to correctly understand the language of that judgment and the facts, though I have carefully gone through the records (including the printed papers and the judgment). The District Munsif's judgment in that case was passed in September 1908, but the case went up to the High Court in second appeal and the judgment and the decree in second appeal were passed on 29th July 1910. That decree is referred to in Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1) as "the final decree on second appeal." It is doubtful on the language whether the learned Judges meant that it was the decree which was passed finally by the High Court in the litigation or whether there was at first a preliminary decree and the High Court afterwards passed a final decree on 29th July 1910. But a perusal of the records shows that they intended the former.

The next question is whether the High Court's decree of 29th July 1910 must (like the District Munsif's decree in that suit) be taken to have been passed under section 83 of Act IV of 1882 or as a preliminary decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4 (1) of the new Civil Procedure Code. After the best consideration I have been able to give to the question, I think that the learned Judges treated it as a preliminary decree passed by the High Court under the new Code and then they applied Article 181 to the application for a final decree. They yet held, however, that the application of 1914 to pass the final decree following the preliminary decree of 1910 was not barred because they say "it was conceded" (evidently by the Vakil for appellants) "that if time accrued from the date of the appellate decree the present application would not be barred by limitation." What facts, such as an acknowledgment by the judgment-debtor of the existence of the right to apply made within three years or an acknowledgment that the application of 1914 could be treated as a renewal of previous application made within three years of July 1910, led the appellant's Vakil to make that concession does not appear from the records.

I think that I can say with some confidence that the learned Judges could not have considered the High Court's decree of 1910 as one passed under section 88 of Act IV of 1882, as they applied Article 181 not Article 182 to the application of 1914 and one of the learned Judges who decided Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1) (Mr. Justice Sadasiva Ayyar) was a party to the prior decision in Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (4), which clearly held [following Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6)] that notwithstanding Rungiah Goundan & Co. v Naniappa Row (2) Article 182 (old 178) and not Article 181 (old Article 178) applied to an application made

In the result I would set aside the decisions of the lower Courts and hold [following Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (4) which decided that applications for an order absolute can be renewed at intervals of not more than three years till 12 years expire that the decree-holders' application of 1914 to pass an order absolute under section 89 is legally sustainable and competent and that it is not barred. An order absolute is, therefore, directed to be drawn up by the District Munsif in favour of the decree holder, following the terms of section 89 of Act IV of 1882. The 1st respondent will pay the plaintiffs' costs throughout, such costs being also a charge on the mortgaged property to be added to the decree amount.

SPENCER, J.—In this case there was an application for an order absolute for sale within three years of the passing of the decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, namely, on December 2nd, 1911.

When that application was dismissed for default, the dismissal of the application did not have the effect of causing the suit to be dismissed or of making the decree already passed null and void. Within three years of that date, viz, on 29th April 1914, a fresh application was made quoting section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, although by that time the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act for enforcing mortgages had been superseded by the provisions of Order XXXIV of the new Civil Procedure Code.

Under the authority of the Privy Council in Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6) an application to make an order absolute in a suit upon a mortgage for sale governed by the Transfer of Property Act falls within the purview of Article 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877, and this was followed in Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (4) [see also Balaji Rau v. Hariramu Chetty (3)].

The application of 2nd December 1911 being a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908 (corresponding to Article 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877), the present application is not barred either by Article 182, Limitation Act, or by section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

If, however, it be held that on account of the date fixed for payment in this case falling on 10th March 1909 after the Code of 1908 came into force, the decree-holder should apply for a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 5, instead of applying for an order absolute, then I consider that such an application being an application in the suit, it is open to the plaintiff to continue the suit until the stage of final decree is reached, provided that the suit is not meanwhile dismissed for any cause. [see Lakshmi Achi v. Subbarama Aiyar (7)]. In this view I consider that the preliminary decree holders might be permitted to treat both their applications of 1911 and 1914 as applications under Article 181 for a final decree and to treat the 2nd as a continuation or revival of the first application.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed with costs and that the case should be sent back to the District Munsif's Court for passing the necessary orders.

BONOMALI SEAL—DEFENDANT.

Lunacy Act (XXXIV of 1858), proceedings under—Order of Judge and deposition of lunatic, whether admissible in subsequent suit against lunatic—Hindu Law—Inheritance—Mental affection, whether disqualification.

Although the order and the report made by a Judge in a proceeding in lunacy under Act XXXIV of 1858 do not fall within either sections 40, 41 or 42 of the Evidence Act, yet in a subsequent suit against the lunatic they are admissible in evidence under other provisions of the Act. But the deposition of the lunatic taken in the lunacy proceeding would not be admissible in evidence unless he is examined in the subsequent suit, for it is admissible only to contradict any evidence which he gives in the subsequent suit. [p. 569, cols. 1 & 2.]

According to Hindu Law mental affection, to disqualify a person from inheriting, must be of such a nature that a man is thereby debarred or incapable of performing the funeral rites and offering the proper funeral oblations.[p. 569, col. 2; p. 570, col. 1.]

Mr. N. N. Sircar (with him Mr. I. B. Sen), for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Langford James (with him Mr. S. Ghosh), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to recover (1) Nos. 35 and 35, Blackburn Lane, (2) No. 44, Mechua Bazar Street, (3) a two-thirds undivided share in No. 1, Old China Bazar Street, and (4) the sale-proceeds of Nos. 11, 12 and 13, Ram Mohun Ghose's Lane, under the following circumstances. One Ananta Ram Seal died on the 4th March 1907 intestate possessed of the premises in suit, leaving a son the defendant Bonomali Seal. Bonomali had a son Durga Charan, who died on the 13th July 1918 without issue but leaving two widows, the plaintiffs. On the 2nd April 1908 Sreemutty Debjani Dassi petitioned this Court for an enquiry as to whether Bonomali Seal was or was not of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs. On the 6th April 1908 an order was made on this petition which was entitled "In the matter of Lunacy Act XXXIV of 1858 and In the matter of clause 17 of the Charter and In the matter of Bonomali Seal a lunatic" by Woodroffe, J., directing an enquiry to be held before him as to whether (inter alia) Bonomali Seal was or was not of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs and the time during which he had been of unsound mind. Woodroffe, J., on the 27th April 1908, found and reported (inter alia) that Bonomali Seal was of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs and that he had been of unsound mind for about fifteen years, and on the same day Srimati Debjani Dassee and one Kartick were appointed Committees of his person and estate. I should state that the report found that Bonomali Seal was entitled to the premises in Suits Nos. 11, 12 and 13, Ram Mohun Ghose's Lane, being then unsold and the whole of No. 1, Old China Bazar Street, being stated to belong to him.

Under the circumstances set out above the plaintiffs contend that as Bonomali was of unsound mind when his father died, he was incapable of inheriting and that the property in suit passed to Durga Charan as whose heirs they claim it.

The following issues were raised, (1) Is the suit barred by limitation as to the sums as mentioned in page 7 of the plaint? (2) Are the plaintiffs estopped from asserting that Bonomali is not entitled to the estate? (3) Was Bonomali excluded from inheritance by reason of insanity? Was his mental condition such as to exclude him from the inheritance? (4) In the event of the plaintiffs' claim succeeding, what is the suitable maintenance and residence to which the defendant is entitled?

The following evidence was given before me. Binode Behari Adhya on behalf of the plaintiffs stated that he was a medical practitioner and an M. B. of the Calcutta University and that he had known Bonomali since his marriage with Debjani which was prior to 1907. He stated that Bonomali was not in a sound state of mind in 1907 and that some years after his marriage he became of unsound mind and that at the time of Ananta Ram's death he was not of sound mind and had hallucinations, stating that various people owed him money and that the Government was his rent collector, and that he could not get from him any proper reply as from a reasonable man. In cross-examination he stated that for two or three weeks he specially observed Bonomali for the purpose of giving evidence in the lunacy proceedings, but that before he observed him for the purpose of the lunacy proceedings he only attended him once and that for fever. That Bonomali performed his father's Sradh and that Bonomali used occasionally to come to his house and used to state that his 50 sons were beheaded last night but that his main hallucination was as to money. The next witness Net Behary Dass Sen stated that he first knew Bonomali 10 or 12 years ago and that ever since then he had noticed him to be insane, that he carried bunches of keys about and talked like an insane person and abused little boys who asked him how he was, threatening to send 10,000 troops to punish them. He stated that his state of mind was the same all along both before and after his father's death. In cross-examination he stated that he was a store-keeper in the Bengal Secretariat at Rs. 16 a month and that he was not a friend of the family, but that he used to sit on the ledge of the house and talk to Bonomali and that he found him talking at random. The witness appears to be a chance witness and I am not inclined to attach much importance to his evidence. Satish Chandra Das, the father of the 1st plaintiff, stated that he had known Bonomali for the last 25 or 26 years and that before his daughter's marriage with Durga Charan, Bonomali used to come to his house and used to write that Lord Curzon was his Collecting Sircar and that the Maharajah of Burdwan owed him a crore of rupees and that Government had granted him 10,000 troops, and that in Ananta Ram's lifetime he was not fit for the ordinary intercourse of life and that he thought poison was mixed with his food. That in conversation after the first few moments he began talking about his hallucinations.

On behalf of the defendant Apurba Charan Chakravarti stated that he was Ananta Ram's priest and that he knew Bonomali and had been priest of the family for over 40 years. He stated that Bonomali performed the Sradh ceremony after Ananta Ram's death and that he also performed the Chandrayan (expiation) ceremony and offered Pindas on the 10th day, and that he was the priest on those occasions. He also stated that Bonomali performed the Nandi Mag on the occasion of Durga Charan's marriage and also performed his father's annual Sradh and could talk like an ordinary human being and could pronounce the Mantras. In cross examination he stated that he was satisfied if a person performing the Sradh merely repeated the Mantras after him, and that Bonomali did repeat the Mantras when he told him. He stated that under the Shastras a mad man was not competent to perform the Sradh and that Bonomali was of sound mind at the time of his father's death and for 2 or 3 years after, and that he never observed any signs of insanity except talking to himself when alone, which began some 8 years or so ago, and that in 1908 he did not notice that his state of mind was other than normal and that he noticed no change in his mind after his father's death.

The next witness Manik Lal Dey stated that he was present at Ananta Ram's Sradh ceremony which was performed by Bonomali and that Bonomali's hallucinations were only as to money and that in all other matters he was quite reasonable. In cross-examination he stated that from 1907 upto his son's death in 1918 he was in much the same state, but that he got a little worse after his son's death and that he was invited by Bonomali personally to Durga Charan's wedding, and in re-examination he stated that Bonomali on the occasion of his son's wedding did some of the entertaining of the guests. Ashutosh Mullick stated that he had known Bonomali for some 30 years and that Debjani was his niece. He stated that Bonomali was all right at the death of Anant Ram but that he suffered from hallucinations as to money matters, alleging that money was owing to him but that when he was not under these hallucinations he talked like an ordinary sane man. That he carried his father's corpse to the burning Ghat, performed the Mukhagni and the Sradh and received and talked to the guests at the dinner two days after the Sradh, that Bonomali invited him to his son's wedding and that upto 1910 and 1911 he was all right and that there was nothing wrong about him. He stated that he came to know that something was wrong with him when he stood surety for Debjani, the Committee. Jyotish Chunder Mukerjee gave formal evidence.

The remaining witness Debjani was called by my direction at the plaintiffs' request. In answer to plaintiffs' Counsel she stated that Bonomali was a mad man now but that he was not so when Ananta Ram was alive, and that his present condition was the same as after Ananta Ram's death and that he had been a mad man or like one for the last 11 or 12 years, but that in Ananta Ram's lifetime he was not a mad man but became such after Ananta Ram's death when he began to talk much—she also stated that Durga Charan was 13 or 14 when Bonomali's brain became deranged.

This concludes the oral evidence and I now have to decide how far the proceedigs before Woodoffe, J., are admissible in evidence. The plaintiffs contend that as against Bono-mali they are conclusive and tender in evidence the orders, the report and the evidence of Bonomali who was examined before Woodroffe, J. The defendant contends that they are not admissible, urging that the orders are not judgments in rem and in any case are not evidence of the grounds upon which they were made, that the report is merely the judgment and is not admissible and that Bonomali's evidence can only be taken as admission against him under section 145 of the Evidence Act upon which he might be examined.

I think there is no doubt that in English Law the proceedings before Woodroffe, J., would even as between third parties be evidence of the lunacy, although not conclusive and liable to be traversed. See Hill v. Glifford (1) and Harvey v. Rex (2). In the last case, which was an appeal to the Judicial Committee from the Supreme Court of Ceylon, where it was argued that orders in lunacy made in England were not admissible in evidence in the Ceylon Courts and that these Courts were justified in paying no attention to them, Lord Lindley in delivering the judgment of the Board states as follows :—

"The orders are not conclusive evidence of anything except their own existence; but being made by a competent tribunal in a matter within its jurisdiction they cannot be rejected as inadmissible, or as no evidence of the truth of those facts recited in them which are essential to their validity. They are admissible as prima facie evidence and if uncontradicted they ought to be regarded as sufficient evidence of those facts, not only in this country, but in all His Majesty's dominions."

The question, therefore, which I have to decide is whether I am debarred by the Indian Evidence Act from admitting the proceedings before Woodroffe, J., in evidence. I am of the opinion that they do not fall within either sections 40, 41 or 42 of the Evidence Act, but that they are admissible under other provisions of the Act. I accordingly admit the orders and the report, but not the evidence of Bonomali who was not called before me and whose evidence would, I think, only be admissible to contradict any evidence he might have given before me had he been called.

I now come to deal with the issues. So far as the 1st issue is concerned, I am of opinion that the sums referred to in paragraph 7 of the plaint are not barred by limitation. It is suggested by the defendant that Article 62 of the Limitation Act applies and that as the moneys were received in 1914 and that as the plaintiffs claim through Durga Charan, their claim as to these moneys is barred. I do not think that these moneys, however, fall within Article 62. Durga Charan, at the time the moneys were received, had made no claim to the estate and the estate at the date of their receipt was in Bonomali's possession through his Committee. Consequently I do not think that they can be said to be moneys received by the defendant to the plaintiffs' use (or to Durga Charan's use) within Article 62. The Article applicable would, I think, be Article 120 and under this Article the claim is not barred. So far as the 2nd issue is concerned, I do not see that any question of estoppel arises or how by reason of Durga Charan having signed the accounts on his mother's behalf, Bonomali can be said to have changed his position. I now come to the 3rd issue which is the real issue in the case. The conclusion which I have come to upon the evidence is that Bonomali's state of mind at the time of his father's death was not dissimilar to his state of mind upon the 27th April 1908, that is to say, that he suffered from hallucinations and was not normal, but I should be inclined to think that after his father's death there was some increase in his malady. I think that probably at Ananta Ram's death he was incapable of managing his affairs like an ordinary man or of transacting business. At the same time I think it is abundantly established upon the evidence that he performed his father's Sradh and the usual ceremonies connected with the death. Under these circumstances the question which I have to decide is whether his condition was such at his father's death as to make him incapable of inheriting according to Hindu Law. I think, that it was not. Mental affection to disqualify a person from inheriting must, I think, be of such a nature that a man is thereby

There is no evidence before me that Bonomali, being incapable of performing these duties, was allowed to perform them with a view of defrauding another of the inheritance; there is not only no such evidence but the fact sworn to by the priest and by others that he did perform them and was capable of so doing. This being so, I answer the 3rd issue in the negative. The fourth issue does not arise. In the result the suit fails and must be dismissed with costs on scale No. .2.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
STAMP REFERENCE IN FIRST CIVIL APPEAL
No. 59 OF 1918.
August 6, 1917.

CHHETRU LAL AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Suit for partition—Property in possession of defendant—Court-fee payable.

Plaints in all suits for partition should be carefully examined. Where it is patent that the defendants are in possession of any part of the property to be partitioned and have denied the plaintiff's title thereto, the suit is obviously a suit to recover possession of that part of the property at least, and a Court-fee ad valorem on the share claimed in that part must be levied. [p. 571, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagulpore.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs brought a suit for partition of the joint family property and prayed for the following reliefs :—

(1) It might be declared that a certain Sulehnama was not binding upon them and it could not prejudicially affect their interest in the joint family property and that in any event it could not affect any property other than the properties in dispute at the time of the Sulehnama; and that in the latter event the plaintiffs were entitled to have their shares made up from other properties in due course of partition.

(2) All the ancestral properties and joint properties and all the joint debts might be ascertained and the share of the plaintiffs therein be defined and declared.

(3) A partition of all the immoveable properties might be made by metes and bounds and the plaintiffs be allowed their shares.

(4) A division of the moveable properties be made and the plaintiffs be given their shares in each in such manner as to the Court might seem fit and proper.

The plaintiffs, however, stated in the plaint that a considerable portion of the property was in the immediate possession of the defendants and that they had set up adverse title thereto.

They stamped the plaint with a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only, treating the suit as one for partition. Being aggrieved by the decision of the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court. They stamped the memorandum of appeal also with a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only. The Stamp Reporter submitted that the Court-fee paid should have been ad valorem. The Taxing Officer, agreeing with the Stamp Reporter, referred the matter to the Taxing Judge.

Mr. Hassan Imam (with him Mr. Nirsu Narain Singh), for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The first relief sought is a declaration that a Solenamah is void. On this the fee of Rs. 10 need not be paid for the immediate consequence of the declaration will be that the plaintiff will obtain an eight pies share more than is given him in the Solenamah. On this an ad valorem fee must be paid [see Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Secretary of State for India(1)]. This ad valorem fee will be merged in some cases with another ad valorem fee due on that part of the suit which is in effect a title suit in the guise of a partition suit. Mr. Hasan Imam contends that even though the defendants may have denied in their written statement the plaintiffs' title to some of the property of which partition is sought, the whole suit will bear a Court fee of Rs. 10 as a partition suit, and to support this contention quotes Bidhata Rai v. Ram Chariter Roy (2). This case and Tara Chand v. Afzal Beg (3) and Shashi Bhushan Bid v. Jotindra Nath Roy Chowdhury (4) are authority only for the proposition that where the plaintiff alleges that he is in possession of his undivided share in the property in suit, a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only is required. The distinction between this class of case and cases in which the partition suit is merely a title suit in disguise has been clearly drawn in Kirty Churn Mitter v. Aunath Nath Deb (5), Balvant Ganesh v. Nana Chintanon (6) and Wali-ullah v. Durga Prasad (7). Plaints in all suits for partition should be carefully examined. Where it is patent that the defendants are in possession of any part of the property to be partitioned and have denied the plaintiff's title therein, the suit is obviously a suit to recover possession of that part of the property at least, and a Court-fee ad valorem on the share claimed in that part must be levied. Paragraph 6 of the plaint clearly states that there is considerable property in the defendants' immediate possession, and that the defendants have set up an adverse title therein. On these properties ad valorem fees must be paid. The plaintiff has not specified these properties, but it will be clear from the Khewats of the recent surveys in the Santhal Pergannas, Monghyr and Bhagalpore what is the exact nature of the dispute between the parties. The Registrar should call upon him to produce these Khewats. With the Khewats he must file a statement showing the value of the relief sought, calculated according to the calculations set forth above. Wherever a plaintiff has failed to value the actual relief sought he may be required to place a value on it, and if he fails to do so the Registrar will be justified in taking the value of the relief sought as the full value of the property in dispute. If he fails to produce the Khewats and statements of value within such time as the Registrar thinks reasonable, the Registrar will fix such Court-fees as seem obvious to him to be right. In this particular case it is obvious that the Court fee ad valorem should not be calculated on more than one fourth of the values given in Schedule B, Part I, (a) to (g). In Schedule B, Part I (b), the plaintiff clearly states that he is in possession of more than his one fourth share. On this he need pay nothing. The mortgage deeds and bonds and money-lending business specified in Schedule II are all in the names of the defendants, Chetu, Kripal, Pitambar, Baikunth, Hazauri and Basuki Rai. The value of the relief sought in regard to them must be calculated at one-third of the value set on them, less the value, Rs. 82,000, set on the plaintiff's business i. e., if the defendants' business is worth less than Rs. 2,46,000, the total business is worth less than Rs. 3,28,000 and the plaintiff is in possession of more than his one-fourth share and need pay nothing. On anything in excess of Rs. 2,46,000 the relief sought is one third of the excess. In Part II (f) to (i) the plaintiff says he is in possession of more than his share and need pay nothing. On the cash (j) he must pay on a quarter share. On the decrees (k) he must pay on a quarter share if they are in the names of the defendants. If he produces the Khewats, he need pay on an eight pies share only on the properties for which he has already been recorded for three annas and four pies.

Order accordingly.

POORAN MULL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54—Injunction, suit for—Injunction, when can be granted—Appeal—New point, whether can be raised at hearing.

RAM KISSEN JOYDOYAL v. POORAN MULL.

Where a suit is in essence one for a perpetual injunction with prayers for declarations ancillary thereto, the plaintiff must establish that the injunction is required to prevent the breach of an obligation, and unless he does so, the injunction claimed cannot be granted, more especially if equally efficacious relief can be obtained by any other usual mode of proceedings. [p. 575, cols. 1 & 2]

A point not taken in the trial Court, nor raised in the memorandum of appeal, may be urged at the hearing of an appeal if it goes to the root of the matter and raises the question of the competency of the Court to grant the relief claimed. [p. 574, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 29th April 1919.

FACTS appears from the following judgment of GREAVES, J.—In this suit the plaintiffs seek for a declaration that they did not enter into a certain contract No. 128 with the defendants, dated the 13th December 1916, and that it is not binding on them and for an injunction restraining the defendants from proceeding to arbitration thereon before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce pursuant to a clause contained in the contract. The only issue which arises in the suit is whether the plaintiffs are liable on this contract. The evidence is as follows. On behalf of the plaintiff Hari Bux, who is a partner of Puranmull (the firm named being Choonilal Gobordhone Das) stated that his firm did not know the defendant firm before they received their letter of the 24th May 1917 which is contained in Exhibit G, that his firm were commission agents and had no transaction in hessians to which the contract relates. He denied that his firm asked anybody to enter into any contract on the 13th December 1916 or that they received any bought and sold note or any confirmation letter in respect of the transaction, and he denied that certain initials shown him in a peon book of Messrs. Pugh and Co. were signed by his firm or by any one belonging to the firm or that the initials Oh and Ga in the defendants' peon book were in the handwriting of any one in his firm. In cross examination he stated that one Tansook Roy, a broker who was living in the same house with him, told him in November 1916 that he had done a hessian transaction for him, that he told Tansook Roy that he had never ordered him to do this and that Tansook Roy told him two or three days later that he had arranged about the contract and sold to another party and that he signed his firm's name on a cheque drawn in favour of his firm by Bagatram Sew Protap at Tansook Roy's request but that he made no other payment. He denied having seen one Ramgopal of the firm of Ramgopal Bahitram prior to the 31st May 1917. On behalf of the defendants Ramgopal, a member of the firm of Ramgopal Bahitram, stated that he sold to the plaintiff firm 2 lbs of "B" Twills in November 1916, the contract being entered into by Tansook Roy Pursoram, and that he went to the plaintiffs for payment against delivery order and met Hari Bux who gave him a cheque and Rs. 75 in cash and that he made an entry in his cash-book. With regard to the transaction in suit he stated that he was the under broker and that he had an entry in his books under date the 13th December 1916, that he received instructions from Nitamul of the defendant firm to sell the goods referred to in the contract and that he met the broker Tansook Roy and made the bargain, through him, but that as he did not trust him absolutely he went to the plaintiff's Gadi, and met Hari Bux who accepted the bargain and that he told the defendants that the sale had been effected to the plaintiffs. He further stated that in May 1917 he went to see Hari Bux at his Gadi and that there was some talk as to a settlement. In cross-examination (Q and A 93) he stated that Tansook Roy did not come to the defendant firm with an offer from the plaintiffs, and in Q and A 122—125 he stated that in transactions such as the one in suit it was usual to have bought and sold notes and confirmatory letters from both sides and receipts for the bought and sold notes, but that in this transaction the defendants had told him that there was no confirmatory letter from the plaintiffs.

Nitamull, a son of one of the partners in the defendant firm who looks after the business of the firm on his father's behalf, stated that prior to the contract in suit he gave an offer to Ramgopal and that he reported that he had sold the goods to Choonilal Goberdhone Das through Tansook Roy and that they made an entry in their books. He stated that on the 13th or 14th

December he got the contract but that he subsequently sent it to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and had not got it back. That on the 28th December 1916 he sent a paper to the plaintiffs' Gadi and subsequently saw the peon book which had been sent with the paper, that on the 2nd or 3rd May Hari Bux came to his firm's Gadi and suggested settling for the April loss for Rs. 600.

Ram Kishore, a Durwan in the employ of the defendants, stated that he knew the plaintiffs' Gadi from taking a letter there from the defendant firm about Christmas 1916. He stated that he handed the letter over and that after that the initials appearing in the peon book were put, and that he was asked from whom the letter came and stated that it came from the defendants.

Haripada Bose, Messrs. Pugh and Co.'s despatching clerk, gave evidence as to the despatch of two letters of the 30th April and the 18th May and Jitendra Nath Dutt, an assistant in Pugh and Co., produced press copies of these letters and Shamlal and Ranjar, peons of the firm, gave evidence as to taking letters to the plaintiffs' Gadi. The material documentary evidence consists of Exhibit 2 A, the defendants' entry of the contract in their Sowda book, which states that the sale was effected through the broker Tansook Roy and of two entries in the books of Ramgopal Bahitram, one being in the cash book as to the B Twills transaction, purporting to show receipt of a cheque and Rs. 75 in cash from the plaintiffs, and the other being in their brokerage book of the transaction in suit.

It is, I think, clear upon the evidence that the broker Tansook Roy did enter into the contract in suit, and what I have to decide is whether he did so under authority from the plaintiffs and on their behalf or if not, whether the plaintiffs came to know of the contract and subsequently ratified and accepted it. Unfortunately Tansook Roy has disappeared and could not be called, and it is not established to my satisfaction that he had authority from the plaintiffs to enter into this contract on their behalf. Ramgopal was not a satisfactory witness and I am not prepared to accept his evidence on any point, and it is noticeable that his name is not mentioned in the evidence on the motion to restrain the arbitration before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, the defendants stating in their affidavit that Tansook Roy came with an offer from the plaintiffs which they accepted and which is a different story to that now put forward. Nitamull struck me as really knowing very little about the matter and I cannot accept his evidence as reliable. The only thing, therefore, to connect the plaintiffs with the transaction is the defendants' letter of confirmation of the 28th December 1916, which I think upon the evidence was delivered at the plaintiffs' Gadi and, I think I must hold, was received by them, but I do not think that this is sufficient by itself to make them liable. I think, therefore, that I must make the declaration which I am asked to make and I accordingly declare that the plaintiffs did not enter into the contract No. 128 of the 13th December 1916 and that the same is not binding on them, and I restrain the defendants from proceeding with the arbitration in respect of the contract before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and the defendants must pay the costs of this suit on scale No. 2, which will include reserved costs, if any.

Messrs. N. Sarkar, Langford James and S. C. Bose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. D. Bose and R. N. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for a perpetual injunction to restrain arbitration proceedings before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal of Arbitration. The plaintiffs instituted this suit for declaration that they did not enter into the contract No. 128 with the defendant dated the 13th December 1916, that the contract is not binding on them and that they are accordingly entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from proceedings to arbitration pursuant to the usual arbitration clause contained in the contract. The defendants traversed all the material allegations in their written statement. The only issue raised in the Court below was whether the plaintiffs were liable on the contract. Mr. Justice Greaves, on the evidence adduced, came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs did not enter into the contract and that the same was not binding on them; he accordingly granted an injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding with the arbitration before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

On the present appeal, it has been argued that the plaintiffs, on the face of the plaint, were not entitled to the relief claimed by them. This point was not taken in the Court below and does not appear to have been raised in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court. On behalf of the respondents, it has been argued that the point should not be allowed to be raised for the first time here. We cannot accede to this contention, because although the question cannot strictly be deemed as one of jurisdiction in the sense of competency of the Court to entertain the suit, still the objection goes to the root of the matter and raises the question whether the Court was competent to grant the relief claimed by the plaintiffs. If the Court was not competent to grant the injunction claimed by the plaintiffs, it is manifest that the decree for injunction should not be allowed to stand, merely because the point was overlooked and neither raised in the Court below nor mentioned in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court. That the Court of Appeal cannot avoid the decision of a pure question of law of this character, which does not depend on the determination of a question of fact, and, which, besides, disputes the authority of the Court to make an order of a certain description, is clear from the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Meenakshinaidoo v. Subramaniya Sastri (1) and Connecticut Fire Insurance v. Kavanagh (2).

In the plaint the plaintiffs asked for the following reliefs: "For a declaration that the plaintiffs did not enter into the said alleged contract and the same is not binding on them, for a declaration that there was no submission to arbitration by the plaintiffs and for an injunction restraining the defendant firm, its servants and agents from proceeding with the said arbitration before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal of Arbitration." It is plain that this is not a suit for a mere declaration of title without consequential relief, within the meaning of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Consequently, no question arises as to the scope of that section, as explained in the judgment of Sir Lawrance Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (3). The suit is in essence one for a perpetual injunction and the prayers for declaration are merely ancillary thereto. Thus the fundamental question for determination is, whether the Court was competent to grant the injunction sought for by the plaintiffs.

Now, as was pointed out by Sir Arthur Wilson in the case of Tituram Mukerji v. Cohen (4), "The right to an injunction, depends, in India, upon Statute and is governed by the provisions of the Specific Relief Act." We must, therefore, examine the provisions of Chapters IX and X of the Act. Chapter IX is headed 'Of Injunction generally.' Section 52, the first of the sections contained in Chapter IX, states that preventive relief is granted at the discretion of the Court by injunction, temporary or perpetual. Section 53 next defines the injunctions as of two classes. The second paragraph, which is devoted to perpetual injunctions, lays down that a perpetual injunction can only be granted by the decree made at the hearing and upon the merits of the suit. The defendant is thereby perpetually enjoined from the assertion of a right or from the commission of an act, which would be contrary to the rights of the plaintiff. This provision consequently defines the mode in which a perpetual injunction can be granted and its restraining effect on the defendant when it has been granted. The next Chapter is headed 'Of perpetual injunctions' and opens with section 54, which defines when perpetual injunctions can be granted. The first paragraph of the section lays down that, subject to the other provisions contained in, or referred to by, this Chapter, a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication. The next two paragraphs deal with two distinct classes of cases, namely, first, the case when the obligation arises from contract, and secondly, the case when the defendant invades or threatens to invade the plaintiff's right to, or enjoyment of, property. In the former class of cases, the principle is formulated that the Court shall be guided by the rules and provisions contained in the Second Chapter of the Statute. In the latter class of cases, it is stated that the Court may grant a perpetual injunction in five specific categories of events. Mr. Bose, for the respondents, has not seriously contended that the prayer for injunction in the present litigation can be brought within the scope of section 54. This is fairly clear from the opening and controlling paragraph of the section, which provides that in order to entitle a litigant to a perpetual injunction, he must establish that the injunction is required to prevent a breach of an obligation. The term 'obligation' is defined in section 3 to include every duty enforceable by law, so that when a legal duty is imposed on one person in respect to another, that other is invested with the corresponding legal right. The first paragraph of the section thus establishes the broad and general rule that given the breach of an existing legal right which is vested in the applicant, the breach thereof may be restrained by injunction. This is an elementary principle, for as Lord Kingsdown said in Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent (5) when a plaintiff applies for an injunction to restrain a violation of an alleged right, if the existence of the right be disputed, he must establish that right before he gets the injunction to prevent the recurrence of its violation. We accordingly invited the learned Counsel for the respondents to formulate the precise obligation of which there had been a breach in the case before us. But he was unable to show that there was any legal right in the plaintiffs which had been violated or had been threatened with violation by the defendant. Consequently, it is plain that no injunction can be claimed under section 54. Mr. Bose was thereupon constrained to invoke the aid of the second paragraph of section 53; he argued in substance that the right to an injunction must be determined by reference to the provisions of section 53 and that the provisions of section 54 should be treated as merely illustrative. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention. Sections 54 and 56 must be read together, as supplementing each other. The former defines the circumstance under which perpetual injunctions may be granted; the latter enumerates the cases where an injunction must not be granted. It would, in our opinion, be an erroneous construction of the Statute to hold that the right to an injunction should be determined independently of the provisions of sections 54 and 56, by reference to the terms of section 53. As we have already stated, the injunction in this case cannot be claimed under the provisions of section 54. We are further of opinion that the injunction claimed should not be granted in view of the provision of clause (i) of section 56, which lays down that an injunction cannot be granted when equally efficacious relief can certainly be obtained by any other usual mode of proceeding (except in case of breach of trust). In the case before us, the respondents allege that they did not enter into the alleged contract. If that case is well-founded, the arbitration proceedings before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, even if they result in an award, can only terminate in an award which would be a nullity and could not possibly affect the rights of the plaintiffs; if the arbitrators make an award in favour of the defendant (which itself is doubtful), the plaintiffs will have ample opportunity to protect themselves by an appropriate proceeding. We are clearly of opinion, on all these grounds, that the injunction claimed cannot be granted.

Reference was made on behalf of the appellant to the decision in North London Railway Co. v. Great Northern Railway Co. (6), which was followed by Rankin, J., in Sardarmull Jessraj v. Agar Chand Mahata & Co. (7) in support of the view that when the contract is denied, the Court will not grant an interlocutory injunction to restrain arbitration proceedings which, according to the applicant, would be null and futile. On behalf of the respondents, reliance was placed on the earlier decisions of Sir George Jessel in the cases of Beddow v. Bed-

It is not necessary for us to deal with these cases, because, as we have already pointed out, the authority of the Court to grant an injunction in the present case depends on the true construction of the provisions of the Specific Relief Act.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed. We direct that the plaintiffs-respondents do pay to the defendant-appellant the costs of this appeal as also the costs of hearing for two days in the trial Court.

MUBARIK—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Construction of document—Deed stipulating for redemption on payment of mortgage-money and charging property with liability for principal and interest—Redemption, sum payable on.

Where a mortgage-deed stipulates for redemption of the mortgaged property on payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage-money, and states that the property is mortgaged for the principal and interest, the mortgagor can only redeem on payment of the principal sum and the interest due thereon.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 25th July 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Bhakkar, District Mianwali, dated the 9th May 1919.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for redemption of a mortgage deed on payment of nothing and also for a decree for Rs. 32. The defendant claimed Rs. 194-13 0. The first Court gave him a decree accordingly. The lower Appellate Court held that the mortgage was redeemable on payment of the principal mortgage-money only and that now nothing was payable. Against its decision the defendant mortgagee has preferred a second appeal.

The lower Appellate Court referred to a decision which is apparently Bhag Mal v. Talia (1), to the effect that zar i-rahn or zar-i-marhuna means the principal mortgage-money only. To the same effect is Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (2) and Lok Chand v. Hazar Khan (3). None of these judgments, however, has any connection with the present case. In the mortgage-deed itself the mortgagor begins by stating that when he pays the mortgage-money zar-i-rahn, he will redeem the house. He then goes on to say that with the mortgage-money he will also pay the costs of repairs. He concludes by stating that the property is mortgaged for the principal and interest and that his person will also be liable. These concluding words entirely differentiate this case from those relied upon by Counsel for the respondent, as there is an explicit agreement that the mortgaged property is liable also for the interest.

I, therefore, accept this appeal and set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and as there are many grounds of appeal not disposed of, I remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, for their disposal. Costs will be costs in the cause and Court-fee on appeal will be refunded.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF BENGAL—RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), Part VIII, ss 103, 104—Charge, notice of Form of charge—Prosecution, duty of—"Alleged creditor," undue preference to, whether offence—Transfer for valuable consideration—Good faith—Criminal proceedings, postponement of, to civil proceedings.

Where in a proceeding under Part VIII of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the charge framed against the insolvent does not correspond with the notice issued to him, his conviction thereunder cannot be maintained. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Where an insolvent is charged with purposely withholding books, it is the duty of the prosecution to establish that such books do in fact exist: mere suspicion cannot be allowed to pose as proof. [p. 578, cols. 1 & 2.]

In order to constitute the offence of undue preference under section 103 (b) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act against an insolvent, the payment must be to a creditor, and not to an "alleged creditor." [p. 579, col. 1.]

Where an insolvent transfers property, and the question is whether in so doing he acted in good faith, the fact that there was valuable consideration for the transfer adequate to the occasion would negative the inference that there was an absence of good faith in spite of the fact that the transfer was in favour of a relative. [p. 581, col. 2.]

Though no invariable rule can be laid down, it is ordinarily undesirable to institute criminal proceedings until the determination of civil proceedings in which the same issues are involved. Criminal proceedings lend themselves to the unscrupulous application of improper pressure with a view to influencing the course of the civil proceedings, and beyond that there is the mischief of criminal proceedings being instituted with an imperfect appreciation of the facts where they have not been ascertained in the more searching investigation of a Civil Court. Mr. A. Avetoom (with him Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—On the 21st February 1912 J. M. Lucas was adjudicated an insolvent on his own petition under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. He was examined as to his conduct, dealings and property, and later, proceedings under Part VIII of the Act were instituted against him.

A notice was served on him under section 104 professing to set forth the substance of certain offences, and calling on him to shew cause why charges should not be framed against him. Nine charges were framed; on three he was acquitted, on six he was convicted and on each of these he was sentenced to rigourous imprisonment for four months. The sentences were directed to run concurrently. From these convictions and sentences Lucas has appealed.

The charges fall under two general heads, the withholding and falsifying of books of account, and the making away with property.

As it is objected on the part of the appellant that in one important particular the charge does not correspond with the notice, it is necessary to examine the terms of the notice so far as they relate to it. The first charge in the notice is that Lucas withheld the following books, (1) cash and ledger books of the insolvent's business to the end of April 1909, and (2) the ledger books from the month of May 1909 to the 14th of February 1912. The second charge is that Lucas kept a false cash-book from the 1st May 1909 to the 14th February 1912, which had been filed by him with the Official Assignee.

The other charges as to books contained in the notice call for no mention. The actual charges framed in pursuance of this notice make no mention of the ledgers, but charge Lucas (a) with having withheld production of the cash book or books from 1st July 1896 to the 30th of April 1909, (b) with having kept a false cash-book from 1st May 1909 to the 14th February 1912, being the cash-book filed by him with the Official Assignee, and (c) with having withheld production of the cash-book or cash-books from 1st May 1909 to 14th February 1912. But the notice did not set forth the substance of any offence regarding these last books, in fact it made no reference to them. This charge, therefore, is not framed in pursuance of the notice and cannot be maintained. So the conviction and sentence under charge (C) must be set aside. Charge A is that Lucas has purposely withheld the production of the cash-book or cash-books of his business from the 1st July 1896 to the 30th of April 1909, and that he did this fraudulently with intent to conceal the state of his affairs and to defeat the objects of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

These cash-books are not forthcoming and the charge as framed implies that the books still exist and have not been destroyed.

There is no evidence that they still exist, and the only evidence before the Court is that they were destroyed in the autumn of 1909. In dealing with this part of the case the learned Judge ascribes to Lucas a variation in his story as to the destruction of the books; but I do not so read the insolvent's statement. His story is that in the autumn of 1909 the books were burnt because of their condition. It may be a convenient excuse, but it cannot be called an improbable story, and it is, moreover, confirmed to this extent by Mr. Cuyper, his landlord at that time, that he deposes to having seen books burnt by Lucas.

The learned Judge regards this witness as most unsatisfactory; this was because his answers were rambling and indefinite, not because he appeared to be deliberately saying what was not true.

The record does not disclose the rambling and indefinite character of his answers and I say this after having read his deposition more than once. The learned Judge acquits Mr. Cuyper of the appearance of deliberate falsehood; absolutely no reason is given why he should have deposed falsely, and no suggestion of falsehood was made in the argument before us.

Mr. Cuyper says he saw books burnt at a date he is able to fix approximately by reference to the time at which Lucas left the premises and he gives this date as a month or two before November 1909. The learned Judge does not say this was not true and I see no reason for disbelieving it.

The judgment seems to suggest that the calling of Mr. Cuyper was an afterthought: but this is not the fact. Throughout Lucas had declared that Mr. Cuyper could confirm this story as to the burning of books in the autumn of 1909.

After all said and done, we must not lose sight of the fact that this is a criminal trial, and that it lies on the prosecution to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt.

To establish that books are being purposely withheld, it must be shewn that they exist. No serious attempt has been made to establish this, but suspicion has been allowed to pose as proof. And in dealing with this charge it must not be forgotten that it relates to books from 1896 to 1909, whereas the insolvency was not till 1912: and nothing has been placed before us that points to any reason for withholding these books if in fact they exist. This has been from no want of effort on the part of those assisting the prosecution, for a most searching enquiry has been made of those with whom Lucas dealt, and Radhakishen Agarwalla has been especially active in rendering assistance, and has naturally brought to bear all the knowledge possessed by him as the insolvent's broker. I hold charge A not proved.

Charges E and G have been treated together, and yet they involve considerations that are widely different.

The first charges Lucas that he fraudulently with intent to diminish the sum to be divided among his creditors had made away with a stock of shellac of the approximate value of Rs. 6,502-4-9 on or about the end of January or the beginning of February 1912.

The second charges Lucas that he on or about the month of January or February 1912 for the purpose of giving undue preference to one of his alleged creditors, to wit, George Edmund Pereiro, made away with a stock of shellac of the approximate value of Rs. 6,502-4-9.

Each charge, therefore, relates to the making away with shellac of the same approximate value: each refers to the months of January and February, though, for some reason not explained to us, there is a closer definition of the time in the first than in the second of these two charges. It was conceded in argument that the more precise description of time ought to apply to both charges, and the two charges have been treated as relating to the same shellac.

At this point, however, the charges diverge: the first complains that the making away was fraudulent, and that the intention was to diminish the sum to be divided amongst the creditors: the second refrains from alleging that the making away was fraudulent, but charges that it was for the purpose of giving preference to an alleged creditor. Why it was not charged in that the making away was fraudulent was not explained to us: section 103 (b) requires it, and without it no offence under the Act is charged. In strictness, therefore, the second of these charges is bad in form. But that is not its only vice. It is only a creditor that can be unduly preferred, and yet Pereiro is only described as an "alleged" creditor. This is not a verbal criticism, for the Official Assignee has declined to admit Pereiro as a creditor. So that we have this extraordinary position, that we are asked by the Official Assignee to send a man to prison for giving an undue preference to a person who according to the Official Assignee is not a creditor. Mr. Avetoom found it difficult to make up his mind whether to press charge E or charge G but he evidently had a preference for the latter though he felt the difficulty that he was unable to say Pereiro had been proved to be a creditor.

Nor does this end the catalogue of difficulties in which the Official Assignee has involved himself by failing to keep clearly in view what had to be proved. It is not proved that Lucas made away with any stock of shellac of the approximate value of Rs. 6,502 4 9. The case sought to be made is that the shellac found its way into the hands of Pereiro, and this the prosecution endeavour to make out by piecing together a statement of Lucas, letters written by him and railway receipts. But this patchwork of evidence falls wholly short of the required proof: the letters might have been useful as evidence of a fraudulent intention had the transaction been proved: Lucas' statements negative the absence of valuable consideration; and of the railway receipts, the only one which is connected by evidence with Pereiro and at the same time relates to shellac, is Exhibit Z 2.

This connection consists in the fact that the receipt purports to bear Pereiro's signature and Radha Kishen, who professes to know the writing of Pereiro a little, deposes that the signature is his. How he acquired this knowledge does not appear. But treating as sufficient proof of Pereiro's handwriting this statement of Radha Kishen whose familiarity with English did not permit of his giving evidence without the aid of an interpreter, we are not carried much further. This receipt Exhibit Z 2 relates to a consignment of goods, not to Calcutta where Pereiro was, but to Mirzapur with which he is not shown to have had any connection; and the shellac is not of the approximate value of Rs. 6,502 4 9, but is only 3 maunds odd the value of which, we have been told, would be under Rs. 300.

There is absolutely nothing to show that the goods came into the possession of Pereiro: if we are to indulge in speculation, then I would be disposed to say that it is more likely that Pereiro had no real connection with the goods but that the goods were consigned in his benamee name, as the Official Assignee has himself reported.

The prosecution for the purpose of this charge have relied largely on a debit entry of Rs. 5,750 in the impugned cash-book C. C. That entry, however, purports to record a payment of Rs. 5,750, and nothing else, and if the entries on the credit side of the account be correct that amount must have been received, as otherwise there would not have been funds sufficient to meet the payments. Yet no endeavour has ever been made to show those payments were not made; on the contrary it is the subject of another charge that one payment, that to Mr. Mangey of Rs. 2,380, was in fact made.

It is true that on the credit side of this cash account are shown sums, as for instance, amounts paid to Pereiro, which may arouse suspicion. They might well have been investigated; but they have not, and it would be obviously unfair at this stage for the first time to use them against Lucas without affording him an opportunity of explaining them.

Charge H is the really substantial charge in the case, and but for the hope of recovering the property to which it relates, I very much doubt whether these criminal proceedings would have been launched. It avers that Lucas, on or about the 26th of September 1911 fraudulently with intent to diminish the sum to be divided amongst his creditors, transferred his properties Nos. 40, 41, 41/1, 41/2 and 42, Elliot Road, into the name of his mother-in-law. The terms in which the transfer is described is suggestive of a benamee transaction, more especially when contrasted with terms of the notice.

That a transfer was made the insolvent does not dispute, but he emphatically denies that it was done fraudulently or with the intent charged. The Elliot Road property prior to this transfer belonged to Lucas but he had mortgaged it to the Phoenix Assurance Co., Ld., to secure a present advance of rupees one lac made and further advances to the extent of an additional Rs. 40,000 demandable on the completion of certain buildings.

At the date of the transfer Rs. 10,000 of the rupees one lac had been re-paid, but a further sum of Rs. 10,000 had been advanced so that the equity of redemption was still burdened with the indebtedness of rupees one lac. This equity of redemption the insolvent purported to transfer to his mother-in-law Mrs. Zemin on the 26th September 1911.

A deed was executed and registered and in form the transfer has been effected.

The consideration is expressed to be a sum of Rs. 50,000 and Mrs. Zemin also undertook and has since incurred certain pecuniary obligations.

This sum of Rs. 50,000 is said to be made up of Rs. 30,000 paid at the time and a past debt of Rs. 20,000 which was released.

The first point to be considered is whether the Rs. 30,000 was paid. It no doubt was a large sum for Mrs. Zemin to possess, but it is proved beyond the possibility of doubt that she possessed it. It represented a legacy of £2,000 left to her.

In anticipation of the arrival of this sum from England and its investment in the purchase of this property, Messrs. Morgan and Co. had actually prepared the instrument of transfer which was subsequently executed. Counsel for the prosecution emphatically announced that he made no imputation against this firm of attorneys in this transaction. It is further conclusively proved that Rs. 25,000 of this Rs. 30,000 was paid into Lucas' banking account. But the Official Assignee was not to be defeated by this: he instructed his Counsel to say that this payment of Rs. 25,000 was a blind: that the amount was re paid to Mrs. Zemin.

This is the case that was actually put forward for our acceptance and when I reflect on what has been actually established before us, I am at a loss to understand how the prosecution could have ventured to place such a case before the Court with a view to securing the conviction of the insolvent on this serious criminal charge.

It points to a disregard of materials within the control of the Official Assignee.

The Rs. 25,000 is shown to have been paid into the Mercantile Bank: of that there is no doubt, and even Counsel for the prosecution had to admit it.

Of this amount a sum of Rs. 10,000 is shown to have been paid by cheque to M. C. David, a creditor and one of the Official Assignee's own witnesses in this proceeding. A sum of Rs. 2,500 is shown to have been paid to the Mercantile Bank, yet to the last the Official Assignee persisted through his Counsel that this was not a genuine payment, though he actually had in his possession the hundi which was discharged by it.

Mr. James who represented the insolvent assured us this was so: we directed this and certain other hundis to be produced before us and true enough there was the hundi which proved conclusively that the Rs. 2,500 was a genuine payment.

Another item was Rs. 10,000 drawn in favour of self: this at any rate the prosecution maintained must have been re-paid to Mrs. Zemin. Here again there was not only a complete absence of proof, but the insolvent asserted before us that the amount was drawn to meet certain hundis now in the Official Assignee's possession. We sent for these hundis and they were brought into Court and completely confirmed what the insolvent had said. These payments were traced beyond all doubt by means of the G. C. Book whose genuineness has not been attacked.

By the hundis thus brought before us it was also conclusively proved that the Rs. 5,000 which had not been paid into the Bank had been similarly utilized.

In this matter then not only has the Official Assignee failed to prove the serious charge made by him, but it has been abundantly shown that there was no foundation for that charge. He ought to have known this, for he had in his possession materials which disproved his own case and had he asked the insolvent for an explanation, it would have been forthcoming as readily before him as it was before us. Had these materials been placed before Chitty, J., they could not have failed to influence his opinion on this charge.

And now I will deal with the balance of Rs. 20,000 and in dealing with it, it is difficult—I doubt whether it would be right—to forget how baseless the Official Assignee's persistent imputations have been in regard to the Rs. 30,000.

This sum of Rs. 20,000 is made up of Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 12,000.

It is proved that Mrs. Zamin received a legacy for £ 500 which was paid her by cheque, and this represents the major part of the Rs. 800. It is shown to have passed into Lucas' account.

Lucas declares that this as well as the Rs. 12,000 was paid him by Mrs. Zamin. The instrument of transfer treats Rs. 50,000 as paid, and this is made up of the Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 20,000.

It was prepared under the circumstances I have described, and the receipt was witnessed by Mr. R. M. Chatterjee, then of Messrs. Morgan and Co.

It is admitted that Mr. Chatterjee would not have been a party to any fraud, but it is argued that if there had been an advance of two separate sums and this had been told to the attorneys there must have been a recital to that effect. But I do not agree with this, and for the purpose of these criminal proceedings I see no sufficient reason for not accepting Lucas' statement, more especially in view of the striking manner in which the accuracy of his statements regarding the Rs. 30,000 has been established. And I would here point to the fact that the Official Assignee's report actually treats the Rs. 20,000 as received from Mrs. Zamin.

It is true that Lucas' letters of the 19th January and the 5th February lend some support to the view that he regarded the property as his own. They no doubt create suspicion, but they are susceptible of explanation and I think it is equally pertinent to remark that in the letter of the 13th February he treated himself as a beggar with nothing left.

The narative disclosed by Lucas' letters shows that to the last he was fighting strenuously against failure, and I find it difficult to suppose that if he still had the property as his own, he would not have attempted to raise money on it.

But yet he never did after the 26th September. There is nothing improbable in his attempting to get money at that date; he was in urgent want of it, and when he got the Rs. 30,000, he had to utilize it in meeting his obligations as I have already shown.

At the same time it probably would have imperilled his credit if he had proclaimed abroad his desire to part with this property. This was averted by a sale to Mrs. Zamin.

It was true he only got Rs. 30,000 in cash from her, but still that was a substantial sum.

I do not forget that the lady was his mother-in law, but she parted with hard cash. There was valuable consideration, and if that was adequate to the occasion, the Court will, in ordinary circumstances, be slow to hold there was no good faith.

But if the transfar was in good faith and for valuable consideration, then it would not be liable to avoidance.

This brings me to the adequacy of the consideration.

We have two valuations by Messrs. Mackintosh Burn and Co. a firm of the highest standing. On the 24th of August they reported that the property could be readily sold for Rs. 1,50,000. On the 24th March 1911 they reported that the property could be readily sold and the amount that might be realized on a forced sale after the building of the two additional houses would be Rs. 1,90,000.

At the date of the transfer these two houses had not been built. The property was then subject to a mortgage of one lac, responsibility for which Mrs. Zamin undertook; she paid Rs. 30,000 in cash; she released a debt of Rs. 20,000; on the 2nd May 1912 she paid the Bengal Stone Company Limited Rs. 28,000 on account of payment for works done at 40, Elliot Road: and on the 12th September 1912 she paid Rs. 3,482 9-0 for plumbing and other work. In addition to this she paid Rs. 1,000 in round figures for flooring and incurred a liability to the Bengal Stone Company for Rs. 10,000. Mr. James also contends that she is entitled to claim Rs. 500 for interest. In confirmation of the assertion that she took over the Bengal Stone Company's debt, there is the fact that this company has not submitted a proof in the insolvency.

It is claimed that these several payments and obligations constitute a consideration in excess of Rs. 1, 90,000 and in the circumstances, I am certainly not prepared to hold that the charge in relation to the Elliot Road property is made out.

The last charge is that Lucas, on or about the 15th February 1912 with the purpose of giving undue preference paid to one Mrs. Mangey, alleged to be a creditor, the sum of Rs. 2,380.

The circumstances on which this charge is based are assuredly venial, if any contravention of the Insolvency Law merits that description. In fact, the learned Judge declared that, as an offence, it might possibly, if it stood alone, be leniently dealt with; and Counsel for the prosecution recognized the justice of this remark. I, therefore, need not labour this point. The charge, as drawn, is now admitted to be bad: fraud is of the essence of this offence, but it is not alleged: to constitute the offence the payment must be to a creditor, even that is not stated as a fact. In the circumstances, I think, we ought not to permit an amendment of the charge at this stage and from this it follows that the conviction and sentence cannot stand.

We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence on each charge and find the insolvent not guilty and direct his acquittal.

Though no invariable rule can be laid down, it is ordinarily undesirable to institute criminal proceedings until determination of civil proceedings in which the same issues are involved. It is too well known to need elaboration that criminal proceedings lend themselves to the unscrupulous application of improper pressure with a view to influencing the course of the civil proceedings, and beyond that there is the mischief illustrated by this case of criminal proceedings being instituted with an imperfect appreciation of the facts where they have not been ascertained in the more searching investigation of a Civil Court.

Costs of the insolvent of both the Courts (as of a hearing) will be paid by the Official Assignee out of the estate in his hands. The Official Assignee will retain and pay his own costs (as of a hearing), as between attorney and client, out of the said estate. There will be liberty to apply.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 77 OF 1919.

Musammat AJODHI AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 44, 162, 288—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 202—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32 (2)—Witness not produced in Court of Session, effect of—Statement made in course of gossip, admissibility of—Omission to give information of commission of offence—Statement to Police, manner of proving.

Section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application to the evidence of a witness not produced and examined in a Court of Session. [p. 583, col. 2.]

A statement made by a person in the ordinary course of gossip and not in the ordinary course of business is not a statement to which the provisions of section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act would apply. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is the duty of a person who witnesses the commission of an offence to give information thereof to the nearest Magistrate or Police Officer, and, if he fails to do so, he renders himself liable to prosecution under section 202 of the Penal Code. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Although section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code forbids the obtaining of signatures to a statement taken down in writing by the Police, there is no prohibition to evidence being given of a statement recorded in writing by the Police, provided it is otherwise relevant, nor can the provisions of the section be evaded by the Police recording as the first information report a statement obtained after the commencement of the investigation. [p. 584, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Saugor, dated the 12th March 1919.

AJODHI v. EMPEROR.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Ajodhi, aged twenty-five, and her deceased husband's younger brother, Pyare, aged twenty-five, both Dangis by caste, have been convicted of the murder of their newly born illegitimate daughter on the 16th October 1918 at Rangir and sentenced to transportation for life by the Sessions Judge, Saugor. They were also found guilty under section 318, Indian Penal Code, of concealing the fact of the birth by secretly disposing of the body, but for this offence no punishment has been awarded as it merged in the greater offence.

The prosecution case is that the child was born alive and was immediately killed and the body buried by Pyare and Ajodhi. The defence on the other hand is that the child was born dead and was buried at once by a midwife called Janki who attended at the confinement, at which Pyare was not present.

The body was found by the Sub-Inspector on the 26th October buried in a shed attached to the house where the appellants lived. It was so far decomposed that the doctor was unable to say that the child was bornalive. The medical opinion is, however, to the effect that the child was practically a full term child.

The only witness examined at the trial of the case to prove that the child was born alive is Musammat Saraswati, P. W. No. 2, the wife of the village Kotwar. She states that she saw Musammat Janki, a midwife, go to the house of Ajodhi and that after she had been there an hour, she heard the cry of a new born infant. The witness followed Janki to her own house and questioned her, who denied that a child had been born. Saraswati, however, never contradicted Janki by telling her that she had heard the cry of an infant. The witness never told anybody in the village about it, not even her own husband, though the fact of the pregnancy was pretty well known. It was only after the arrival of the Police upon the scene that this wife of the village Kotwar, who lives in one of the several neighbouring houses, came out with this story. The fact that she was not able to give the lie to Janki somewhat weakens the value of her testimony.

Musummat Janki died before the inquiry before the Magistrate, but a statement made and signed by her in the course of the Police investigation was taken down by witness Jamna Prashad, P. W. No. 4, in the presence of the Sub Inspector. This is Exhibit P 1. This statement has been copied by the Police and treated as the first information. Janki had also made a statement to her paramour Daolat, who was examined as P. W. No. 5 before the Committing Magistrate to depose to that statement. The defence admitted that Daolat has since disappeared and has become untraceable.

The questions which I have now to decide are whether the three statements of witnesses not examined in the Sessions Court are admissible and have been properly proved.

It may be as well to dismiss the suggestion of the Standing Counsel that Daolat's statement before the Committing Magistrate could be treated as evidence under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code. That section has no application to the evidence of a witness not produced and examined in the Court of Session.

Under section 33 of the Evidence Act the evidence of Daolat before the Committing Magistrate is relevant for proving the truth of the facts which it states, the witness being untraceable. The accused had the right and opportunity to cross-examine him, though in point of fact he was not cross-examined. As the portion of the record containing the deposition of Daolat purporting to be signed by the Committing Magistrate was produced before the Court of Session, the statement has been sufficiently proved under section 80 of the Evidence Act.

Section 33, however, contemplates that the evidence given before the Committing Magistrate was itself relevant evidence. We have, therefore, to see whether so much of the deposition as relates to declarations made by the deceased Janki to the witness is relevant or not.

Janki's statement to her paramour is to the following effect: a female child was born but accused Pyare pressed the child's throat and killed her; a sum of money

Rs. 4 in cash, and some grain had been given to Janki, who was enjoined by accused Pyare to keep the matter secret.

The statement recorded in Exhibit P-1 is practically to the same effect. It only contains more details.

The lower Court thought that these statements were admissible under section 32, clause 2, as statements made in the ordinary course of business by a midwife. There is, however, nothing but a fancied resemblance between the case and Illustration (b) to section 32 and the leading case of Higham v. Ridgway (1). The only point of similarity is that there is an accoucheur here as in the other two cases.

A statement made by a midwife to a paramour is in the ordinary course of gossip, not in the ordinary course of her business as a midwife. It is not shown or suggested that it is the usual routine practice of a midwife or the particular midwife to report births to the Police. In fact, no report was made and none of the statements was elicited till after the body was found. Section 32, clause 2, has, therefore, no application.

I think, however, this statement is relevant under section 32, clause 3, as the statement, if true, would have exposed Janki to a criminal prosecution. According to that statement she witnessed a murder. Under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code it was her duty to give information forthwith to the nearest Magistrate or Police Officer of such murder. For ten days she had made no report. She was, therefore, guilty of an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code, for intentionally omitting to give information which she was legally bound to give.

Daolat's deposition relating to the declaration made by Janki is, therefore, relevant.

Section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation shall, if taken down in writing, be signed by the person making it, nor shall such writing be used as evidence. The only exception is in favour of dying declarations under section 32, clause 1, of the Evidence Act. Therefore, the written record made by the Police cannot be used as evidence. But that section does not prevent evidence being given of a statement, recorded in writing, provided it is otherwise relevant. The operation of the section, however, cannot be evaded by the Police choosing to record as the first information a statement obtained after the investigation has commenced: King-Emperor v. Bhut Nath Ghose (2).

The statement recorded by Jamna Prashad was made in the presence of the Police in the course of the investigation and equally comes within section 162.

But if the writing is not to be used as evidence, there is nothing to prevent the witnesses who have heard the statement deposing to the facts contained in the writing, after refreshing their memory under section 159 of the Evidence Act. Jamna Prashad, instead of being asked merely to prove the execution of the document by the deceased Janki, should have been made to give oral evidence of the statement after refreshing his memory by looking at Exhibit P-1. Similarly the Sub-Inspector, who made a contemporaneous record in the case diary, should have been asked to state what Janki had told them. This is a defect in procedure to which no exception was taken by the learned Counsel for the appellant, and on my pointing this out to him, he asked that the statements in the documents may be regarded as having been duly and legally proved, as he did not wish that his clients should be put to the expense of a further inquiry.

I have held all the statements to be relevant, but it is always best to remember that the most difficult question for decision is the weight to be attached to the evidence. Here we have in the first place the uncross-examined testimony of a woman who, upon her own admission, was not above accepting a small bribe to hush up a murder. Her paramour admits that he received an additional bribe of Rs. 10 (ten). He also happens not to have been cross-examined, as the accused had no Pleader in the Magistrate's Court. I do not think it safe to accept such uncross-examined and tainted evidence as sufficient for the charge of murder. It must be pointed out, in fairness to the learned Sessions Judge, that he has accepted Janki's declaration only to the extent that the child was born alive. He, however, argues that it was upon the accused to explain how the live child came to die, and as they offered no explanation at all they must be held to have caused its death. In this he is wrong. The prosecution must not only prove, either by direct or circumstantial evidence, that the child was born alive but also that the child was murdered. The lower Court relies upon the fact that the appellants denied at the village Panchayat that any child was born and they persisted in this denial before the Police.

In paragraph 17 of his judgment the learned Sessions Judge writes :—

"Further it is clear from the statement of Manzur Hussain (Sub-Inspector) that he found the place of burial of the body by watching Ajodhi and Pyare and noticing that they were constantly looking in one particular direction."

In the next paragraph the learned Sessions Judge writes :—

"This circumstantial evidence is very much against the defence story of the child being born dead. If, as they say, every one knew of the pregnancy, they would certainly have at once made public the fact that the child was born dead and not raised all this suspicion against themselves if there was nothing to conceal."

So far as I know, this sort of evidence has not hitherto been regarded by any Jury as proof of murder.

The conduct of the accused is not, however, inconsistent with their innocence on the charge of murder, if there has been in fact a secret disposal of the body to avoid giving greater publicity to a scandal. The fact that a midwife was called in—and it is not shown that she was of a disreputable character—tends to show that no murder was intended when the midwife was invited. The prosecution theory that there would have been no murder of an illegitimate male child appears to me to be farfetched.

Even if Saraswati's evidence is accepted and the facts mentioned in the lower Court's judgment are taken into consideration, I am bound to say that the prosecution has failed to make out the charge of murder.

The burial inside the shed is undoubtedly a secret disposal of the body with intent to conceal the birth. This was also the view of the Assessors. An offence under section 318 has undoubtedly been committed, and I have now to see whether either of the appellants is guilty under that section. Janki's statement is not merely relevant as to the murder but also as to the disposal of the body. These two facts are connected together as part of the same transaction and upon the principle laid down in Higham v. Ridgway (1), the whole of the statement so connected together is relevant, though, by not reporting the secret disposal, Janki did not render herself liable to a prosecution under section 202, Indian Penal Code. Daolat is silent as to the disposal of the body. Janki's statement shows that the mother left the cattle shed after the delivery and before the disposal of the body. There may be a suspicion that the act was done with her connivance, but it is difficult to hold upon Janki's evidence that there was any abetment or conspiracy between the male and the female appellant. I, therefore, agree with the Assessors and acquit Musammat Ajodhi of the charge under section 318.

The male appellant pleaded that he was at Sirki on the day. His own witness Fadali, D. W. No. 2, proves that the accused had not been in Sirki for a long time before his arrest. Janki's statement that the man came to fetch the midwife is corroborated by Daolat. This is entirely in accordance with probabilities. It is very unlikely that the midwife, a woman of a different caste, would agree to or would be asked to bury the child. The mother was incapable of the necessary physical exertion. Janki's evidence that the appellant Pyare buried the body may, therefore, be safely accepted as true. Agreeing with the Sessions Judge and the Assessors, I uphold the conviction of Pyare under section 318.

The result is that Musammat Ajodhi is acquitted of both charges and I direct her immediate release. Pyare is acquitted of the charge of murder, but his conviction under section 318 is maintained and he is sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment with effect from the date of the lower Court's order.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Ghee Adulteration Act (I B. C. of 1917), s. 2 (2)—Calcutta Municipal Act (III B C. of 1899), s. 495 A (1)—Standard of genuineness—Statutory provision, absence of—"Commercial Ghee," adulteration of.

As the Bengal Ghee Adulteration Act does not lay down a standard raising a presumption that Ghee alleged to be adulterated is not genuine, and no standard having been fixed for the purpose by any board of experts similar to the Butter Commission in England, Courts of law have to decide questions of adulteration upon such evidence as is available in each individual case. As there is no statutory provision, every case must depend upon its own evidence. [p. 587, col. 1.]

Where a certain sample of "Commercial Ghee" or buffalo Ghee was found to contain some foreign fat substituted in part for genuine Ghee:

Held, that the Ghee was adulterated within the meaning of section 2, sub-clause (2), of the Bengal Ghee Adulteration Act. [p. 590, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal against the decision of the Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 16th April 1919.

Babus Monmotha Nath Mookherjee and Bankim Chandra Mookherjee, for the Accused.

The Hon'ble The Advocate-General, Mr. Carnell and Babu Satindra Nath Mookherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In these cases tried together as one case the accused are charged with having adulterated Ghee. The proceedings have unfortunately been very protracted. There were originally three cases ending in conviction, which came up to this Court. The Criminal Bench differed in their opinion and there was a reference to a third Judge which resulted in a remand. Their judgments are reported as Grande Venkata Ratnan v. Corporation of Calcutta (1). The re-trial extended over 7 months. Five experts were examined and a large number of text books and scientific journals was used. At the re-trial both the accused have been convicted in respect of two samples of Gouranga Brand Ghee which were taken by the Corporation on the 31st October 1917, and sentenced under section 495-A, sub-section (1), to pay fines. In respect of the sample taken on the 27th November 1917 which formed the subject-matter of the third case, the learned Magistrate held that "the Corporation analysis of the sample was not as complete as it might have been." He was "not prepared to arrive at a finding of undoubted adulteration so far as that sample was concerned and although such analysis as had been made aroused suspicion." He gave the accused the benefit of his doubt.

The accused are sellers of Ghee, not manufacturers, and the charge is that they sold or stored adulterated Ghee. Adulteration is defined in section 2 of Bengal Act I of 1917. The definition is fairly comprehensive and the present case is said to be covered by sub-clause (2) of section 2, as some foreign fat is said to have been substituted in part for genuine Ghee. The Act provides "that a report signed by an analyst certified by the Chairman to be employed by the Corporation for the purpose of analysing Ghee shall be sufficient evidence of the result of such analysis." It is unfortunate that the Statute does not lay down a standard raising a presumption that the Ghee is not genuine. In England a committee was appointed to enquire and report as to what regulations might with advantage be made under section 4 of the sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, for determining what deficiency, if any, of the normal constituents of butter or what addition of extraneous matter other than water should raise a presumption, until the contrary was proved, that the butter was not genuine; but no such steps have been taken by the Government in this country and the question of adelteration has become an extremely difficult one in consequence. The English Butter Regulations Commitee took a large body of evidence and examined a large number of eminent analytical experts and tabulated the results of some thousands of determinations, the results of actual experiments, and arrived at a figure representing an analytical standard which they reported should be taken as a guide, that is to say, that if any sample fell below that figure, a presumption was to be raised that the butter was not genuine. They examined the results of experiments with butter of different countries. They took into account various factors such as climatic conditions, period of lactation, nature and amount of food, breed and idiosyncracy of the cow. This variation in composition, they stated, had a corresponding influence upon such of the physial characteristics of butter as are used by analysts to supplement their chemical tests. The work was of an extremely difficult and technical nature and was carried on by a board of experts and a standard was fixed by them. Unfortunately nothing of that kind has been undertaken in India, and Courts of Law are called upon to decide questions of adulteration upon such evidence as is available in each individual case and arrive at findings on the basis of experiments which cannot for a moment be compared with the experiments dealt with by the Butter Commission. It is unfortunate that the burden of carrying on necessary experiments was thrown upon the Calcutta Corporation with its limited resources. We, however, find that the chemical experts of the Corporation have done their work with great care and remarkable ability. It was urged upon us by the prosecution that we should accept the Corporation standard and if we were not able to do so, then we should fix a standard ourselves. No doubt we must determine whether or not the Municipal standard ought to be acted upon in this case, but we must decline to fix a standard ourselves if we cannot accept it. If we did so, it would be absolutely of no value. It would not be binding upon any other Bench of this Court. As there is no statutory presumption, every case must depend upon its own evidence. We are strongly of opinion that a statutory standard should be laid down raising a presumption, and cases of this kind should not be made to depend upon the evidence forthcoming in each case testing the value of the Corporation standard. If we had to deal with butter derived from cow's milk, the English standard would be of great value, but "Ghee" is not butter. Admittedly changes take place when butter is clarified and the temperature at which Ghee is prepared is not a negligible factor. Ghee is not defined in the Act; a further difficulty is that Ghee is produced from various kinds of milk, but the Calcutta Corporation standard is practically based upon Ghee made from buffalo milk. That particular kind alone has been treated as "Commercial Ghee", in this case a term not used in the Act, and the Magistrate has dealt with the samples as such Ghee. The Ghee most prized is that made from cow's milk which yeilds different analytical results. Other kinds of butter perhaps give different results but we have no data before us about them. A mixture of cow's milk and buffalo milk gives varying results, but Ghee produced from such mixture cannot be treated as adulterated as it is derived exclusively from milk. This adds to the difficulty of judicial determination.

In the experiments carried on by the Corporation, climatic conditions, the nature of food, period of lactation, breed, stabling and local conditions have not been considered, nor has the temperature of manufacture been taken into account, and the resulting variation noted. It appears that sudden alterations of temperature, exposure to wet and cold winds, affect the volatile acids which are a characteristic constituent of butter fat as distinguished from other fats. All these factors were carefully considered by the Butter Regulations Committee of England and they determined that what is known as the Reichert, Wollny method, hereafter referred to as the R. W. method, supplied a safe test. Butter fat has not a constant composition. The variations are sufficiently wide rendering the establishment of a presumption of adulteration, on the basis of a deficiency in the normal proportion of some one or other of its constituents, very difficult. The R. W. test determines the amount of volatile acids which butter may contain. According to the committee that test fulfils the conditions of a quantitative method which can be made the basis of judicial proceedings. They fixed a limit, although the results of the experiments largely varied. In so doing they were mindful of two considerations, namely, that it was sufficiently low not to press harshly upon too large a proportion of genuine if abnormal butters, and on the other hand that it was sufficiently high to take away the inducement for adulteration. These points have to be kept in view.

The samples of Ghee, the subject matter of the charges in this case, were bought by the Corporation from the place of business of the accused in Calcutta on the 31st October 1917. One was said to have come from Sagore, Exhibit 1, and the other came from tins marked Gouranga Brand from Guntur (Madras), Exhibit 2. A third sample Exhibit 3 was bought on the 27th November 1917 from tins marked Gouranga Brand, Guntur. The place of production is a matter for consideration. In this case the analyst was not told the place of origin. When the Ghee was purchased, no mention was made what kind was wanted, cow or buffalo Ghee, and the Ghee purchased has been treated as "Commercial Ghee," namely, buffalo Ghee, which according to the evidence is mainly sold in Calcutta. It is also a cheaper Ghee than Ghee produced from cow's milk. That also supports the supposition that what was sold was buffalo Ghee.

The Corporation have from their experiments arrived at a certain standard for pure Ghee. Four tests have been applied by them to test its purity: (1) The Reichert-Wollny process, (2) the Butyro-Refractive index, (3) Saponification, (4) Wellman's test. Butter fat and Ghee are characterised by the presence of certain volatile fatty acids, principally two, which are known as Butyric and Caproic acids. The proportion of these volatile acids is by general consent of chemists by far the most important criterion in butter analysis and it is known as the R. W. number. The process consists in liberating the fatty acids and preparing a distillate, a definite quantity of which is neutralised by titration with a decinormal alkali solution. The amount of the decinormal solution required to neutralise that quantity of the distillate is called the R. W. number. The figures arrived at in the Corporation Laboratory for buffalo Ghee range from 30 to 42 in the case of individual animals and 29 to 32 in the case of samples from herds of cattle. The latter is considered more reliable as eliminating the idyosyncracy of individual animals. The Corporation has adopted 30 as the standard raising a presumption of adulteration so far as buffalo Ghee is concerned. In the same way they have laid down 25 as the minimum R. W. figure for cow Ghee. The R. W. figure adopted in England by the commission for butter derived from cow's milk is 24. More than nine-tenths of the samples before the English Committee yielded figures between 24 and 32, and by far the greater amount of these were between the limits of 26 and 31. Samples yielded results as high as 35 and as low as 18·4; but having regard to their infrequency and special conditions the Committee after a general review of the whole matter arrived at 24 as a safe standard. We are called upon to accept 30 as a safe standard for Calcutta Commercial Ghee. Whether we can do so or not we shall examine later.

The Butyro-Refractive index process, hereafter referred as the B. R. process, is a sorting process testing the density of the Ghee. The Corporation standard is 40 to 42. If the refraction is found to exceed 42 adulteration is suspected. B. R. Index is said to be the same for both cow and buffalo Ghee. By this process whether the adulteration is vegetable or animal cannot be ascertained and it is not claimed that it is anything more than a rough test.

The Saponification test consists in finding out the number of milligrammes of caustic potash required to saponify one gramme of fat. The average figure for buffalo Ghee according to the Corporation is 229 and for cow Ghee 227. It is said that if the figure goes down it indicates adulteration.

Wellman's test is a colour test for detecting the presence of vegitable oil, but it fails in the case of cocoanut oil. The Ghee is melted and dissolved in a little chloroform and a re-agent is applied. The presence of oil other than cocoannt oil is indicated if a green colour appears at the top, which turns blue on the addition of ammonia.

The Corporation standard is, therefore, as follows:—

	R. W.	B. R.	Sap.	Wel.
Pure buffalo Ghee ..	30	40—42	229	Negative.
Pure cow Ghee ...	25	40—42	227	Negative.

According to their experiments,

	R.W.	B. R.	Sap. Wel.
Ex. 1 (yielded) ...	26 6	44	222 Positive (Showed colour)
Ex. 2 ...	24·9	45	220 (Ditto)
Ex. 3 ...	27·1	44	222 Negative (No colouration).

The learned Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the following figures ought to be adopted in testing adulteration.

R. W. 28, B. R. 40—42, Sap. Buf. (220), Cow (227). In this connection it may be mentioned that certain chemists and analysts of Calcutta held a conference in 1917 at the instance of the Corporation. At that conference the R. W. figure agreed upon was 28 for "Commercial Ghee." Two of the expert defence witnesses were members of that conference.

In England the R. W. figure alone has been adopted as a test for adulteration, but we cannot accept the figure arrived at by the Corporation as by itself raising a presumption of adulteration, having regard to the limited number of experiments and because sufficient allowance does not appear to us to have been made for the varying conditions above referred to. Dr. Ghose, the Corporation expert, says that on the R. W. figure alone he would not give any opinion. He would on "all the others," referring to the three other tests. He says if he found a sample give the R. W. figure "as below 30, between 24 and 30, and near 24, while the other tests, satisfactory," he would regard it as pure cow Ghee and pass it as genuine.

It appears from the evidence that the consigment of Ghee from which samples were bought by the Corporation came from Madras. The accused have produced their books and railway documents have also been produced corroborating their statement. There is no evidence to the contrary. The Corporation has not carried out any experiments in Madras Ghee. There is evidence, though not of much value, that in Madras cow's milk and buffalo milk are mixed together and milk from goats and sheep is also mixed, in the preparation of Ghee.

The evidence is that "if buffalo and cow Ghee are mixed, the R. W. figure adopted by the Corporation for buffalo Ghee is lowered, the limits of such variation being between 25 and 30. The R. W. figure of Exhibit 1 is within those two limits. Exhibit 2 gives 24·9 which is just below the cow standard by ·1, which is a very small difference. It is admitted that the R. W. process is a highly technical process and that if the details of analysis are not minutely carried out, the results may be vitiated and that various errors may creep in. But even taking that the analysis was scrupulously and very carefully carried out, beyond raising a suspicion of adulteration nothing more can be said from the figures found by the Corporation.

It is then urged that the other figures not only confirm the suspicion, but lead to certainty. Let us examine this contention. It is said by Dr. Ghose that the same causes that influence the R. W. figure also influence the figures under the other two tests, i. e., the B. R. index and the Saponification number, and that the variations in one test shew a corresponding variation in the other two. Mr. Briggs, one of the expert witness for the defence, admits that the three tests are consistent, i. e, they vary consistently with each other. Mr. Thomas, another expert witness for the defence, says that if all the four tests (including the Wellman test) agree, they would be sufficient to pronounce upon the genuineness of the sample, although they would not give absolute certainty in every instance. Mr. Hayward, another expert witness for the defence, however, says that he would not in all cases consider the four tests as sufficient, though he might in some. He admits that generelly speaking they would indicate the presence of foreign fat and the nature of that fat may be determined by the melting point and Wellman's tests, but that they may break down in special circumstances. It depends, he says, on the extent of the variation from the standard, but if the results are all very kindred, he says, they would be sufficient. On the evidence and also from the text books and scientific journals placed before us, we have no hesitation in holding that the B. R. and Saponification tests afford valuable corroboration, that the same causes which influence the R. W. figure, influence them and that they vary consistently.

In this case, the R. W. figures are below the Corporation standard, the Saponification value is also below that standard and the B. R. is above in each.

The Corporation standard for B. R. is 40—42, for Saponification, buffalo 229, cow 227.

The conference accepted the same B. R. figure as the Corporation, and the Saponification figure for buffalo accepted by them was 225 to 233, the Corporation figure being the average between 225 and 235; but the samples Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 2 yielded B. R. 44 and 45 and Saponification 222 and 220 respectively.

From the evidence we take the Corporation standards for B. R. and Saponification to be fair. Mr. Briggs admits that they are fair. The B. R. figures for cow and buffalo are the same and a mixture of the two would not make any difference. The Saponification figures in this case are much lower and a mixture of the two kinds of Ghee would not account for it. It is an inconsistent variation. Taking these figures into account, even the defence experts say that the samples in this case are suspicious, though they do not in words admit that a positive deduction of adulteration can be arrived at from them.

In addition to the above, Wellman's test in this case yielded a positive result, showing that there was oil in the samples. The text books show that oil sometimes passes through the food taken by the animals, and it was strenuously urged before us that the presence of oil in the samples may have been due to the feeding. Whether it had or had not so passed could be ascertained by what is known as the phytosteral acetate test, which has not been undertaken by the Corporation. That undoubtedly can be urged, but the result of Wellman's test cannot be altogether ignored by us although the last mentioned test was not employed. The samples of Bengal and United Provinces Ghee examined by the Corporation have given negative results by Wellman's test. No doubt Madras Ghee has not been examined as such by the Corporation, but we have the following evidence about the food. Girish Chandra Mukherjee, a partner of the accused, who is the only witness on the point says :—

"As to food I have seen in the United Provinces cotton seeds, barley, wheat bran being given. There are no paddy districts there, only 'Jowari,' 'Kooli' or dry barley plants are given. In Bengal straw, rapes eed are given. Cattle in Bengal do not get the same food as in Madras. In Madras you have rice, husked rice dust."

This does not show that any specially oily food is given to cow or buffalo in Madras. A large quantity of oil cakes as food may cause some oil to pass into the milk according to the evidence, but there is no evidence that in Madras they are more largely used for cattle food than in Bengal or the United Provinces. Taking all these tests together, we think that it has been established that the samples are adulterated.

We uphold the able judgment of the trial Court, although we are not able to confirm the standard for Commercial Ghee which he has accepted. The Ghee in this case, even if it be considered as a mixed product of buffalo and cow Ghee, has, in our opinion, been adulterated by foreign fat.

The conviction and sentence are upheld.

The appeal is in respect of the two cases based upon Exhibits 1 and 2. They were tried together and are covered by one judgment. Separate fines have been inflicted on each charge. As the total amount exceeded Rs. 200 the appeal was filed. No objection has been taken to that on behalf of the Crown. Applications for revision were filed by way of greater caution, should it be contended that the appeal was not maintainable. The appeal is dismissed and the applications rejected.

In conclusion we think we ought to add that we have received very great assistance from Counsel on both sides in this case and that special mention should be made of the ability and fairness with which the learned Vakil for the defence has conducted his case.

Appeal dismissed;
Applications rejected.

SUNDAR SINGH—PETITIONER

versus

PHUMAN SINGH – RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (6) (7)—Sanction given by Munsif—Appeal, forum of —Munsif's Court, whether subordinate to that of Senior Subordinate Judge.

A Munsif granted sanction for the prosecution of one S. for an offence under section 210, Indian Penal Code. On appeal the Senior Subordinate Judge maintained the order. S. filed an application for revision in the High Court:

Held, that as appeals from the order or decree of a Munsif ordinarily lie to the District Court and only in special cases to the Senior Subordinate Judge, the Munsif is subordinate to the District Court within the meaning of section 195 (6), Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 592, col. 1.]

(2) that consequently the Senior Subordinate Judge had no power to hear the appeal [p. 592, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Ludhiana, dated the 22nd January 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Ludhiana, dated the 11th December 1919, granting sanction for the prosecution of the decree-holder petitioner under section 210, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney for Mr. Kunwar Narain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jaigopal Sethi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Munsif, 1st Class, Ludhiana, under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, granted sanction for the prosecution of Sundar Singh for an offence under section 210, Indian Penal Code. From this order an appeal was preferred in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, who maintained the order of the Munsif. Sundar Singh has now filed an application for revision in this Court, and it is contended on his behalf that the Senior Subordinate Judge had no power to hear an appeal from the order of the Munsif, granting sanction. Section 195 (6), Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate, and sub section (7) lays down that for the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie. Now, under section 39 of the Punjab Courts Act, 1918, an appeal from the decree or order of a Munsif shall lie to the District Judge, except as otherwise provided in any enactment for the time being in force. Under section 39 (4) of the Act the Chief Court may, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, by notification in the Local Official Gazette direct that appeals lying to the District Court under sub-section (2) from all or any of the decrees or orders passed in an original suit by any Munsif shall be preferred to such Subordinate Judge as may be mentioned in the notification. Now, under this sub section the Senior Subordinate Judge of Ludhiana hears all appeals from the decrees or orders passed in original suits by any Munsif in small cause cases which do not exceed Rs. 500 in value. In the present case the alleged offence was committed in execution proceedings in a case which was a small cause one not exceeding Rs. 500 in value and an appeal in that case would, therefore, have lain to the Senior Subordinate Judge. It is, however, contended that appeals from the decrees or orders of a Munsif ordinarily lie to the District Judge and it is only in exceptional cases, such as provided for in section 39 (4), Punjab Courts Act, that appeals lie to the Senior Subordinate Judge. It is, therefore, urged that for the purposes of section 195, sub sections (6) and (7), of the Criminal Procedure Code it is only the District Judge who could hear an appeal from an order giving or refusing to give sanction under section 195. Counsel for the petitioner has referred me to Ram Charan Chandra v. Tirupulla Sheikh (1), Ramkrishnapuri v. Mohanlal (2) and In re Anant Ram Chandra Lotlikar (3). The first two of these rulings cannot be considered to be on all fours with the present case, because the law as to the Court to which appeals lie is not the same in the Punjab as that in Bengal. The Bombay ruling, however, appears to me to be in point. There it was held that though the decree was appealable to the High Court, still as appeals from the Court of the Subordinate Judge ordinarily lay to the District Court, the former was subordinate to the latter Court within the meaning of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. Similarly in the present case as appeals from the order or decree of a Munsif ordinarily lie to the District Court and only in special cases to the Senior Subordinate Judge, I hold that the Munsif is subordinate to the District Court within the meaning of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

I, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, direct that the appeal from the order of the Munsif granting sanction be heard and decided by the District Judge.

Order set aside.

RAGHU SINGH—ACCUSED—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 423—Appellate Court, power of, to alter conviction.

Where a person is tried and convicted of a particular offence, it is illegal for a Court of Appeal to alter the conviction to one for an altogether different offence.

Application against the order of the Sessions Judge, Gaya, affirming the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, Aurangabad.

Mr. Nageshwar Prasad, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was convicted in the Court of first instance under section 457, Indian Penal Code, for having committed lurking house trespass by night in order to commit theft, and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months.

In appeal the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that there was undoubtedly a trespass, but that it was not proved that the object of the trespass was to commit theft. He thought that there was another object, namely, to annoy or insult the women in the house in which the trespass was committed. He altered the conviction from one under section 457 to one under section 456 and sentenced the petitioner to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

It seems to me that the petitioner has really not been tried for an offense of which he has now been convicted. The case of Mahomed Hossein v. Emperor (1) is in point. I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioner.

The question still remains whether he should be re tried. In my view it is unnecessary to order a re trial, having regard to the fact that he has already been in jail for 15 days. I, therefore, do not direct a re-trial.

Rule made absolute.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ellore, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1918.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and C. V. Rajagopala Chariar, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble The Advocate-General, Messrs. P. Somasundram and N. Rama Rau, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main reliefs asked for in these cases are declarations that the adoption of 2nd defendant by 1st defendant is not valid and that the proceedings in Appeal Suit No. 72 of 1911 and No. 51 of 1912 are not binding on plaintiffs. The lower Court refused the latter and, therefore, did not deal with the claim to the former on its merits.

The facts are that plaintiffs were in 1912 minors, the eldest being about sixteen, and their father Kanakacharyalu was the nearest reversioner to the estate of 1st defendant's deceased husband. First defendant in 1910 set up the adoption of the 2nd defendant and Kanakacharyalu sued in Original Suit No. 72 of 1911 to have it declared invalid In 1912, as it was thought that a decree in terms of the award would not bind plaintiffs or 3rd defendant, their adult elder brother, because they were not parties to Original Suit No. 72, there was a reference to arbitration; and an application, numbered as Original Suit No. 51 of 1912, was made to the Court to file the award by the 1st defendant, Kanakacharyalu, the present 2nd and 3rd defendants and plaintiffs being made defendants. On the same day, 28th September 1912, Original Suit No. 72 was dismissed on the ground that an adjustment had taken place. In Original Suit No. 51 a decree was passed on 30th September 1912, Exhibit F, filing the award and giving effect to its terms. Those are the proceedings, which the plaintiffs desire to displace. As regards Original Suit No. 72 they were not parties and it is admitted, when they become reversioners, they will not be bound by the acts of the previous reversioner, Kanakacharyalu. Plaintiffs, therefore, are clearly entitled to a declaration as regards those proceedings. But it is not disputed that they must displace the decree in Original Suit No. 51 and the award on which it was based before they can obtain a decision as to the validity of the adoption on its merits. The grounds of attack on these proceedings are that the 3rd defendant, who represented them in Original Suit No. 51, was fraudulent or negligent in his conduct of the case and had no right to support the filing of an award, which was disadvantageous to them or at least had not been passed in any arbitration at which they were represented or indeed in any real arbitration proceedings at all.

Before the direct evidence is referred to, the result of the award must be stated. But for it under Hindu Law Kanakacharyalu or after his death whoever might be the reversioners at the time, and they would be (so far as appears) the plaintiffs and 3rd defendant, would be entitled on 1st defendant's death to the estate of her late husband and so far as appears, they could be deprived of the succession only by an adoption on her part, to be made with the consent of her deceased husband, the existence of which Kanakacharyalu and his family did not admit and could have disputed, or their own consent, which they could have refused. The award, Exhibit K 1, upheld the adoption conditionally on the carrying out of its other terms, gave 1st defendant an absolute estate in about 20 acres, debarred Kanakacharyalu and 2nd defendant from disputing an alienation already made by the widow and 2nd defendant from disputing the claims of Kanakacharyalu's family as reversioners in the future to the property of one Ramavataram and gave Kanakacharyalu half of the remainder of the estate of 1st defendant's husband. The result was no doubt to give Kanakacharyalu immediate possession of something, which he could have got only on 1st defendant's death after successfully attacking the adoption. But, on the other hand, if he had so attacked it, he could eventually have obtained also, not only the half of the residue allotted to 2nd defendant, but also the 20 acres given absolutely to 1st defendant which composed the more valuable portion of the estate, as well as the possibility of regaining the property alienated by her already. And as regards plaintiffs, there were the further considerations that although Kanakacharyalu might leave them what he obtained, there was no guarantee that he would do so or would not spend it, since it was self-acquired property in his hands, and that, as he was, it will be seen, failing at the time (he in fact died early the next year), there was no reason for depriving them of the option in the matter, which, on becoming reversioners, they would soon be entitled to exercise and regarding which 1st plaintiff at least was already old enough to form an intelligent opinion. True, we at present do not know whether the case against adoption or 1st defendant's previous alienation, available to Kanakacharyalu or to them, was strong. But there is no reason in the terms given by 1st and 2nd defendants for supposing that it would be negligible, or for supposing that there was any reason for hurrying the disposal of the matter and depriving them of rights, which in the ordinary course would accrue so shortly. There was further a faint suggestion in argument, although 1st and 2nd defendants have not been explicit on the point, that the decree in Original Suit No. 51 contains nothing distinctly debarring plaintiffs from claiming in the future since it debars Kanakacharyalu under whom they would not claim and, therefore, they will not be prejudiced by it. The answer is that it includes a declaration of the validity of the adoption, to which they are parties and by which they are bound, and that, if the decree is binding on them, they will, in consequence of it, be debarred indirectly from setting up their rights. In these circumstances the conclusion must be that 3rd defendant is not shown to have acted prudently in consenting to the decree on their behalf. It will be found that he also was guilty of gross negligence or fraud, and that will be enough to enable plaintiffs to succeed. Hoghton, In re, Hoghton v. Fiddey (1) and Lala Sheo Churn Lal v. Ramnandan Dobey (2).

[Their Lordships here discussed the evidence.]

This completes the case on the facts. It may, no doubt, be argued that an award is not open to objection on the sole ground that it merely reproduces an agreement come to between the parties. See the judgment of Strachey, Chief Justice, in Gobardhan Das v. Jai Kishen Das (3). But that can be accepted, only when the consent of the parties can be and is regarded by the arbitrators as evidence that the settlement proposed is fair to all, and it can have no application against the plaintiffs before us, who were not represented in the arbitration and whose interests were not considered, although it was almost admittedly in order to bind them that the pretence of an arbitration was made. When they were formally represented by 3rd defendant in Civil Suit No. 51, whether or not the manner in which he hurried through the proceedings is more than consistent with the imputation of fraud, there is no doubt that by accepting what he and all concerned, except the Court, knew to have been merely a pretence as the basis of the decree, he failed grossly and fraudulently in his duty to protect their interests and that is sufficient to justify us in declaring that the decree is not binding on them.

(3) 22 A. 224; A. W. N. (1900) 52; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1180.

Apart, however, from the facts we are asked to grant relief on another ground, that, as the Judicial Committee held in Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (4), the right of a Hindu reversioner becoming concrete only on the death of the female owner and till then merely a spes successionis "his guardian, if he happens to be a minor, cannot bargain with it on his behalf or bind him with any contractual engagement in respect thereto," and a guardian's action in referring to arbitration a matter connected with his ward's reversionary interest was held null and void. This is perfectly consistent with Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (5) relied on by 1st and 2nd defendants, because there, as the judgment explicitly states, not only an agreement by the reversioner, but an estoppel constituted by his acceptance of benefits thereunder which could not arise against a minor, was in question. A further attempt was made to distinguish the present case on the ground that in it the minor reversioners were made parties not only to a bargain as to their own succession, but also as to the adoption of 2nd defendant. But this cannot affect the principle involved. For the bargain on the plaintiffs' side was no less one made with their reversionary right; because their opponents relied on its extinction in consequence of an alleged adoption and not in another way or, as in Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (4), on a contention that it never arose. Plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to succeed also on the ground that, whether or no 3rd defendant's conduct of the previous proceedings on their behalf was negligent or fraudulent, neither he nor any other guardian could have conducted them to a substantial result, since they were fundamentally incompetent.

The result is that we allow the appeal and setting aside the lower Court's decision hold that plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration asked for, that they are not bound by the decision in Original Suits Nos. 72 and 51 and remand the suit for disposal on the merits with reference to the issues Nos. 7, 9, and 11. With regard to the observations made by the lower Court on issue No. 7 it is pointed out that plaintiffs' claim as regards the previous decrees was not to have them set aside, but to have them declared void and inoperative against them. We notice, moreover, that no issue already framed touches plaintiffs' prayer with reference to the alienations to 3rd defendant, an omission which the lower Court will be at liberty, if the plaintiffs so desire, to repair. Defendants will be liable jointly for plaintiffs' costs to date in this and the lower Court, whatever the ultimate result.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Hissar, dated the 22nd December 1916.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A goldsmith named Basanta died leaving two widows, Musammat Bhuri and Musammat Daya Kaur, the latter of whom was a minor. Proceedings were taken under the Guardians and Wards Act for the appointment of a guardian to look after the share inherited by Musammat Daya Kaur in her husband's estate. These proceedings were still pending when the plaintiff, Basheshar Lal, instituted a suit as a reversioner of the deceased Basanta, claiming to be entitled to possession of Musammat Bhuri's share in the property on the ground that she had forfeited her rights in her husband's estate owing to her unchastity. Musammat Daya Kaur died while Basheshar Lal's case was still pending, and thereupon Basheshar Lal amended his plaint claiming possession from Musammat Bhuri of the entire estate, real and personal, left by Basanta.

Musammat Bhuri contested the suit on various grounds, one of them being that the plaintiff had waived his claim to succeed to the property left by Basanta. This matter was put in issue as Issue No. 3. The other issues arising out of the pleadings were not disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge, who found against the plaintiff on the third issue and dismissed his suit. He has thereupon come up to this Court through Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit and we have heard Mr. Nand Lal for the respondents.

In support of the plea of waiver Musammat Bhuri put forward a document Exhibit D 2, which she said was an agreement entered into by the plaintiff at the instance of a Panchayat by which he gave up all his rights in Basanta's property, real and personal, on the condition that she, Musammat Bhuri, paid a sum of Rs. 1,000 to the gowshala. Objection was taken to the admission of this document on the ground that it required registration and had not been registered. Musammat Bhuri put forward this document in Court in the course of her statement and, without deciding whether it was admissible or not, the learned Subordinate Judge questioned Basheshar Lal as to whether he had executed it and recorded a note that the execution had been admitted (page 23 of the printed book). At the conclusion of the case the learned Subordinate Judge held that this document required registration and, therefore, was inadmissible in evidence. He, however, held that apart from this document there was oral evidence on the record which proved that the plaintiff had agreed to relinquish his claim to Basanta's property and that having regard to the fact that plaintiff had admitted execution of the agreement, he saw no reason to discredit the oral evidence. We have read the document and after giving due weight to Mr. Nand Lal's arguments, we hold that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was correct and that this document is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. The oral evidence consists of the statements of Bhana (page 34) and Ladhu (page 36 of the printed book). We have been taken through the statements of these witnesses by Counsel on both sides and are unable to say that their evidence can be regarded, by itself, as sufficient to prove the alleged agreement. It was contended by Mr. Nand Lal that inasmuch as the plaintiff had admitted the execution of this document, the question of registration was of no importance, and we were referred to Satyesh Chunder Sircar v. Dhunpal Singh (1) and Chedambaram Chetty v. Karunalayavalangapuly (2). In those cases, however, it was not only the execution of the documents, concerned that was established but their contents had been admitted. Mr. Nand Lal then contended that oral evidence was admissible to prove the contents of the document, inasmuch as the evidence showed that the agreement had been arrived at orally and quite apart from the document in question.

(1) 24 C. 20; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 678.
(2) 3 M. H. C. R 342.

We are, however, unable to accept this contention. Almost every transaction, which is reduced to writing, is preceded by an oral agreement and we think that in this case section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act renders inadmissible the oral evidence referred to.

Again Mr. Nand Lal contended that as the bulk of the property left by the deceased Basanta was moveable, the document was admissible in so far as it related to it, and our attention was drawn to Muhammad Bakhsh v. Amir Bagam (3) and Pusapati Venkatapathiraju Garu v. Vatsavaya Venkata Subhadrayyamma (4). The former ruling has no bearing on the present case and the second does not afford any assistance. The agreement put forward is to the effect that the plaintiff relinquished his claim to the entire property left by Basanta in consideration of Musammat Bhuri paying to the gowshala a sum of Rs. 1,000. We think that it may be presumed that the relinquishment of his claim to the personal estate was not made without taking the real estate into account. This consideration cannot, we think, be apportioned between the real and personal estate. Bevan-Petman v. Ganesh Das (5), referred to by Mr. Nanak Chand, is, therefore, in point and we hold that the document is inadmissible for any purpose whatsoever. The decision of the case being based on inadmissible evidence, must be and is set aside.

We accordingly accept this appeal and remand the case to the Court below for disposal of the remaining issues. The costs in this Court will follow the event. Stamp on appeal will be refunded.

Appeal accepted;

TRIMBAK KHEMCHAND GUJARATHI —RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 104 (2), O. XXI, r. 89, O. XLIII, r. 1 (j)—Execution of decree—Application to set aside sale, dismissal of—Appeal, second, whether lies.

No second appeal lies from an appellate order dismissing an application under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an execution sale. The accident of the auction-purchaser being the decree-holder makes no difference. [p. 597, col. 2; p. 598, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of the High Court (Heaton, J.), in Second Appeal No. 413 of 1918, against the decision of the District Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 10 of 19.7, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Yeola, in Miscellaneous Application No. 58 of 1917.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is urged as a preliminary objection to this appeal that no second appeal lies to this Court. The original application out which this appeal has arisen was made under rule 89 of Order XXI by the judgment debtor. That application was rejected. There was an appeal from that order to the District Court of Nasik and that appeal was dismissed. From the order dismissing the appeal a second appeal was preferred to this Court; and the point now raised is that such a second appeal is not competent. It is clear that the appeal to the District Court was an appeal under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (j), and that under section 104, sub-section 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal can lie from any order passed in appeal under the section. The only ground upon which it is said that the present case falls outside the scope of section 104, sub-section 2, is that the auction-purchaser happens to be the decree-holder and that the order on the application of the judgment debtor is an order relating to the execution of the decree between the parties under section 47. We do not think, however, that the accident of the auction-purchaser being the decree-holder makes any difference in the effect of the provisions of section 104, sub-section 2. Whether the auction-purchaser be the decree-holder or a third person, the result is the same so far as the appealability of the order is concerned.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs on the ground that no second appeal lies to this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Easement—Tenant, whether can obtain prescriptive right against landlord—Easement, extinguishment of, by natural forces—Suit to enforce easement, maintainability of.

A tenant cannot, by mere enjoyment, obtain a prescriptive easement against his landlord, but there is nothing to prevent his having a customary right, or a right by implied contract with his landlord. [p. 598, col. 2; p. 599, col 1.]

A servient owner cannot by his own wrongful act destroy the utility of the servient tenement actively and thus claim to have put an end to the easement. But if by the forces of nature the easement or right ceases to exist, an action for relief based on the easement is not maintainable. [p. 599, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ganjam at Berhampore, in Appeal Suit No. 27 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Chicacole, in Original Suit No. 433 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant.—The appellant had for over the statutory period used the water of the tank of the Zemindar for irrigating his fields. He had acquired a prescriptive right.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma and Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Iyer and L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The appellant could not, by mere enjoyment, claim a prescriptive right to the use of the tank water. If he had acquired any such right by custom or by implied contract with the Zemindar, that had been extinguished under section 47 of the Easements Act as the appellant had not used the water of the tank for purposes of irrigation for more than 20 years. That is the finding of the lower Court. It was not possible for the plaintiff, from natural causes, to use the water. There is nothing to prevent the landlord to regulate the supply of water.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant The question relates to a tank in the Parlakimidi Zemindari. The plaint is rather obscure and if we take prayer (a), paragraph 14, which is, "the Court may be pleased to pass a decree establishing the plaintiff's right to the Dayanidhi tank," it looks as if he claimed title to the ownership itself of the tank. But it seems to have been conceded from the beginning that his only right was a right by contract or custom against his landlord, the Zemindar (1st defendant), to use the water of the tank for irrigating the plaintiff's lands. He cannot, of course, obtain by mere enjoyment a prescriptive easement against his landlord. See Basavanagudi Narayana Kamathy v. Lingappa Shetty (1). But there is nothing to prevent his having a customary right, which may also be called "customary easement," or a right by implied contract with his landlord to use the water of the tank to irrigate some particular lands of his. Calling that right also an "easement", the question is whether that easement existed when this suit was brought. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that, owing to natural causes, it has been impossible to take the water of the tank to the plaintiff's lands for the purposes of irrigation for more than 20 years before suit, assuming that the plaintiff's lands were at some time (before 20 years ago) irrigated by the tank water. Section 44 of the Easements Act says: "An easement is extinguished where the servient heritage is by superior force so permanently altered that the dominant owner can no longer enjoy such easement." "Superior force," as shown by illustrations (a) and (b), includes natural causes. Of course a servient owner cannot, by his own wrongful act, destroy the utility of the servient tenement actively and thus claim to have put an end to the easement. But if, through the forces of nature, the tank has become long ago unfit for use by the plaintiff for the irrigation of his lands, the principle of law embodied in section 44 of the Easements Act clearly applies and the easement or right has ceased to exist long ago and the dismissal of the suit brought for reliefs based on the easement alleged to exist was, therefore, justified.

I would dismiss the second appeal with costs, one set.

SPENCER, J.—In the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, as I understand paragraph 3 of his judgment, the plaintiff failed to establish that, either by contract or custom, he had a right to get his field irrigated by the water of the suit tank. This being so, he had no right of suit against his landlord's act in letting out the bed of the tank for cultivation to 2nd defendant in exercise of the landlord's rights of ownership over tank beds which are not otherwise restricted (vide section 2) of the Madras Estates Land Act).

It is clear that that the plaintiff has no prescriptive right to irrigate his fields from this tank, as the Subordinate Judge has found that they could not have been irrigated from that source at any time within 20 years before suit.

The appellant's Pleader has attemped to put his client's alleged right on the footing of an easement, but this attempt has failed for two reasons, (1) because a tenant could not prescribe for an easement against his landlord [see Basavanagudi Narayana Kamathy v. Lingappa Shetty (1)] and (2) because, if there was such an easement, it must have become extinguished under section 47 of the Easements Act.

I agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs (one set).

ISRI SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Redemption—Benamidar, whether can maintain suit for redemption.

A benamidar can maintain a suit for redemption in his own name, and the beneficial owner is bound by the decision of the suit, whether he is a party to it or not. [p. 602, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Chapra.

Messrs. Siveshwar Dayal and Kailaspati, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. K. Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant seeks to redeem a mortgage over 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 10 dhurs of kasht land, part of a holding of 2 bighas, 5 kathas.

This holding originally belonged to three brothers, Tulsi Prasad, Lakshmi Prasad and Gobindjee. On the 3rd of June 1896 they executed two mortgage-deeds by conditional sale for Rs. 400 each: one in favour of two brothers, Narain Das and Iser Das, defendant No. 2, and the other in favour of Liakat Hussain and Rajab Ali in respect of the remaining moiety of the holding 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 10 dhurs, and the mortgagees came into possession thereof.

On the 1st July 1901 these mortgagees executed a simple sub-mortgage in respect of their rights under the deeds of the 3rd June 1896 in favour of Sahebzada Singh, brother of Isri Singh defendant No. 1, for Rs. 700, BISUDHANAND v. ISRI SINGH.

On the 19th January 1912 Lakshmi Prasad and Gobindjee, after the death of their brother Tulsi Prasad, executed a sale-deed in respect of 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 10 dhurs of their holding, which was in the mortgage of Narain Das and Iser Das by the deed of conditional sale of 1896, for Rs. 500. Rs. 100 was paid in cash to the vendors and the balance Rs. 400 was kept in deposit with the plaintiff vendee for payment to the mortgagees Narain Das and Iser Das. The plaintiff's case was that this money was paid to the mortgagees per registered receipt, dated the 9th February 1912.

On 2nd June 1913 Sahebzada Singh, brother of defendant No. 1, purchased the prior baiulwafa mortgage right of Narain Das and Iser Das defendant No. 2 in the entire 2 bighas, 5 kathas, in execution of his decree passed on simple mortgage of the 1st July 1901. On the strength of this purchase he dispossessed, on the 29th July 1913, the plaintiff from 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 10 dhurs purchased by him. But upon an objection filed by the plaintiff under Order XXI, rule 100, he recovered possession. Sahebzada Singh then brought a regular Suit No. 145 of 1914 for possession over 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 10 dhurs and obtained a decree. In that suit he claimed to have purchased under his simple mortgage decree not only the baiulwafa or mortgage right of Narain Das and Iser Das of 1896 but also the entire kasht right of the original tenants Tulsi Prasad, Lakshmi Prasad and Gobindjee It was, however, held that Sahebzada Singh had purchased only the said prior mortgage right, but that the plaintiff's plea of payment was not proved and, therefore, Sahebzada Singh got possession of the 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 5 dhurs in question as a prior mortgagee under the baiulwafa of 1896.

The term of this baiulwafa or mortgage by conditional sale was from 1303 to 30th Jaith 1323 and, therefore, on the expiry of the term the plaintiff as purchaser of 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 5 dhurs deposited in Court on the 20th May 1916 the mortgage money Rs. 400 for its redemption. Notice of the deposit was served upon Sahebzada Singh, the purchaser of the mortgage right. He declined to take the money and redeem the mortgage. Hence the plaintiff as purchaser of 1 bigha, 2 kathas, 5 dhurs kasht right of the original mortgagors under the sale-deed, dated the 19th January 1912, brought the present suit for redemption and recovery of possession against Isri Singh, the surviving brother of Sahebzada Singh now deceased, who is in possession of the property as purchaser of the baiulwafa or mortgage right by conditional sale of Narain Das and Iser Das. Narain Das is dead. Hence Iser Das, a sole surviving brother, has been made a party as defendant No. 2. The suit is, therefore, against the mortgagee Narain Das and the purchaser of the mortgage right Isri Singh.

Iser Das, the original mortgagee, did not appear in this litigation although summons was served upon him. Defendant No. 1, Isri Singh, as purchaser of the mortgage right, only contested the suit. He pleaded inter alia that the sale-deed, dated the 19th January 1912, propounded by the plaintiff was without consideration and was a collusive transaction; that the plaintiff acquired no right under the sale to redeem or to recover possession of the property: that Lakshmi Prasad and Gobindjee had no right to execute the sale-deed in the plaintiff's favour inasmuch as after the baiulwafa, the mortgage by conditional sale of 1896 sought to be redeemed, the mortgagors sold their kashtkari right in the land in dispute to the mortgagees Narain Das and Iser Das and the said mortgagees became absolute purchasers of the kashtkari rights and that the entire holding, including the land in dispute, was purchased by the defendant in execution of a simple mortgage decree against his mortgagors Narain Das and Iser Das. The following issues were laid down for trial by the Munsif :—

Is the sale deed, dated the 19th January 1912, genuine and for consideration (Issue No. 1.)

Is defendant No. 1 a tenant of the land in suit, or is he only a mortgagee? If the latter, is the plaintiff entitled to possession of the disputed land on redemption of the mortgage debt? (Issue No. 2).

Issues Nos. 3 and 4 relating to mesne profits and other reliefs that the plaintiff might be entitled to need not be referred to for the purposes of this appeal.

The Munsif decided the aforesaid issues in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendant and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the District Judge of Chapra making the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 Iser Das as respondents. The appeal was heard by the Subordinate Judge.

The finding of the Munsif on issue No. 1 that the plaintiff's sale deed, dated the 19th January 1912, is genuine, and on the first part of issue No. 2 that defendant No. 1 was not a tenant of the land but was only a mortgagee thereof by virtue of his purchase of the prior mortgage by conditional sale of 1896, was accepted as correct by defendant No. 1. The contest before the Subordinate Judge was only with respect to the second part of issue No. 2 "Is the plaintiff entitled to possession of the disputed land on redemption of the mortgage-debt?"

The contention of defendant No. 1 was that long before the sale-deed of 1912 Exhibit 3 propounded by the plaintiff, the kashtkari right in the disputed land had been conveyed away by the plaintiff's vendors Lakshmi Prasad, Tulsi Prasad and Gobindjee to the mortgagees Narain Das and Iser Das under the deed of conditional sale by means of a sale deed executed in their favour of 12th February 1902 (Exhibit 1). So the plaintiff acquired no right to the property by virtue of his sale.

The Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have differed in their decision on this point, the former holding that the sale-deed of 1902 (Exhibit 1) was not given effect to and acted upon and the latter holding that it was. It appears that after the execution of the sale-deed, Tulsi Prasad the vendor and Iser Das the vendee applied to the Hathwa Raj, proprietor of 8 annas of the land, for mutation of names on the strength of the sale-deed and the Manager, Hathwa Raj, sanctioned the same and issued a hukumnamah to the Sajawal and the Patwari for entering the purchaser Iser Das's name in the jomabandi and realising rent from him (vide applications Exhibit L-I and M of July and September 1902 and Office Note Exhibit K and hukumnamah Exhibit D). This was done and an account of rent due from Iser Das was prepared (vide Tirij Wasil Bakis and Hisabs Exhibits E-1 to E-4 and J-1 to J-4 for the years 1311, 1313—1316), but no rent ever appears to have been paid.

In rent suits brought by the proprietor of the other 8 annas Misri Bibi against the original tenant Lakshmi Prasad in the years 1905 and 1907, Lakshmi Prasad stated that he had sold the property to Iser Das and Narain Das by the sale-deed of February 1902 and that he was not liable for the rent as the purchasers were in possession (Vide Exhibits G and G 1). Iser Das also filed a petition (Exhibit C-1) to be added as a defendant in the suit of 1907 and in 1904 he had applied for depositing money due under a rent-decree so as to protect the property from being sold in execution (vide Exhibit N-1). Both the Courts below have considered these documents but have come to different conclusions. The Munsif held that these are paper transactions, that the vendor and the vendee were trying to have the sale recognised, but the 8-annas proprietor Musammat Misri Bibi persistently refused to do so and the Hathwa Raj, although it ordered the name of the purchaser Iser Das to be entered, there is no evidence that it ever realised any rent from the purchaser. Not a single rent receipt has been filed nor has any counterfoil been called for from the Raj. On the other hand the Subordinate Judge holds that the aforesaid documents shew that Lakshmi Prasad admitted the sale and Iser Das asserted his right under it and the 8 annas proprietor Hathwa Raj recognised it, and hence the deed was acted upon.

Even if this finding of the learned Subordinate Judge be accepted the difficulty arises as to the effect of the finding upon the suit in question. This leads to the consideration of Exhibits F and F-1. Both the Courts below have relied upon these Exhibits for their respective conclusions. These are two petitions, dated the 22nd November 1913, filed by Lakshmi Prasad in the claim case No. 19 of 1913 under Order XXI, rule 100, brought by the present plaintiff against Sahebzada Singh, brother of defendant No. 1, who after the purchase of the prior mortgage of 1896 at an auction-sale in execution of his simple mortgage-decree had dispossessed the plaintiff. By means of these petitions Lakshmi Prasad produced two sale deeds, dated the 11th February 1902, by himself and his brothers Tulsi Prasad and Gobindjee, one executed in favour of Iser Das and Narain Das in respect of the land in suit 1 bigha, 5 kathas, 10 dhurs and the other executed in favour of Liakat Hussain and Rajab Ali in respect of the remaining 1 bigha, 5 kathas, 10 dhurs. In Exhibit F-1, Lakshmi Prasad stated that as the sale-deed of Iser Das and Narain Das of 1902 (Exhibit 1) with which we are concerned was returned to him by them at their request for the reasons best known to them, he executed on 19th January 1912 another sale deed in their favour in the name of the plaintiff. He made a similar statement in Exhibit F-1 with respect to the sale in favour of Liakat Hussain and Rajab Ali, saying that they got another sale-deed in respect of the lands conveyed to them executed in the name of their own man Mohammed Hussain.

The Munsif argues that there being no explanation why the sale-deed was left in the possession of Lakshmi Prasad and was not in the possession of Iser Das where it naturally ought to have been, the sale-deed in question was not acted upon. The Subordinate Judge apparently accepts the statements contained in the petition as to how the document came to be in possession of the vendor and attributes it to collusion between Lakshmi Prasad the vendor, Iser Das, the vendee under the deed of 1902 and Bisudhanand the plaintiff vendee under the deed of 1912. He also attributes the attitude of neutrality taken by Iser Das in the present litigation to the same collusion. If the statement in petition Exhibit F-1 is correct, Iser Das and Narain Das the vendee under the deed of 1902 are either the real purchasers of the property also under the subsequent sale-deed of 1912 in the name of the plaintiff or they abandoned their rights under the sale-deed and allowed the plaintiff to purchase the property. In either case the suit for redemption cannot fail, for a benamidar is as much competent to bring an action in his own name in respect of the property as the beneficial owner, whether he is a party to it or not. The beneficial owner is bound by the decision in the case in the same way as if he were a party, the decision operating as res judicata. This principle has been well settled, vide the two recent decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) and Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (2). The present case is stronger, inasmuch as Iser Das the sole surviving vendee under the deed of 1902 was made a party to this and the previous litigation concerning this property. He does not repudiate the sale in favour of the plaintiff nor does he set up his own right under the previous deed, the reason being as given by the Court below that he was himself the author of the sale-deed in plaintiff's favour. Collusion or no collusion, he is estopped from disputing the validity and the bona fides of the plaintiff's sale deed. The defendant, who is simply a mortgagee, cannot set up jus tertia that is the right of Iser Das, when the latter himself abandons it. The petition, Exhibit F, is a document relied upon and used as evidence by the defendant himself and he has proved it to be the statements of Lakshmi Prasad. He is bound by those statements. Even if the statements in Exhibit F-1 be of doubtful character or their admissibility be in any way questionable, the astounding fact remains that the deed of 1902 was in the possession of the vendor since the execution of the subsequent sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff. The Courts below have held it to be so. The oral evidence has conclusively established it: vide the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 1.

Another important fact is that on 1st July 1901 they had to take loan from defendant No. 1, pledging their prior mortgage right under the deed of 1896. They were not in a position to pay part of the consideration money of the sale deed of 1902, said to have been paid in cash. They could not also discharge the sub-mortgage of defendant No. 1, who was compelled to enforce it by a suit and to purchase the prior mortgage in execution of his decree on 2nd June 1913. The finding of the Munsif that not a single farthing out of

Rs. 500, the consideration of the sale-deed of 1902, was paid and that no passing of consideration at all took place is borne out by facts and circumstances in the case. This finding of fact has not been upset by the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal. He has not addressed himself to it, as perhaps it was not disputed before him. In fact there is no evidence on record about payment of consideration. None of the defendants' witnesses speaks about it.

There was no question of possession under the sale-deed of 1902, for the vendees under it were in possession of the property under a prior mortgage by conditional sale, so the question of possession is immaterial in this case. No doubt one of the vendors Tulsi Prasad and one of the vendees Iser Das have been trying from 1902 to 1909, as is obvious from the defendants' Exhibits C to N. to have the sale-deed recognized. In that sense only the finding of the Court below that the sale-deed of 1902 was acted upon can be appreciated.

It is noticeable that the hukumnamah, Exhibit D, dated the 8th April 1905, upon which the recognition by the Hathwa Raj of the sale-deed of 1902 is based, mentions the name of Iser Das only, and not that of his joint vendee Narain Das in respect of 3 kathas, 12 dhurs, whereas the sale deed Exhibit 1 covers 1 bigha, 5 kathas, 10 dhurs and the share of the Hathwa Raj is about 11 kathas. There is, as held by the learned Munsif, no evidence of payment of rent. Neither defendant No. 2 nor the Patwari of the Hathwa Raj defendants' witness No. 3 speaks about it. Be that as it may, there is absence of any evidence of the deed being acted upon after the year 1909. This bears out the fact already noticed that the vendees were unable to pay the mortgage of defendant No. 1's brother Sahebzada Singh, that their prior mortgage right was in danger of being sold and hence they returned the sale-deed of 1902 to the vendors and joined in the execution of the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff. This points to the fact that the plaintiff is the real purchaser.

Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiff's sale deed of 1910 is for consideration; in fact the payment of Rs. 100 to the vendors has been established and found as a fact. He has deposited Rs. 400 in Court. The deed expressly gives him right to redeem. The effect of the possession of the sale deed of 1902 with the vendors and the legal position of the plaintiff and that of Iser Das, defendant No. 2 in the case, have been misconceived by the Court below. I, therefore, disagree with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgage of defendat No. 1 of 3rd June 1896. The decree of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and that of the Munsif restored.

There is yet another fatal difficulty in the decree made by the learned Subordinate Judge. It appears from the affidavit filed in this Court on behalf of the plaintiff appellant that Iser Das, defendant No. 2, died on the 1st January 1918 and on the 8th August 1918 his widow Musammat Kawli alias Bahisi was substituted by an order of this Court. There was no counter-affidavit and this fact was not disputed. The appeal in the Court below was decided on the 1st June 1918, long after the death of defendant No. 2. Isri Singh, who was the appellant in the Court below, came to know of the death at least when the substitution was made in this Court on the 8th August. Inspite of that he did not apply in the Court below to substitute the legal representatives of the deceased and to re-hear the appeal against the heirs and legal representatives of defendant No. 2 respondent in the Court below, or take steps to have the abatement set aside within the time allowed by law, nor did he make any application to this Court for sending back the case to the Court below to re-hear the appeal after proper substitution, as was done in the case of Abhoya Charan Ghosh v. Raj Kumar Ghosh (3). More than six months have elapsed since the death of Iser Das who was respondent No. 2 in the Court below and the appeal against him in that Court, therefore, abated. Upon the pleadings in this case and also because he was a mortgagee under the deed of

(3) 42 Ind. Cas. 506.

3rd June 1896 sought to be redeemed and was set up by the appellant as a purchaser under the deed of 1902, he was a necessary party to the suit and also to the appeal in the Court below under Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which every person interested in a mortgage property is a necessary party. There is no doubt that the appeal in the Court below abated not only against the deceased defendant No. 2 under Order XXII, rule 4 (3), but also against the plaintiff who was respondent No. 1 in the Court below.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is set aside and that of the Munsif is restored with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c)—Place of suing—Sale of goods—Payment to be made where goods purchased—Cause of action, accrual of, place of.

The cause of action in a suit to recover the price of goods sold arises where the purchaser stipulates to make payment. Thus, where a person at N. sells goods to a firm at P., it being agreed that payment is to be made at N, the cause of action for recovery of the price of the goods accrues at N. and the Court at N. has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. [p. 606, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 27 of 1917 (Original Suit No. 90 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Iyengar, for the Appellant.—The Sub-Court at Negapatam had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The payment, according to the agreement between the parties, was not to be made at Negapatam. The defendant was to send Hundials to plaintiff's address and plaintiff was to cash them.

See Oomber v. Leyland (1). The action has also been misconceived. The suit should have been framed as one for accounts.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and V. Rajagopala Iyer, for the Respondent.—The suit is properly framed. The defendant has not sought to account for the goods that he received. The plaintiff could only have asked for what was due to him.

The Negapatam Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Oomber v. Leyland (1) is not against this position. The method of payment had been contracted for by the parties. Plaintiff was to receive the Hundials at Negapatam. If they were dishonoured, defendant could not have escaped liability. The fact that the defendant had no branch or agency in Negapatam or the Madras Presidency does not affect the question. The substance of the contract is that the payments were to be made in Negapatam. Defendant must be deemed to have undertaken to account for the proceeds of the consignments by making payments through the agency of the persons on whom the bills were to be drawn. Comber v. Leyland (1) in effect decided that if all obligations had to be performed outside the jurisdiction of the Court where the suit was instituted that Court had no jurisdiction. Here the defendant did not hold the money for conversion into a particular form.

signments of rice to the defendant for sale on commission. He now sues for recovering the price of the last two consignments, amounting to 200 bags of rice. The only question that requires decision on appeal is whether the Negapatam Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The contention of the appellant is that the defendant was not to make payment to the plaintiff at Negpatam but all that he was under obligation to do was to send Hundials from Penang to the address of the plaintiff and the plaintiff was to receive money due on those Hundials.

The main basis of his defence rests on the decision of the House of Lords in Comber v. Leyland (1). There the question was whether the English Court could issue writs out of jurisdiction under Order XI, rule 1 (e), with respect to a breach of contract on the part of the respondent who carried on business at Perumbuco and to whom the plaintiff (appellant) had sent goods for sale there and who was to keep the sale proceeds, apart from other moneys, to convert that money into first class bank bills on England and to remit such bills to the plaintiff in England. Lord Herschell, who may be taken to have delivered the leading judgment in the case, proceeded entirely on the special terms of the contract in the case and says: "The only agreement was that he" (the defendant) "was to hold this money for the plaintiffs and then turn it into first class bank bills in favour of the plaintiffs and remit those." Then he observed "I cannot doubt that the word 'remit' there means this and nothing beyond this, that the bank post bills, when obtained in favour of the plaintiffs, should be sent in the ordinary course and the ordinary manner in which such documents are sent by commercial men, namely, by mail, and that as soon as that had been done all obligation and all liability of the defendant ceased. I think it is impossible on these words to maintain that there was an obligation and a liability incumbent upon him until these bank post bills had reached the hands of the plaintiffs in England. Therefore, what he had to do was all to be performed and could all be performed (it is enough to say that it could all be performed) in Pernambuco. There was no obligation resting on him after he had received that money of which he could not discharge himself in Pernambuco." There is no written contract here. But the contract between the parties must be inferred from the evidence, especially from the correspondence that passed between them and the accounts of the plaintiff filed in the case. From that evidence what appears is that the defendant was to send Hundials drawn on some firm in the Madras Presidency: it is not quite clear whether it must be on some one at Negapatam itself, but it is certain that it must be on some one in the Mardas Presidency in payment of the sale proceeds for the plaintiff's goods. By agreement, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to have the payments for the consignments in dispute made in that manner, and there is no reason to doubt that that was the mode of payment contemplated by the parties. It is not the case here, as in the English case, that the defendant, consignee of the plaintiff's goods, was to hold the money for a particular purpose, that is, for conversion into particular bills, and to send those bills alone to the plaintiff. It can hardly be disputed that, in this case, if the Hundis sent by the defendant were dishonoured, the defendant would not be absolved from liability. He would have to pay for the goods, or rather account for the sale proceeds of the goods in some other way. That amounts to this, that the payment was to be made to the plaintiff in Negapatam. It is quite true that the defendant may have had no agent or a branch firm in Negapatam or in the Madras Presidency. But we must conclude upon the facts proved in the case that he undertook to account for the sale proceeds of the goods by making payment through the agency of the persons on whom the bills were to be drawn. The English case above referred to has been considered in a number of cases in India. We may specially refer to the decisions in the Bombay High Court in Motilal v. Surajmal (2) and in Kedarmal v. Surajmal (3). In the former case Mr. Justice Tyabji laid down the rule with reference to a contract of what is called pakki adat, a transaction between a commission agent at Bombay and a commission agent outside Bombay. A question arose, whether in the absence of any express contract payment by the defendant's firm was to be made in Bombay or not. Mr. Justice Tyabji held, without any evidence of special usage, more or less on general principles that, as the debtor is required by law to pay the creditor where the creditor may be, the defendant was liable to make the payment at Bombay and, therefore, the cause of action for non-payment arose there. In Kedarmal v. Surajmal (3) this proposition was confirmed by the learned Judges, though in that case there was evidence of special usage with reference to pakki adat transactions. We may also refer to a case in Llewhellin v. Chunni Lal (4), which seems to bear a close resemblance to the facts of this case. There the payment was to be made by the defendant, who received the goods by approved drafts on Calcutta or Cawnpore payable 30 days after receipt of the goods or by Government Currency Notes. It was held that part of the cause of action arose within the meaning of section 17 of the old Code of Civil Procedure in Cawnpore, that is, payment of the price of the goods was to be made in Cawnpore and, therefore, the Court at Cawnpore had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. There can be no doubt that the correct principle enunciated by the House of Lords in Comber v. Leyland (1) is that if all the acts to be performed by the defendant are to be performed outside the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted, that Court would have no jurisdiction. But it must be a question of evidence in each case or of inference to be drawn from the facts of each case whether any portion of the contract was to be performed within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted. As already mentioned, we have come to the conclusion that the payment was to be made at Negapatam. It was also suggested in the argument of the learned Pleader for the appellant that the proper suit was one for accounts. But the defendant has not in any way sought to account for the goods sent to him by the plaintiff. There is no question but that he received the goods and if he accounted for them in any way, it was open to him to prove it. But he has not taken any such course and it does not look as if he had really any defence to the suit on the merits. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of cross objections is not pressed and is dismissed with costs.

Decree, ex parte—Suit to set aside decree, maintainability of—Decree obtained by perjured evidence.

The mere fact that the claim in a suit in which an ex parte decree was passed was supported by perjured evidence, would not by itself be a ground for setting aside the decree. [p. 607, col. 1.]

The principle underlying this rule is that the whole case was before the Court which decided it on the pleadings and on the evidence, and whether the case was a false one or not, and whether the evidence adduced was perjured evidence or not, the Court must be held to have adjudicated on both these points and once having adjudicated on them it cannot be asked to adjudicate on them again. JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—

In 1913 the defendants in this case brought a Suit No. 244 against the present plaintiff for recovery of possession of certain property. Notice was duly served on the defendant in that suit and he actually appeared, but on a subsequent date, on which the case was fixed for hearing, he did not appear, and the suit was decreed ex parte. He applied to have the ex parte decree set aside, but that application was dismissed, and he has now brought the present suit to have it set aside on the ground that "the claim in the Original Suit No. 214 of 1913 was wholly false, and as the defendant No. 1 intentionally cheated the Court by giving false evidence, the decree in the Original Suit No. 214 of 1913 is fraudulent, illegal and inoperative."

This suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance on the preliminary ground that it was not maintainable, and this decision having been upheld in appeal to the District Judge, the present appeal has been filed by the plaintiff. It has not been decided in the Court of first instance or by the District Judge whether the claim was supported by perjured evidence. But it appears to have been assumed by the learned District Judge that the claim was supported by perjured evidence, and he has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of laches.

It is now contended before us that whether the plaintiff was guilty of laches or not, he having asserted in his plaint that the claim was false and supported by perjured evidence, he was entitled to succeed, if his allegations as to the falseness of the claim and the perjured evidence are found to be correct. We are asked, therefore, to set aside the decision of the District Judge and to remand the suit to allow findings to be come to on these points.

So far as perjured evidence is concerned, it is, I think, settled law that the mere fact that the claim is supported by perjured evidence would not in itself entitle the plaintiff to have the ex parte decree set aside, and I need not do more than refer to the cases reported as Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (1), Kedar Nath Das v. Hemanta Kumari Dasi (2) and Logadapatti Chinnayya v. Kotla Ramanna (3).

It is contended, however, that the matter is different where a false case has been deliberately placed before the Court. There can be no doubt that the Court has jurisdiction in a subsequent suit to set aside a decree which has been obtained by a fraud upon the Court, and it seems clear from Vadala v. Lawes (4) and Abouloff v. Oppenheimer & Co. (5) that if a case which was placed before the Court was a false case, it has such jurisdiction. The question, however, is under what circumstances this jurisdiction should be exercised, and whether it should be exercised in this particular case. The leading case on the question of fraud upon the Court is the Duchess of Kingston's case (6). In that case De Grey, C. J., (at page 762) observes, "fraud is an extrinsic, collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal;" and in dealing with this matter of fraud Lord Cairns, L. J., in Patch v. Ward (7) made the following observation:—

"Now it is necessary to bear in mind what is meant, and what must be meant by fraud, when it is said that you may impeach a decree signed and enrolled on the ground of fraud. The principle on which a decree may be thus impeached is expressed in the case which is generally referred to on this subject, the Duchess of Kingston's case (6), where the Judges, being consulted by the House of Lords, replied to one of the questions, 'Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal.' The fraud there spoken of must clearly, as it seems to me, be actual fraud, such that there is on the part of the person chargeable with it the malus animus, the mala mens putting itself in motion and acting in order to take an undue advantage of some other person for the purpose of actually and knowingly defrauding him."

The question was also very fully considered in Logadapatti Chinayyya v. Kotla Ramanna (3) where Benson and Sundara Ayyar, JJ., in the course of their judgment said:—

"There can be no undue advantage taken of another by a party in putting any matter before the Court to be adjudged by it to be true or false. Both parties are entitled to invoke the judgment of the Court and to convince it of the truth of the evidence adduced by them respectively. It is true that parties ought not to let in false evidence, and that it is highly improper and immoral to do so, but it is the function of the Court to decide whether the evidence is true or false. If the adducing of false evidence can be spoken as a fraud, then the Court, in deciding the case, must be taken to have adjudged whether such fraud has been committed or not, and what it has once adjudged, it cannot be called upon to decide again. The test to be applied is, is the fraud complained of not something that was included in what has been already adjudged by the Court, but extraneous to it? If, for instance, a party be prevented by his opponent from conducting his case properly by tricks or misrepresentation, that would amount to fraud. There may also be fraud upon the Court if, in a proceeding in which a party is entitled to get an order without notice to the other side, he procures it by suppressing facts which the law makes it his duty to disclose to the Court. But where two parties fight at arm's length, it is the duty of each to question the allegations made by the other and to adduce all available evidence regarding the truth or falsehood of it. Neither of them can neglect this duty and afterwards claim to show that the allegation of his opponent was false."

It is true that in this case the learned Judges were dealing with the question of perjured evidence, but the arguments apply equally in my opinion to a false case, where the opposite party has been duly served with notice, and owing to his own laches has not appeared and the suit has been decreed against him ex parte. If notice had not been served or if the defendants were prevented by the plaintiff from appearing, there would be some extrinsic collateral act, but where the notice has been duly served and the plaintiff has owing to his own fault failed to appear and place his case before the Court, there is not such extrinsic collateral act. The whole case is before the Court, which has decided it on the pleadings and on the evidence, and whether the case was a false one or not, and whether the evidence adduced is perjured evidence or not, the Court must be held to have adjudicated on both these points and once having adjudicated, it cannot be asked to adjudicate again. In this view of the law the decision come to by the lower Courts is, in my opinion, correct. This suit is not maintainable and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54—Joint Hindu family—Injunction at instance of one member to restrain others from entering on possession, grant of.

The remedy by injunction should not ordinarily be granted to one member of a Hindu family in possession of certain property against other members of the family who are out of possession. [p. 609, col. 2.]

When a plaintiff is entitled to sole possession of certain property and the defendant who has a right to part enjoyment is likely to enter on the property, such entry cannot be prevented by injunction. The proper remedy for the plaintiff is to sue for partition. [p. 609, col. 2.]

In a prior suit for partition by the plaintiffs as representing one branch of a joint Hindu family against the defendants, who represented another branch, there was a reference to arbitration and a decree was passed in accordance with the award. According to that decree plaintiffs were to remain in possession for 6 years, at the end of which period the defendants could recover their half share either amicably or through Court. As the plaintiffs did not give possession amicably after the six years, defendants attempted to take possession. There were possession proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Code, wherein plaintiffs were asked to establish their right in a Civil Court. Plaintiffs filed the present suit for an injunction restraining defendants from entering on the lands:

Held, that as the parties were restored to the status quo ante after six years from the date of the prior decree and the plaintiffs were not entitled to sole possession, the suit for injunction was not maintainable. [p. 609, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, dated the 23rd April 1919, in Appeal Suit No. 20 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Srivilliputtur, in Original Suit No. 459 of 1917.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a certain members of a Hindu family against others for an injunction. The prior proceedings relied on as enabling the plaintiffs to sustain the suit may be shortly stated. Plaintiffs as representing one branch of the family sued the defendants representing the other branch for partition. There were minors in both the branches. There was a reference to arbitration pending the suit. On the award of the arbitrators, a decree was passed. Vide Exhibit A series. The material portion of the decree, so far as this suit is concerned, gives the plaintiffs possesion of all the family properties for 6 years from July 1914, and directs that at the end of that period the defendants shall be entitled to recover their half share either amicably or through Court. Plaintiffs did not give possession amicably and according to the plaint they are in sole possession even now. Defendants attempted to take possession. There were proceedings under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code. Plaintiffs were asked to establish their right in a Civil Court and hence this suit for an injunction. The District Munsif dismissed it, but the Subordinate Judge remanded the suit for further enquiry and disposal.

We think that on the allegations contained in the plaint the suit is not maintainable. This is not a case in which the plaintiffs claim that they have acquired title by prescription to the entire property. Nor is this a case in which the decree based on the award sustains plaintiffs' possession until evicted by defendants in due course of law. Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar rightly conceded that the defendants, if they chose to sue or to execute the decree, would be entitled to half the mesne profits from the plaintiffs. It follows from this that since 1910, the parties were placed in status quo ante as tenants-in-common. Each branch had a right to its share in the property in suit; and no branch was entitled to sole possession. In this view the plaintiff, not having alleged sole title to the property, was not entitled to seek the protection of the Court by way of injunction. This is a well-recognised rule of law in Damodaran Namboodri v. Govindan Nair (1). Moreover, under section 54 of the Specific Relief Act plaintiff must bring his case under one of the 5 clauses enumerated in the second portion of the section, if he claims the discretionary relief. Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar suggested that the remedy is necessary to avoid multipilicity of suits. But there is no question of multipilicity at present; all that is alleged is that there is a possibility of defendants breaking the law. For such an offence, there is appropriate remedy elsewhere. No cases have been quoted to show that when the plaintiff is entitled to sole possession and the defendant who has a right to part enjoyment is likely to enter upon property, such an entry can be prevented by injunction. Plaintiff can put an end to this position of affairs by suing for partition. That the remedy by an injunction should not ordinarily be granted to a member of a Hindu family has been well recognised in India. Anant Ramrav v. Gopal Balvant (2) enumerates the many exceptional circumstances which would justify the granting of such a relief. The present case is excluded by that enumeration. Illustration (a) to section 54 also suggests in what cases such a relief is available. Construing these provisions of the law, the Judicial Committee in Watson and Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (3) say this: "It appears to their Lordships that, in a case like the present, an injunction is not the proper remedy. In India a large proportion of the lands, including many very large estates, is held in undivided shares, and if one shareholder can restrain another from cultivating a portion of the estate in a proper and husband-like manner, the whole estate may, by means of cross-injunctions, have to remain altogether without cultivation until all the shareholders can agree upon a mode of cultivation to be adopted, or until a partition by metes and bounds can be effected, a work which, in ordinary course, in large estates would probably occupy a period including many seasons. In such a case, in a climate like that of India, land which had been brought into cultivation would probably become waste or jungle, and greatly deteriorated in value. In Bengal the Courts of Justice, in cases where no specific rule exists, are to act according to justice, equity and good conscience, and if, in a case of shareholders holding lands in common, it should be found that one shareholder is in the act of cultivating a portion of the lands which is not being actually used by another, it would scarcely be consistent with the rule above indicated to restrain him from proceeding with his work, or to allow any other shareholder to appropriate to himself the fruits of the other's labour or capital." In Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (4) their Lordships reaffirmed this principle. Applying these principles to the present case we are clear that the plaintiff has not shown that he is entitled to this exceptional remedy.

The order of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and the decree of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the Court below.

Partition, suit for—Res judicata—Previous suit dismissal of, effect of.

The right to sue for partition is a continuing right and incidental to the ownership of joint property. Therefore so long as the propetry remains joint, one of the co-owners has a good cause of action for bringing a fresh suit for partition notwithstanding the dismissal of a previous suit for partition. [p. 611, col. 2; p. 612, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 21st of November 1918.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babus Broolal Chuckerbarty, Barenashibasi Mukherjee and Sarat Chander Dey), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant in this Hon'ble Court. This appeal arises out of a suit for partition of two plots of land. My client instituted a suit as early as 1894 and that suit was dismissed by the 1st Court. On appeal the Hon'ble High Court gave a decree for partition of plot No. 1 only. A third person having interest in the plot No. 2 and he being not made a party to it, the suit with respect to plot No. 2 was dismissed. My client brought a fresh suit in 1903 for partition of land measuring about 16 cottas. This suit was decreed by the 1st Court, but on appeal it was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had only half share in it. The plaintiff's title to the eastern portion of the disputed plot was established, but the whole suit was dismissed on the ground that there had been a previous adjudication on the point. An appeal was preferred in the High Court for the recovery of the western portion. The present suit has been instituted for the establishment of title to the eastern portion of the plot by the plaintiff, who was defendant in the previous suit. The lower Court finds that the property is joint.

My first submission is that the matter is res judicata and is binding on the parties inasmuch as it was held in the previous suit that there could be no partition of the present plot.

The property being joint, the previous decision is binding upon the parties and the lower Court has fallen into an error by entertaining the present suit between the same parties on the same questions. It is clearly against the principle of res judicata.

Sir Rashbehary Ghose (with him Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty, Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, Babus Kali Kinkar Chuckerburtty and Gour Mohan Dutt), for the Respondent.—

I submit that the contention of my learned friend must fail. The right to bring a fresh suit for partition is a continuing right and a fresh cause of action arose at the time of the institution of the present suit. This is the view expressed clearly in the following reported cases :—

Madon Mohon Mondal v. Baikunta Nath Mondul (1), Nasrat Ullah v. Mujib Ullah (2), Bisheshar Das v. Ram Prasad (3), T. C. Mukerji v. Afzal Beg (4), Thakore Becharji Ranaji v. Thakore Fujaji Vaktaji (5).

I submit that in the face of these decisions the argument of my learned friend must fail

Babu Ram Chandra Mojumdar briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I am of opinion that there is no merit in this appeal. The facts appear to be shortly these : In the year 1894 the defendant appellant as plaintiff brought a suit for partition of two plots of land. The suit was wholly dismissd by the first Court, but, on appeal to this Court, there was a decree for partition of plot No. 1 only and the suit for partition in respect of plot No. 2 was dismissed on the ground that a third person had an interest in that plot and the suit could not go on in his absence. It may be mentioned here that plot No. 1 of this suit has nothing to do with the land in respect of which partition is claimed in the present suit. The defendant-appellant again as plaintiff brought a suit in the year 1903 for partition of a plot of land which covered an area of about 16 cottas. In this suit the Court of first instance passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, but on appeal the suit was dismissed on the finding that only 8 cottas out of the 16 cottas were purchased by the plaintiff and that she had no title to the western portion of the 16 cottas plot. Although the plaintiff's title to the eastern portion of the plot in suit was established, the entire suit was dismissed on the ground that so far as this eastern portion was concerned, there had been a previous partition. There was an appeal to the High Court, but that appeal referred to the western portion only with which we are not concerned. The present suit is confined to this eastern plot of 8 cottas. The plaintiff in the present suit was defendant in the two previous suits. The finding of the Court below is that this eastern plot of 8 cottas has been held jointly by the present plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff's share being 12 annas odd gundas and that of the defendant being 3 annas odd gundas. This finding, in my opinion, is not open to any attack and I agree with the learned Judge of the trial Court that this property is joint. The only argument that has been advanced before us against the decree passed in this suit for partition of the eastern plot is that it being held in the previous suit of 1903 that there could be no partition of this plot as it had already been partitioned before, the matter is res judicata. The judgment in that suit has been placed before us, and it is clear that the learned Judge dismissed the whole suit for partition under a misconception. As a matter of fact, the plot with reference to which there was a partition in the first suit was plot No. 1 in that suit, which has nothing to do with the land the subject-matter of the present suit. Even if we were precluded from going behind the findings in the previous suit, I do not think that the contention of the appellant can be given effect to. Whatever may have been the state of facts at the time the second suit was tried, there can be no doubt upon the facts of the present case that as a matter of fact on the date this suit for partition was instituted, the parties were holding the plot of land jointly between them. That being so, I think, it must be held that the plaintiff had a fresh cause of action to bring a suit for partition. In the case of Madon Mohon Mondul v. Baikunta Nath Mondul (1) it was observed by a Division Bench of this Court that the right to sue for partition unlike other suits is a continuing right incidental to the ownership of joint property. So long, therefore, that the property remains joint, it seems to me that notwithstanding the dismissal of the previous suit, the plaintiff had a good cause of action for bringing a fresh suit for partition. This view of the case is also supported by several other decisions cited by Sir Rash Behari Ghose for the respondent. He referred to three cases of the Allahabad High Court reported as Nasrat Ullah v. Mujib Ullah (2), Bisheshar Das v. Ram Prasad (3) and T. C. Mukerji v. Afzal Beg (4). In some respects, there may be a distinction between these cases and the present cases but that distinction, in my opinion, makes no difference regarding the maintainability of the present suit. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs. The respondent is not entitled to any costs incurred by him in the preparation of the paper book.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. As I understand the matter, the suit is based not on rights which existed antecedent to the previous suit but on rights which are still subsisting. It is not the case that the result of the previous suit altered the mode in which the property was enjoyed so that the parties came to hold in severalty what they had previously held in common. On the contrary the possession continued to be a joint possession. Perhaps the cases nearest to the present are those of Thakore Becharji Ranoji v. Thakore Fujaji Vaktaji (5) and Bisheshar Das v. Ram Prasad (3).

I concur in dismissing the appeal.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 340 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the 2nd Additional District Munsif, Madura, in Original Suit No 16 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. N. R. K. Thothachariar and K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Appellants:—Cross objections between co-respondents can be permitted only in so far as the appellant is interested in the subject-matter thereof, or in other words, they must not refer to questions outside the subject-matter under appeal. Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (1) does not conclude the question. Even if it does, it is not in accordance with the scheme of Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code. The words 'the decree' in Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, mean only 'the decree' appealed from or so much of it as is questioned in appeal. The privilege of cross objections is to be allowed only when "the decree" or the portion of it questioned in appeal is also against the respondent on some grounds. What is not under appeal can be questioned by a different appeal and not by cross-objections.

[OLDFIELD, J., referred to "which he could have taken by way of appeal" in clause (i).]

The right to file a cross objection is co-extensive with a right of appeal. But it can be only with reference to matters under appeal "Parties" in clauses 3 and 4 refer only to parties to the appeal. Clause 4 makes the position clear. There is a specific provision in rule 23 for cases of parties not on record in the appeal. Compare also rule 20.

This view has been held in Valliammai Achi v. Nataraja Pillay (2).

Mr. M. S. Ramanuja Aiyangar, for Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondent, said that he relied on Munisamy Mudali v. Abbu Beddy (1) and Rebala Bahu Reddi v. Dodla Rami Reddi (3).

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The only material facts are that plaintiff obtained a decree against 1st defendant and his sons, 3rd and 4th defendants for the amount of a debt incurred by the first mentioned. Third and 4th defendants appealed not making 2nd defendant, 1st defendant's undivided nephew, a party. Plaintiff, however, here 1st respondent, filed a memo. of objection against him and statedly on account of that memo. had made him a party to the appeal in the lower Appellate Court. A decree was given by the lower Appellate Court against him: and he now appeals, the only ground of appeal argued being that, as he was not originally a party to the appeal, no memo. could be filed to his prejudice.

The Full Bench decision in Munisamy Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (1) has placed beyond doubt the right of one respondent to proceed against another by memo. of objection: and the only question, therefore, is whether the one is entitled to have the other made a party in order that he may do so. Appellant argued that he is not, because the only provision in Order XLI relating to appeals, rule 20, for the addition of parties refers to "the appeal" and "the result of the appeal," not also to the memo. of objection, and cannot be utilised for the purpose of the latter. Contra it is argued that "the appeal" is referred to in Order XLI, rule 20, as meaning and including all the proceedings in the Appellate Court, whether those involved in the disposal of the appeal proper or also those involved by the memo. The latter construction commends itself as consistent with the reference to 'the appeal' in rules 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 30, 33, unaccompanied by anything explicitly rendering them applicable to a memorandum of objection or by any other separate provision for the procedure at the hearing of the latter. In these circumstances, the appellant's argument must be rejected. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—In this case the lower Appellate Court allowed the plaintiff, who was originally the sole respondent in the appeal to that Court by defendants Nos. 3 and 4, to file a memo. of cross-objection to the decree of the first Court under Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, against the 2nd defendant who had not been made party to the appeal by appellants, and for the purpose of disposing of that memo. added the 2nd defendant as the 2nd respondent to the appeal, under rule 20, on the application of the plaintiff. That Court, finding the claim of the plaintiff established against the 2nd respondent also, allowed the memo. of cross-objection and varied the decree of the first Court and gave a decree to the plaintiff against him as well.

No objection is raised on the merits to that decree, but it is contended that the procedure adopted is unauthorised by the rules and is ultra vires and that plaintiff's only proper remedy was to appeal against the decree of the 1st Court himself so far as it dismissed his suit against the 2nd defendant. It must be conceded in the appellants' favour that the 2nd defendant was not a necessary party to the appeal so far as the appeal of the appellants was concerned. The appellant's Vakil contends that rule 22 does not permit a respondent in an appeal to file cross-objections against any person who is not made a party to the appeal by the appellant and who, not being a necessary party for the purposes of the appeal, need not have been added by him as a respondent. It is, however, conceded by the learned Vakil that the somewhat narrow view taken of the scope of rule 22 in Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (4), which is followed in Shib Chandra v. Dulcken (5), has not been adopted by our High Court. It has been ruled here by a Full Bench in Munisamy Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (1) that it was open to a respondent under rule 22 to file a memo. of cross-objection against any other respondent, whether the appellant was interested in it or not. The present case no doubt goes one step further as a new respondent had to be added to the appeal to bring the memo. of objections under the rule adopted by the Full Bench and to dispose it of on the merits. The question whether this could be properly done is not free from doubt, but I am inclined to agree with my learned brother that it is not beyond the Court's power to do it. It is true that in the case in Valliammai Achi v. Nataraja Pillay (2), Miller, J., held sitting as a single Judge that it could not be done. But in coming to that conclusion, the learned Judge followed the view of the Calcutta High Court in Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (4) above referred to and as that view has now been dissented from by our High Court, the authority of his ruling is lost. The language of rule 22 is quite wide enough in my view to enable a respondent to take any cross-objection to the decree which he should have taken by way of appeal, as it expressly says. His right is not restricted to filing objection against parties already on record; the rule makes no such restriction. We are not concerned with the question whether the rule is reasonable or not but only with its meaning; after the ruling of the Full Bench any argument that it is unreasonable to allow a person to obtain relief against another by way of memo. of cross-objections because a third person has appealed when he himself has not, cannot be supported.

It seems to me that the present Code is much wider in scope than the repealed Code in 1882 in the matter of allowing the Appellate Court to deal with the whole case. Rule 33 is a clear indication of it. There is no reason, therefore, to restrict the scope of rule 22 by reading words into it allowing cross-objections to be filed only against parties to the appeal. No doubt rule 22, clause (3), shows that notice of memo. of objections should be given to all parties affected by it, but I can see nothing in the clause which requires that they should have been made parties to the appeal by the appellant. If they are not already parties to the appeal record, the Court can and will make them parties to hear their objections to the cross-objections being allowed, as was done in the present case.

It is next argued that under rule 20 such persons cannot be made party respondents when they are not interested in the result of the appeal. It may be pointed out that rule 20 does not exhaust the Appellate Court's power to add parties as Order I, rule 10, read with section 107, Civil Procedure Code, also gives such power. Furthermore, I agree with my learned brother that we should treat the memo. of cross-objections as included in and as a part of the appeal proceedings, and when a person is interested in the results of the appeal, rule 20 will in terms authorise his addition as a party respondent to the appeal record. Unless we treat the memorandum as part of the appeal proceeding there will be a difficulty, as pointed out by my learned brother, in applying several rules in Order XLI to it, which obviously apply to it. In fact the Code does not make separate provision for the disposal of such memoranda except in the special case provided for in rule 22, clause (4). The rules relating to appeals seem to be intended to govern them also so far as possible.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the action of the lower Appellate Court in the present case was within its powers and cannot be set aside as ultra vires.

The second appeal fails and I agree that it should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109 (c), O. XLV, r. 3 – Decree obtained by perjured evidence —Suit to set aside decree, maintainability of—Case, whether fit one for appeal to Privy Council.

The mere fact that an appeal involves questions of law does not bring it within the scope of section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 615, col 2.]

The question whether a suit is maintainable to set aside a decree obtained by perjured evidence is not one of such public importance as to bring a case in which it arises within the scope of section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 616, col. 2.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decision of Coutts and Admi, JJ., dated the 18th July 1919, reported as 56 Ind. Cas. 606.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application by the plaintiff for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decision of this Court dated the 18th July 1919.* The suit was instituted on the 13th June 1916 before the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, claiming that an ex parte decree passed against him in favour of the defendants in the same Court on the 3rd February 1915 was fraudulent, illegal and inoperative and that the defendants should be restrained from executing it. The case made in the plaint was that the plaintiff owing to illness could not attend the hearing of the suit which was decreed against him in his absence and that the defendant No. 1, who was the plaintiff in that suit, intentionally cheated the Court by giving false evidence. His allegations of perjury are based upon the fact that certain admissions were made by the defendant No. 1 in a previous deposition inconsistent with the evidence given by him in the suit. He further alleged that the defendants prevented his witnesses from appearing by threatening them with violence. These allegations are all denied in the written statement. It further appears that after the decree which the plaintiff impugns was passed, he applied to the Court under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code to have it set aside on the ground that he was suffering from dysentery on the last date of hearing, but the application was rejected as the Court considered that no sufficient cause for his failure to appear had been made out. An appeal from that order was preferred but was unsuccessful. It does not appear that he made any complaint in the proceedings under Order IX, rule 13, that his witnesses had been threatened. It also appears that on the date when the ex parte decree complained of was passed an application for adjournment was made on his behalf but was rejected.

The present suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that it was not maintainable. That decision was upheld by the District Judge on appeal. A second appeal was preferred to this Court and the decision of the lower Courts was affirmed. It is from the decision of this Court affirming the judgment of the District Judge that the petitioner now applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The value of the subject-matter of the suit was placed at under Rs. 4,000 for the purposes of Court fees and at Rs. 5,000 the approximate value of the property claimed for the purposes of jurisdiction. The case, therefore, does not fall within section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is urged, however, that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code and that a certificate should be granted under Order XLV, rule 3, on the ground that although it does not comply with the requirements of section 110, it is otherwise a fit case for appeal.

It is well-settled that the mere fact that the appeal involves questions of law does not bring the case within section 109 (c), but it is contended that the case is one of considerable importance as there is some conflict as to the law on the subject and it is desirable that a pronouncement should be made by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. Since the question was discussed in the Duchess of Kingston's case (1) there has no doubt been some divergence of opinion in the Courts both in this country and in England as to whether a suit would lie to set aside a decree on the ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence and whether a decree so obtained was due to some fraud extrinsic and collateral to the matters in dispute, or whether a suit based on such allegations was merely an attempt to reopen questions already adjudicated upon in the original suit. It is not easy to reconcile cases like the Bank of Australasia v. Nias (2) and Flower v. Lloyd (3) with cases such as Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (4) and Vadala v. Lawes (5).

In this country also there has been some difference of opinion as to whether a decree can be set aside on the ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence. In Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (6) it was held that it could not, and this has been followed, though not uniformly, in other cases in the Calcutta High Court. The Madras High Court in Venkatappa Naik v. Subba Naik (7) held that deliberate perjury was a ground upon which a decree could be set aside. This decision, after being doubted in a latter case, was finally overruled in the case of Kadirvelu Nainar v. Kuppusvami Naicker (8) by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. The Allahabad High Court has also taken the same view in Janki Kuar v. Lachmi Narain (9). It appears, therefore, that so far as the Courts of this country are concerned, there is at present little or no divergence of opinion on the subject in the most recent pronouncements of the different High Courts. Moreover, it must not be forgotten that under the Civil Procedure Code every facility is afforded to the parties both under Order IX and by review of judgment to have matters, already adjudicated upon, re-opened where good cause is shown and it is of paramount importance that litigation should have some finality. In the present case the plaintiff failed to convince the Court when he applied under Order IX, rule 13, that his non-appearance at the trial was due to any good cause. He must, therefore, be taken to have been guilty of laches, but for which he would have had every opportunity of appearing at the trial and cross-examining the witnesses whose perjury he now complains of and could have produced the documentary evidence of perjury upon which he relies and upon which his present suit is based. In the circumstances I do not feel justified in holding that the case is one of such public or private importance that we should grant the certificate asked for. I would reject the application with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 147 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 761 of 1916 on the file of the District Court of North Arcot), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Arni, in Original Suit No. 681 of 1915.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 21st of July 1919, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence but his finding at the end of paragraph 9, which is the only finding we can discover in his judgment, is not sufficient for the disposal of this case. Before we can dispose of this second appeal we must ask the Subordinate Judge to return definite findings on the three issues finally framed in the first Court on the evidence on record. Six weeks will be allowed for the submission of findings and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vellore submitted the following FINDINGS.—1. The High Court of Judicature at Madras requires findings on issues Nos. 1 to 3 framed in the suit. Though this appeal was posted for hearing for three separate occasions, no one appeared for either side and the parties also did not put in an appearance.

2. The plaintiff sues for the recovery of possession as an usufructuary mortgagee of the mortgaged property or for the return of the mortgaged amount with damages.

3. For the defence it is said 1st defendant borrowed money from his brother and executed the plaint-mentioned three usufructuary mortgages in the name of Nallathural as 1st defendant's brother intended to keep Nallathural's daughter and are, therefore, invalid, that plaintiff fraudulently obtained an assignment of them and when plaintiff obtained the suit mortgage for Rs. 200 from 1st defendant, as Rs. 25 were due to him under a prior mortgage of 30th September 1913, plaintiff promised to pay him the balance of Rs. 175 but as 1st defendant can only sign his name, the three usufructuary mortgage deeds were fraudulently recited as the consideration for the suit mortgage and the plaintiff know of the benami nature of the three usufructuary mortgage-deeds. The suit bond, Exhibit I, recites that the three said mortgages were assigned to him for Rs. 150 and Rs. 25 were due on a prior mortgage, Exhibit G, and Rs. 25 were paid in cash. Exhibit G, an unregistered mortgage-deed for Rs. 25, was executed on 30th September 1913 after the amendment of the Transfer of Property Act which requires such mortgages to be registered. Exhibit C series are the mortgages of 1911 and 1912 in the name of Nallathural, which were assigned to plaintiff on 21st July 1913 and 1st August 1913. For appellant it is, therefore, contended, the mortgage is valid as regards Exhibit G, but under Exhibit G as it is unregistered there can be no decree against the mortgaged properties, the respondent contends, for Exhibit F though registered is a fraudulent document. But Exhibit F is valid as regards the Rs. 25 under Exhibit G, and plaintiff will be entitled to a decree against the mortgaged property for Rs. 25 if there is a covenant to pay, but as there is no such covenant there will be a decree for Rs. 25.

4. The fact that Exhibit D series stand in her name will not show, as alleged by Nallathural, plaintiff's 1st witness, that she was in possession of the mortgaged lands under Exhibit C series for which she alleges she paid cash. She alleges 1st defendant's brother Chinnaswami did not keep her daughter and she did not offer to give her to him as a concubine and that the mortgages were not executed benami in her name for Chinnaswami. Her daughter has been thrice married and her husbands are alive. Her evidence shows the house she lives in was purchased from the defendants under an unregistered sale-deed and Chinnaswami was living in the house when Exhibit C series were executed. She alleges he only lived there for six months and that she and her daughter have not been outcasted, but she did not attend Mottai Goundan's sister's marriage. She and the other members of the family earned about Rs. 2 per day for 2 or 3 months and she obtained Rs. 10 or 15 a month by selling milk, etc., and she and her husband cultivated land on Varam. She was thus not in a position to advance money for Exhibits A, B and C series,

The plaintiff has not entered the box and spoken to the documents he relies on, which plaintiff's 1st witness says she assigned to plaintiff as defendants prevented her ploughing the lands alleging the mortgages were nominal.

5. Plaintiff's 2nd witness shows Rs. 25 were not paid on the date of the execution of Exhibit F as recited therein, but he alleges it was paid 2 or 3 days after registration. He wrote Exhibit G and says plaintiff's 1st witness had no property, but he hears she used to lend Rs. 50 or 60 and the writer read out Exhibit F, which 1st defendant read again. Plaintiff's 5th witness who wrote Exhibit F says he read it out to 1st defendant, who signed it after knowing its contents and Rs. 25 were paid the next day or the day after it was registered. He also wrote Exhibits E1 to E4 and attested Exhibit B. He alleges plaintiff's 1st witness enjoyed the lands for 2 years about 2 years before he gave his evidence and that 1st defendant does not know to write but can read and that plaintiff's 1st witness and her daughter have not been outcasted. Thus no money was paid for Exhibit F.

6. Plaintiff's 5th witness says the consideration for Exhibits E1 to E4 was paid 4 or 5 days after registration and not as recited therein on the dates of execution. Plaintiff's 3rd witness, an attestor to Exhibits C and C2. alleges plaintiff's 1st witness paid money for them but he does not know how or from where she got the money to advance. He has also attested the assignment bonds in favour of plaintiff but says no money was paid for them in his presence and that 1st defendant cannot read or write and can only sign his name and that defendants' mother obstructed plaintiff's men ploughing the lands, but he does not know if it was before or after the assignment to plaintiff, for whose consideration it was arranged Rs. 50 were to be appropriated for plaintiff's profit, Rs. 50 were to be reserved for the expenses of litigation and the balance was to be paid in the event of his success in the litigation. He shows Chinnaswami was living with plaintiff's 1st witness for 2 or 3 years and was a co-accused with plaintiff's 1st witness and her daughter in a criminal case which plaintiff's 1st witness denied. He shows Chinnaswami was present when plaintiff's 1st witness advanced the amounts on the mortgages and was present throughout. He says some castemen go to plaintiff's 1st witness's house but he does not go there and that plaintiff's 1st witness enjoyed the lands for a year about 2 years before he gave his evidence, and not before or after that and that she enjoyed the lands under a mortgage for a year about 8 years before he gave his evidence.

7. Plaintiff's 4th witness shows Chinnaswami was living with plaintiff's 1st witness and her daughter when Exhibit A was executed. According to him plaintiff's 1st witness enjoyed the lands under the mortgage for 2 years about 4 years before he gave his evidence. Thus plaintiff's 1st witness was not in a position to lend money and the money was Chinnaswami's.

8. The evidence for the defence shows Chinnaswami and his mother were and are in possession, that Rs. 175 were not paid for Exhibit F as undertaken and Exhibit F was not read out to him and that 1st defendant did not know of the arrangement between plaintiff's 1st witness and his brother when he was asked to execute the mortgages in her name but was going to and coming from her and that no money was paid for Exhibit E series, but plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 1 and 3 stated Rs. 50 were to be plaintiff's profit, Rs. 50 were to be reserved for litigation and Rs. 200 were to be subsequently paid if successful in litigation.

9. Chinnaswami as defendant's 1st witness says he paid the money for Exhibit C series to 1st defendant his brother and Exhibit C series were taken in plaintiff's 1st witness's name benami for himself, as she promised to give her daughter to him to be kept as his concubine but her daughter did not come but went away with another. He also says he had no idea of keeping plaintiff's 1st witness's daughter and that plaintiff's 1st witness carried away all the documents when he was away at Madras and that plaintiff's 1st witness cannot advance any money and has been living in his house for over 10 years. I, therefore, hold Rs. 25 and no other consideration passed for the suit bond and that plaintiff is not a bona fide transferee for value of the assigned bonds and the mortgages executed by 1st defendant in favour of plaintiff's assignor were for immoral and illegal purposes to the knowledge of the plaintiff and are not enforceable on that ground.

10. Issue 3 :—The plaintiff was aware of the transactions and was not misled. He is not entitled to any damages and I so find.

This second appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial.

Mr. K. Jagannatha Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The lower Court's finding is not sustainable in law. The debtor has nothing to do with how his creditor deals with the bond executed by the defendant. The fact that the creditor took the bond in the name of his concubine's mother for an immoral purpose, assuming it to be so, does not affect the relation between the debtor and creditor, nor does it make their transaction void. See Tenant v. Elliot (1). If the 1st defendant's brother meant to make a gift of the mortgage deed, it has passed the executory stage and the 1st defendant could not plead that the consideration was immoral.

If it be viewed as a benami transaction, 1st defendant could not resist the claim either as it is open to the benamindar or his assignee to sue on the document. And as the benamidar is supposed to act for the real owner, the relationship between them does not arise in this suit. See Singa Pillai v. Govinda Reddy (2) and Vaitheeswara Aiyar v. Srinivasa Raghava Iyengar (3).

The respondents were not represented.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents do not appear before us to support the findings.

We are unable to accept the finding that the mortgages executed by the 1st defendant, Exhibit C series, in favour of Nallathural are unenforceable on the ground of their consideration having been for immoral and illegal purpose.

The 1st defendant admitted that he was paid cash consideration by his brother for the mortgage-deeds in question and that the mortgages were taken in Nallathural's name at his instance. It may be that his brother did this to further his immoral purpose. But following the view held in the case of Tenant v. Elliot (1) we must hold that the question of immorality and illegality as between Nallathural and the brother cannot be pleaded as a defence by the 1st defendant. If in getting the mortgage-deeds in Nallathural's name the brother intended to make a gift of the mortgage right to her, the transaction had passed beyond the executory stage and no objection that the purpose for which the gift was made was immoral can be pleaded to affect it.

If, on the other hand, the brother took the deeds in the woman's name merely as a benamidar for himself, which seems to be the contention here, Nallathural could have sued as such benamidar and her assignee could also sue. See Singa Pillai v. Govinda Reddy (2) and also Vaitheeswara Aiyar v. Srinivasa Raghava Iyengar (3). If this suit is viewed as one by the assignee of a benamidar, it cannot be treated as in any way involving the enforcement of an immoral contract between Nallathural and the 1st defendant's brother Chinnaswami. A benamidar, recovers money for the use of the real owner who could get it paid over to himself, and no question of the nature of the relation between the benamidar and the real owner arises in such a suit.

In any view, therefore, it was not open to the 1st defendant to raise any objection to Exhibit C series on the ground of immorality. As he himself admitted having received full cash consideration for them, he was bound to repay Rs. 150. Rs. 25 was already found to be due under Exhibit G by the lower Appellate Court.

We must, therefore, hold that Exhibit F is supported by consideration to the extent of Rs. 175. First defendant is now dead but defendants Nos. 2 and 3 his sons are on record. They have raised no question here that even if Exhibit F is binding on the 1st defendant it is not binding on them. We must, therefore, allow the second appeal and give a mortgage decree for Rs. 175 to be realised by sale of the mortgaged property, under section 68, clause (c), Transfer of Property Act, as, though the mortgage was a usufructuary one, possession was not given to the mortgagee. See Marturu Subbamma v. Gadde Narayya (4). Plaintiff does

A suit for possession of property where the plaintiff questions the validity of an adoption is not governed by Article 118 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 628, col. 1.]

(Case-law discussed).

The doctrine of factum valet in Hindu Law only applies to adoptions where matters which do not affect the essence of the adoption have been disregarded. It cannot be applied to validate the adoption of an orphan. [p. 628, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a party has shown it probable that there is a subsequent addition to a document, he cannot be held bound by the addition merely because it is proved or admitted that the rest of the document is genuine. [p. 623, col 2.]

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Sonibai, the daughter of Ramdhan, sues for possession of the property of her deceased father. It is admitted that about 1890 after the death of their father Ramnath, Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint, but the plaintiff alleges that Joharmal and Ramdhan had separated, though she cannot give the date of separation. She further alleges that though the defendant Dhanraj was ostensibly adopted by Joharmal on 25th May 1908, the adoption was invalid as Dhanraj was an orphan at the time. Joharmal died in 1912 and Ramdhan died on 24th June 1914. After Ramdhan's death the defendant Dhanraj claimed his estate and took possession of his property. Proceedings were instituted under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, but on 17th September 1914 the Magistrate passed an order in favour of Dhanraj. The plaintiff claimed all the property belonging to her father Ramdhan, a sum of Rs. 3,275 to the credit of her mother in Ramdhan's shop at Khanapur, certain ornaments which she alleged were her mother's stridhan and certain mesne profits. The relief claimed was valued at over Rs. 50,000.

The plaintiff's claim then is based on alternative grounds: (1) if the defendant's adoption was invalid and Joharmal and Ramdhan were separate, she is heir to Ramdhan, we remark that Ramdhan's wife had died during Ramdhan's lifetime: (2) if Dhanraj's adoption was invalid, but Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint, then on the death of Joharmal Ramdhan became entitled to the whole of the joint property. On Ramdhan's death the plaintiff succeeded as heir to the joint property, and she is, therefore, entitled to that portion of the joint property which she now claims; (3) if Dhanraj has been validly adopted and Joharmal and Ramdhan had separated, the plaintiff is the heir of Ramdhan in preference to Ramdhan's separated nephew by adoption; (4) if Dhanraj's adoption is valid and Joharmal and Ramdhan remained joint, even then the plaintiff is entitled to the separately acquired property of Ramdhan. She alleges that the whole of Ramdhan's property was separately acquired. Alternatively she alleges that she is at least entitled to the money which belonged to her mother and to the stridhan of her mother.

It will be convenient to deal with the first two of these grounds. The learned Additional District Judge remarks in paragraph 10 of his judgment that if the defendant's adoption is found to be invalid, the plaintiff must succeed whether Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint or separate. The defendant appears to have contended that even if the plaintiff could prove that the adoption was invalid, she might still be estopped from asserting her right to her father's property: but we shall deal later with this contention.

The defendant's reply on the point of adoption was as follows:—The formal ceremony in regard to the adoption took place on 25th May 1908 after the death of defendant's natural mother: but during her lifetime the mother had actually given the defendant in adoption to Joharmal. Even if the defendant's mother had only made an agreement to give her son in adoption, she granted an authority to one of her sons to carry out this adoption and the adoption subsequently carried out was valid. Next, Ramdhan not only consented to the adoption of the defendant but took an active part in bringing it about. He attested the deeds made at the time of the adoption. He is, therefore, estopped from questioning the adoption and the plaintiff who claims under him is also estopped.

The learned Additional District Judge has found:—

(a) on issue No. 4 (a) that the defendant was given in adoption during the lifetime of his mother:

(b) on issue No. 4 (b) that the defendant's mother gave her eldest son authority to carry out the adoption, but that unless there was actual adoption during the mother's lifetime this authority would not render the subsequent adoption valid;

(c) on issues Nos. 5 (a), 5 (b), 6 (b) and 7 that Ramdhan's actions in bringing about the adoption and consenting to it and attesting the deed and his conduct subsequent to the adoption now operate as estoppel and prevent the plaintiff from questioning the defendant's adoption.

The plaintiff appeals. On grounds 5 to 9 it is urged that there was no valid adoption.

The first point we have to consider is on whom the burden of proof lies. It is admitted that ceremonies took place on 25th May 1908 and that after that Dhanraj was acknowledged as the adopted son of Joharmal for a period of six years, both by Joharmal and his brother Ramdhan. The respondent's Counsel cites the case of Shrinivas v. Balvant (1) and relies on the reasoning at page 522.* The appellant's Counsel concedes that the burden of proof on the question whether there was a legal adoption in 1908 would have lain upon him, but he contends that once it is admitted that the defendant was an orphan in 1908 and that no legal adoption could then take place, he has discharged the burden. We agree that it is for the defendant to prove that an adoption took place in 1903.

We remark that the case is somewhat different with regard to the allegation that the defendant's mother on her death-bed gave her eldest son authority to carry out the adoption. If such authority was sufficient to render the adoption legal, then in view of the ostensible adoption, the burden of proof might initially lie upon the plaintiff to show that the giving of such authority was extremely improbable.

We proceed to consider the evidence regarding the alleged adoption in 1903. The learned Judge of first instance has relied on (a) the oral evidence of D. W. Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 13; (b) an entry in a document (Exhibit D-62) executed at the time of the adoption; (c) a post card (Exhibit D-21-D. W. No. 1) in which some one is styled Joharmal Dhanraj: and (d) the evidence of Laxman Govind (D. W. No. 25) supported by an entry in an account-book.

The witnesses D. W. Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 13 were not examined in the presence of the Judge who decided the case. Kaluram (D. W. No. 1) is the natural brother of the defendant. Dhanraj (D. W. No. 2) is the defendant himself. In 1903 he was a child of 8 or 10 years, and his evidence appears of little value. Chaturabai (D. W. No. 13) is the adoptive mother of the defendant: it is common ground that the defendant when a boy of 13 or so was received into the family of Joharmal. Chaturabai then has been treating him as a son since he was a boy. We consider it natural that she should bear a strong affection towards one whom she has long considered her adopted son: it follows that there is strong reason to suspect that her evidence is biassed.

Kaluram (D. W. No. 1) has stated that the boy was taken by Ramdhan to Chandur some months after his mother's death and remained at Chandur Bazar since. He gave this evidence on 15th December 1915. On 7th August 1916 Tukaram (P. W. No. 8) gave evidence, strongly supported by entries in the school registers, that the boy was at Thugaon for some years after the adoption. We shall refer later to this evidence, but at present only state that Kaluram appears to have given false evidence on the point. In cross-examination Kaluram first denied that his brother was in the school at Thugaon in 1906, and then admitted that he might have come sometime and attended the school.

Kaluram states: "The boy was placed on the lap of Joharmal by my mother. There were 5 or 7 persons present. There were 2 or 4 Marwari Brahmins, some women and 2 or 4 Musalmans and 2 or 4 Marwaris. Panna Musalman was there. Joharmal's cook was there and he was a cook. The Marwaris there were Maheshri. One Agarwali was called and he did not come. An Oswal Jain Marwari Budda was present and is alive. I knew nobody else there." Bhagwant (D. W. No. 4) was the writer of the deeds executed on 25th May 1908. There seems no reason why he should have been present on the previous occasion in 1903. He says he had gone there because Ramdhan wanted him to write an agreement that day, but Joharmal said no writing was necessary. It is noticeable that Kaluram did not mention that this man, a Krishnapakshi, was present. Kaluram signed the document in 1908 and states he was present when these documents were written: he ought then to remember the writer. Bhagwant (D. W. No. 4) cannot explain why the documents which he wrote in 1908 are inaccurate, although to his personal knowledge there had been an adoption in 1903 and the name of the boy was then changed. His statement that Ramdhan had brought a draft is unsatisfactory. Chaturabai (D. W. No. 13) deposes to a fairly complete ceremony in 1903. She speaks of tilak of red powder, singing of songs, distribution of cocoanuts and jaggery and the giving of rupees and new clothes. This is opposed to the evidence of Kaluram who states that Joharmal said: "The ceremonies according to our customs will be done later". Chaturabai says: "There were 5 or 7 persons seated in the shop at the time of seating on the lap of the boy. There were 5 Musalmans, 2 Oswals, possibly 2 Brahmins and two of my castemen, either Anandilal or Jodhraj." She subsequently mentions names and states that two of the persons present are alive. It is to be noted that she too does not mention Bhagwant (D. W. No. 4).

We consider the oral evidence scanty and unconvincing. Kaluram and Chaturabai are biassed witnesses. They do not mention the presence of Bhagwant (D. W. No. 4), though they mention the names of several other people. The persons they mention are not examined on the point. The defendant as D. W. No. 2 gives a fresh set of names saying that his adoptive mother told him these men were present. They also are not examined on the point, though one Brijlal (D. W. No. 35) has given lengthy evidence.

We now consider the statement in Exhibit D 62. On the day of adoption, 25th May 1908 two deeds were executed. The deed of adoption (Exhibit D 63) was registered. The deed of agreement (Exhibit D-62) is unregistered. The deed of adoption contains no mention of any previous giving or taking or of any authority given by the deceased mother of the defendant Dhanraj. It purports to be in favour of Ganesham and says: "From this day you will be named Dhanraj son of Joharmal Galgoti." It states clearly that Ganesham is adopted this day, obtains the rights from this day and will be named Dhanraj from this day.

The deed of agreement (Exhibit D-62) is, except for a single sentence, to the same effect. The executants give Ganesham in adoption this day. The boy ceases to have any ownership in the property henceforward. His name is Dhanraj from this day. The right of brotherhood has been given up from this day. In the middle of the document appears the sentence "Our mother gave him in adoption just in his childhood." This appears entirely at variance with the rest of the document and also with the registered document executed at the same time. We are asked to infer that this is an interpolation.

The learned Judge of first instance states that from a close inspection of the document he can see nothing to make him suspect that the clause has been interpolated. We have closely inspected the document and do see reason to suspect that this is the case. The sentence runs: "Amche aini lahanpanich dattak dile." The last word "dile" commences a new line. Two lines lower down a fresh sentence is commenced a short distance to the right of the place corresponding to the commencement of other lines. It is, therefore, quite possible that there might have been a blank in the place now occupied by "dile," The line above "dile" does not appear to have been drawn together with the line above the succeeding words in a single stroke. No doubt there are other instances in the document where the line above the letters has not been drawn from left to right in a single stroke, but it is a curious coincidence that the line above "dile" shows the appearance which it would do if "dile" had been subsequently interpolated. Similarly the line above does not appear to have been drawn in a single stroke. The junction is not exactly above the word "amche", but it must be noticed that in at least one instance three lines further down the original line does not extend to the end of the writing. The appellant's Counsel urges that part of the suspected sentence appears cramped as if the scribe was trying to fit it into the upper line. The letters do appear somewhat closer than in the average line, but we do not lay much stress upon this. It is also urged that there is a difference in the fineness of the pen: we are not prepared to say that any difference is apparent.

For the respondent it is urged that neither in Exhibit D-62 nor in D-63 is there any case of a half line with half left vacant on the right. This is the case. But in the two documents there is now only one instance where a space has been left to the left of the line. The sentence above this existing space translated "May this family thrive" could be omitted without detriment to the sense of the document and might also be an interpolation. Whether this is or is not the case, no strong inference can be drawn from the fact that in the two documents no other half line is visible.

The really strong arguments for doubting the authenticity of the sentence are:—(a) that the sentence is contradictory to the sense of the remainder of the document and (b) the difficulty of holding that the documents could have been drafted in the way they are drafted if it was present to the minds of the parties that there had been a previous giving in adoption. Unquestionably all the parties desired that the adoption should be valid, and it would surely have struck them, when they remembered the previous giving and taking, that there might be a doubt whether the subsequent giving and taking the only adoption mentioned in the deed, Exhibit D-62, was valid. These arguments are strengthened by the fact that we consider from a careful study of the document that the sentence may well be interpolated. The learned Additional District Judge alludes to the fact that the plaintiff had the document examined by an expert, but after this examination the expert was not called as a witness. This is not an ordinary case of disputed handwriting. Whether the sentence is interpolated or not, it seems to have been written by the writer of the document (D. W. No. 4). It is very likely that an expert could give no useful evidence in a case of this sort, unless he was allowed to dissolve the ink on the document in water and make a chemical examination. So far as we know even such permission might not have been likely to lead to a useful result. The defendant knew of the examination by the expert. If the expert had formed an opinion unfavourable to the plaintiff, the defendant ought to have examined the expert. No inference can be drawn from the failure of the plaintiff to put the expert in the witness-box, as the reason for this may well have been that the expert was unable to give an opinion useful to either party.

For the respondent it is contended that where a document is proved, the onus lies heavily on the party attempting to show that any part is an interpolation. There is no doubt that the person alleging fraud has to prove it, but fraud from its nature cannot ordinarily be proved by direct evidence. It is obvious that when a party has shown it probable that there is a subsequent addition to a document, he cannot be held bound by the addition merely because it is proved or admitted that the rest of the document is genuine. We consider that the arguments mentioned in the preceding paragraph are sufficient to discharge the onus or proof resulting from the presumption against fraud. The oral evidence regarding the existence of this clause is clearly valueless. We must hold that the clause is an interpolation.

The next piece of evidence we have to consider is the post card (Exhibit D-21 D. W. No. 1). This post card is addressed to Joharmal Ramdhan of Chandur Bazar. This was the usual address of Ramdhan's shop. The card commences "To Joharmal Dhanraj of Chandur Bazar" and is dated 10th April 1907. The defendant urges that the card was intended for Dhanraj son of Joharmal. The substance of the post card is, however, not such as would be written to a boy of 12 years old The writer urges the recipient to leave Chandur and stay in a village if an epidemic is raging at Chandur. Surely the boy would not have been requested to go away, but the guardians would have been asked to take him away. Another sentence is "Please be writing to us for any work that we can do." This sentence should be addressed to a person who has charge of some work, and not to a small boy. The next sentence is "You are a great man and know everything." Surely this could not be written to a small brother of 12, even if that brother had been adopted by a rich man. The card was put in at a late stage. The plaintiff had little opportunity of rebutting an inference to be drawn from the card, and in any case could not be expected to explain the exact circumstance in which a card had been written ten years previously. The defendant has not put in the communication to which the card is a reply. There are great difficulties in considering that this card was addressed to the boy, and though no other explanation has been given, it appears to us that other equally probable explanations may exist. We add that the post marks are not free from suspicion.

The next piece of evidence is contained in the deposition of Laxman Govind (D. W. No. 23) supported by an account book. The entry is: "Received from Joharmal Ramnath Marwari of Chandur Rs. 400 by the hand of Dhanraj," The date is 1903. The witness cannot state whether the Rs. 400 was paid in his presence in 1906. Dhanraj the defendant was about 11 years old. It does not seem likely that he would be sent with Rs. 400. There may well have been another Dhanraj. Ramdhan on whose account the sum was credited is dead. So no inference can be drawn from the plaintiff's failure to explain 10 years later who this Dhanraj was. We consider this piece of evidence of no value.

The respondent's Counsel urges that it is very unlikely that the parties would go through the ceremony of an adoption which was so obviously illegal: but it seems more unlikely that knowing the law they would adopt legally and allow the adoption to be represented as illegal in the deed. A probable explanation of the illegal adoption is that there was reason to believe that no one would contest the adoption. It is to be noted that the present plaintiff claims only the property in Ramdhan's possession and it is probable that she really believed that the brothers were separate,

The plaintiff has given some evidence to rebut the allegation that the defendant Dhanraj was adopted in 1903. Tukaram (P. W. No. 8) was assistant master at the school at Thugaon from 1900 to 1911. He proves the register for 1898 to 1906. Dhannu son of Sheokaran entered the school on 2nd August 1902: vide Exhibit P-1. It is not contested before us that the defendant Dhanraj was known as Dhannu as well as Ganesham in his boyhood. Chaturabai (D. W. No. 13) says he was called Dhannu in the family of his birth. The witness proves that this entry refers to the defendant. Exhibit P-1 shows that Dhannu left school on 1st January 1903, but this is obviously a slip. The document shows that he entered in 1902 and studied for 4 years and 5 months. The document is thus inconsistent in itself. Exhibit P-2 shows that Dhannu was studying at Thugaon in 1906 and left in January 1907. Exhibits P-3 to P-5 show that Dhannu was examined after studying one year 5 months and 10 days, two years 2 months and 10 days, and 3 years six months. It is clear then that Dhannu attended Thugaon School from 1902 till 1906. Kaluram, defendant's natural brother, finally admits that his brother might have attended the school at Thugaon at times. Dhanraj himself as D. W. No. 2 says in examination-in-chief that he lived at Chandur after his mother's death in Sambat 1960. In cross-examination he says: "I cannot say even approximately when I left Thugaon School last. I do not remember whether I had left in 1908 when the adoption took place."

SONIBAI v. DHANRAJ.

The evidence of the school master is important, as it contradicts the case of the defendant set up both in the pleadings and at the time of evidence. No reason is given why the boy should stay at Thugaon after his natural mother's death if he had been adopted in 1903. We lay little stress on the fact that the register shows the name of his natural father, as the entry made in 1902 might be repeated in subsequent years. The learned Judge of first instance says that attendance at Thugaon School would not invalidate the adoption, but the argument is that such attendance was unlikely if the adoption had taken place.

The plaintiff has produced evidence to the effect that other persons, especially Mahadeo of Tumser, desired to adopt Dhanraj shortly before 1908. This evidence does not appear to us convincing. It seems unlikely that Mahadeo and other persons should propose to adopt an orphan : Mahadeo himself has not been called as a witness. But the rejection of this evidence does not affect our decision.

We hold then that the story of an adoption in 1903 has not been proved and we reject the whole of the evidence regarding that adoption.

It is necessary to consider the allegation that defendant's mother on her death-bed gave authority to her eldest son to adopt on her behalf. Dr. Gour on behalf of the respondent cites 2 cases:—Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman (2) and Jamnabai v. Kaychand Nahalchand (3); but these cases merely lay down that a parent prevented from attending the ceremony may delegate to a relative the duty of making the formal presentation to the adoptive mother. The present case is quite different. The proposition that an orphan cannot be adopted has never been controverted. In Mayne's Work on Hindu Law and Usage, 8th Edition, paragraph 132, it is stated : "Nor can the parents delegate their authority to another person, for instance a son, so as to enable him, after their death, to give away his brother in adoption, for the act when done must have parental sanction." We hold, therefore, that the authority so given by the mother would not render this adoption legal. We add that the story of sanction is not supported by reliable evidence.

The next point for consideration is whether the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the legality of the adoption. The learned Judge's finding seems to be based on the finding that the adoption was valid, but if the adoption was valid, the question of estoppel does not arise. The respondent's Counsel relies on Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (4). It is only necessary to cite one sentence from this judgment in order to distinguish the present case :—"Under these circumstances the Rani's argument that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply because the defendant could show no loss or detriment, is without any substance whatever and she must be held to her word and to the results of her conduct." In the present case the defendant's reply, dated 4th January 1915, does not allege any detriment to the defendant. We can find no evidence to this effect. It is not shown that the joint family to which the defendant belonged possessed any property. On the other hand the plaintiff does not seek to disturb the defendant's possession of the property which was in the hands of his adoptive father at the time of Joharmal's death. Again when this suit was instituted less than seven years had elapsed after 1908. It was then open to the defendant who had recently emerged from minority to regain his rights to the property of his natural family. The case cited then has no application.

Again in the present case there was no misrepresentation of fact. We may refer to the case of Gopee Lall v. Musammat Sree Chundraolee Buhoojee (5). In that case the defendants appeared to have recognised Luchmunjee as the adopted son of Damodurjee for a long period. It was argued that they had represented in former suits and in various ways by letters and by their actions that Luchmunjee was the adopted son of Damodurjee, but it appeared to their Lordships that there was no estoppel in the case. Their Lordships say: "There has been no misrepresentation on the part of Luchmunjee or the defendant on any matter of fact." and later: "It comes to no more than this that they have arrived at a conclusion that the adoption which is admitted in fact was valid in law, a conclusion which in their Lordships' judgment is erroneous; but that creates no estoppel whatever between the parties." The same opinion was reached by a Bench of this Court in the case of Govind v. Musammat Chandrabhaga (6). In that case the facts were similar in many respects to the present case. The head-note* runs:— "The belief induced in the person who sets up an estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act must be one in a fact, not in a proposition of law. Hence a Hindu widow's conduct in adopting an orphan and subsequently supporting the adoption, even if regarded as equivalent to a representation that an orphan can be validly adopted, does not give rise to an estoppel."

Ramdhan did not cause the defendant to believe a thing to be true. He also shared in a mistake as to law. The defendant did not act in consequence of his erroneous view of the law. Either of these reasons would be sufficient to prevent Ramdhan or his heir being estopped from questioning the adoption. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is not so estopped.

An argument was put forward with some hesitation that even if Ramdhan and his heir could successfully challenge the adoption, yet Ramdhan's conduct would prevent his heir claiming any of the joint property of which he had led the defendant to expect receipt. It is sufficient to repeat that Ramdhan made no representation on a matter of fact, and did not cause the defendant to act to his own prejudice.

The respondent's Counsel urges that a suit for possession on the ground that the apparent adoption on 15th May 1908 was invalid is governed by Article 118, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908. He relies on Shrinivas v. Balwant (1), which follows the Bombay Full Bench ruling Shrinivas v. Hanmant (7). In the latter Bombay case an attempt is made to distinguish two Privy Council cases, Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8) and Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan (9). The Madras High Court in Velaga Mangamma v. Bandlamudi Veerayya (10) considered that the former Privy Council case settled the question. It is necessary to consider in detail the Privy Council rulings and to decide whether the reasoning in Shrinivas v. Balwant (1) can be accepted.

In the case of Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8) the alleged adoption was made in 1858. The suit was brought in 1899. It was contended for the appellant that the principle laid down in Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy (11), that where a suit to set aside an adoption was barred so also was any suit which in order to succeed must first get rid of the adtion, applies equally to Act XV of 1877, Schedule II, Article 118. Jagadamba's case (11) interpreted Article 129 of Act IX of 1871. The appellant's contention to this effect is recited on page 160 of the report. On page 163 their Lordships remarked that Mr. Cohen argued the case with great ability and admitted that if the Act of 1877 applied, his client was out of Court. It is clear then that Mr. Cohen abandoned this contention.

The subsequent argument before their Lordships was that the Limitation Act of 1877 did not apply because the appellant relied on title acquired before the passing of the Act of 1877 and his rights were, therefore, saved by section 2 of that Act. It is important to notice that the Thakurain Daryao Kunwar, who made the apparent adoption in the appellant's favour in 1858 was Talukdar in her own right. Between 1858 and 1871 then the appellant was an heir and not a reversioner. Their Lordships state:—"Giving full effect to the Jugadamba's case (11) and the other cases which followed it, they do not think that the immunity, such as it is, gained by the lapse of twelve years after the date of an apparent adoption amounts to acquisition of title within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1877. Their Lordships think that the appeal may be disposed of on this short ground, whether the alleged adoption was or was not an apparent adoption to which the ruling in the Jagadamba's case (11) would apply if the Act of 1871 were now in force."

In the subsequent case, Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ul-din Khan (9), the date of the alleged adoption is not stated. It is clear that it was between 1853 and 1887. Their Lordships remarked in this case:—"Although their Lordships consider that the question of an adoption was an immaterial issue, they think it advisable to say that the omission to bring within the period prescribed by Article 118 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid, or never, in fact, took place, is no bar to a suit like this for possession of property. Their Lordships need only refer to Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8). Under the general Muhammadan Law an adoption cannot be made; an adoption, if made in fact by a Muhammadan, could carry with it no right of inheritance."

With all deference to the opinion of the learned Judges who decided the case of Shrinivas v. Balwant (1) we do not think the latter quotation can bear the meaning suggested by them.

Their Lordships' statement that it is advisable to give their opinion on a point immaterial to the case naturally precedes the determination of a disputed question: in view of this statement it was unnecessary for their Lordships to mention that a different view had been taken by the Bombay High Court. It is difficult to believe that their Lordships' reference to "a suit like this for possession of property" could refer only to a suit in which the adoption alleged was not an ordinary adoption but what Scott, C. J., terms an adoption in the popular sense [Shrinivas v. Balwant (1)]. The reference to Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rimeshar Bikhsh Singh (8) appears to leave absolutely no doubt on this point: for whatever were the facts in that case, the ratio decidendi applies to adoptions by Hindu widows, such as were considered in the Jagadamba case (11).

We remark that in Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8) there was not a formal decision regarding the effect of the substitution of Article 118 of Act XV of 1877 for Article 129 of Act IX of 1871. It seems clear from the quotation from the judgment under appeal (pages 157-159) and of Mr. Cohen's argument (page 160) that it was throughout admitted that the plaintiff and his ancestors had known of the adoption more than six years before the institution of the suit, but the original contention was that Article 118 applied to suits for possession. Mr. Cohen, who is complimented on the conduct of the case, abandoned this argument. In the subsequent case, then their Lordships formally declared their opinion that the point of law abandoned by Mr. Cohen was not sustainable.

The Bombay Judges appear to think that their Lordships would have discussed the application of Article 118 to suits for possession had they meant to decide the point: but it is clear that their Lordships did intend to decide a disputed point in connection with Article 118, and their judgment contains no discussion and refers to a case where the meaning of Article 118 was not discussed.

We must with respect entirely dissent from the opinion of Scott, C. J., and Chandavarkar, J., that Mr. Cohen admitted that under the Act of 1877 a suit was still within time: this opinion is controverted by the precis of Mr. Cohen's original argument, and if it were correct, the reference to Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8) in the subsequent case, decided by a Bench including Lord Macnaughten who decided Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8), would be pointless.

The last sentence of the quotation from Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ul- din Khan (9) then cannot mean that Article 118 does not apply, because the adoption alleged is a peculiar kind of adoption. We can see no reason for such an interpretation. Their Lordships, having held that Article 118 does not bar the claim challenging the adoption, might briefly mention that this challenge must succeed: the adoption, made by a Muhammadan, carried no right. In the next paragraph they give another reason for holding that the challenge must succeed.

Another reason for the insertion of the last sentence is impossible. Their Lordships had expressed their approval of the interpretation of Article 118 in Thakur Tirbhuan Buhadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8). But in the case they were deciding the adoption may have been soon after 1853, and if title were acquired by adoption, section 2 of the Act of 1877 would render all interpretation of Article 118 unnecessary. The last sentence, mentioning that no right of inheritance could accrue, shows that section 2 has no application.

For these reasons we hold that the Privy Council has finally decided the question. A suit for possession of property, where the plaintiff questions the validity of the adoption, was not governed by Article 118 of Act XV of 1877. Article 118 of Act IX of 1908 is identical with that article. The present suit is within time.

Our decision follows a decision of this Court in Dorao v. Musammat Sakhu Bai (12). It is in consonance with the decisions of three High Courts. We cite Jogannath Prasad Gupta v. Runjit Singh (13), Nathu Singh v. Gulab Singh (14), Chandania v. Salig Ram (15) and Velaga Mangamma v. Banalamudi Veeroyya (10). We have in the course of this judgment carefully considered the reasons given by the Bombay High Court for distinguishing the Privy Council decisions and must respectfuly dissent from them.

The respondent's learned Counsel next refers to the doctrine of factum valet. This doctrine only applies to adoptions where matters which do not affect the essence of the adoption have been disregarded. It cannot be applied so as to validate the adoption of an orphan. We may refer to Gonga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (16) and the cases cited therein; Rangubai v. Bhagirthibai (17) and Sri Balusu Gurulingasvami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma (18).

The question whether Ramdhan and Joharmal were joint or separate has been argued at great length. We may state that there is considerable evidence that the brothers were separate, while, on the other hand, there are many facts which it is difficult to explain on the supposition that they were separate. We do not propose to decide this question.

Similarly we find it unnecessary to decide whether the property in suit or any part of it was the self-acquired property of Ramdhan, nor to decide whether part of the property belonged to Ramdhan or to the mother of the appellant.

Again it need not be decided whether the defendant was entitled to succeed to the property of a divided uncle in preference to the daughter of that uncle. We remark, however, that the evidence of such customary succession is entirely unconvincing.

We hold that whether Ramdhan or Joharmal were joint or separate during their lifetime Ramdhan, had good title to the property in suit after the death of Joharmal. On Ramdhan's death the plaintiff became entitled to the property in suit. The suit is within time, and the plaintiff is not estopped from challenging the adoption of the defendant. The alleged adoption of 1908 was invalid and the defendant has failed to prove that there was a previous adoption. The suit must, therefore, succeed. A decree will pass in favour of the plaintiff with respect to the property claimed by her. We note that certain ornaments in Schedule A are subject to a pledge. The defendant must bear the costs in both Courts.

Appeal accepted.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 32 OF 1919.

January 20, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

RAM SUCHIT—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SHEO SEWAK SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—Shankalapnama with power of transfer—Grant in perpetuity—Transaction, whether amounts to sale—Pre-emption, right of, whether arises.

A document, described as a shankalapnama with powers of transfer, recited that the grantors had received from the grantees a certain sum of money as zar-i-peshgi yani baithki, and that in consideration of this payment they had openly put the grantees in possession of a certain piece of land, and declared that the grantees would remain in possession for ever subject to an annual payment on account of Government revenue. The proprietors and under-proprietors in the village brought this suit for pre-emption, contending that the document amounted to an out-and-out sale of an under-proprietary right. The defendants pleaded that the document was merely a lease and did not give rise to a right of pre-emption in favour of the plaintiffs, and the lower Courts, accepting this view, dismissed the claim. On appeal by the plaintiffs:

Held, that the document amounted to an out-and-out sale, because the stipulation therein making the grantees liable for the payment of the Government revenue necessarily imported the grant of an under-proprietary right and that consequently, a right of pre-emption did arise in favour of the plaintiffs. [p. 630, col. 2]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 3rd December 1918, confirming the decree of the Additional Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 10th August 1918.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for Respondents Nos. 3 to 7.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a pre emption suit. The plaintiff came into Court alleging a right of pre emption in respect of a certain transaction which took place on the 15th of December 19.6. On that date the first and second defendants to the suit, who are Thakurs and superior proprietors in a village called Daora, executed a deed in favour of the defendant No. 3 who is a Brahman. The deed is described as shankalapnama and professes to transfer an interest in a small area of land 2 bighas and 16 biswas in extent.

The plaintiff is an under-proprietor in the village and his case was that the document, which was executed in the above circumstances, amounted to an out-and-out sale of an under-proprietary interest.

The executants of the deed did not contest the suit. The defence in the case was raised by the defendant No. 3, the transferee. His plea was that the document did not amount to a sale but was merely a lease and that no right of pre-emption, therefore, had accrued in favour of the plaintiff. He further pleaded that in any event he had an equal right of pre-emption with the plaintiff.

In the Court of first instance the Munsif decided at an early stage of the case that the plaintiff and the third defendant were both under-proprietors in the village and had equal rights of pre-emption. In accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act he directed lots to be drawn and the lot fell to the plaintiff. He then went on to consider whether or not in the circumstances above stated any right of pre-emption had arisen, and on the authority of certain rulings to which he refers, he came to the conclusion that there had not. He appears to have been influenced by some previous judgment given in appeal by the Subordinate Judge, and to have reached the conclusion that the document in suit was evidence not of a sale but of a lease only. The suit was, therefore dismissed.

In appeal the Subordinate Judge has affirmed the order of dismissal. He examined the language of the deed in question, and was of opinion that it amounted to a lease and not to a sale. He was guided to this decision by a judgment of this Court to which he refers, namely, Data Ram Tewari v. Deobali Tewari (1). The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the present case was on all fours with the case just mentioned.

After hearing the arguments in the case I took time to consider my decision in order that I might examine the documents which were considered in the reported case to which reference has just been made. Having examined the documents in that case and comparing them with the documents in this case, I am satisfied that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous. It is altogether incorrect to say that the facts in the present case are identical with those of the case which was dealt with in Data Ram Tewari v. Deokali Tewari (1).

In the latter case the documents were described as "pat birt shankalap." On the face of them, therefore, they purported to be leases. It was recited in those documents that a nazrana or premium had been taken. It was provided by the deeds that the grantees or birtdars were to remain in possession of the granted lands for ever on payment of the assessed rent (lagan mushakhkhasa) at the rate of Rs. 4 per annum. They were to have powers of transfer of all kinds and were also to have power to make attachments, eject tenants and enhance rents. It is clear on the language of these documents that what was granted was only a lease of certain lands given in perpetuity. There was a distinct covenant that the grantees were to pay an annual rent of Rs. 4 a year, and that fact in itself is sufficient to show that the intention was to grant a lease and not to make an out and out transfer of an under-proprietary right.

In the case now before me the facts seem to me to be entirely different. The document began with a recital by the grantors that they had taken from the grantees a sum of Rs. 84 which is described as zar-i-peshgi yani baithki. I have not been referred to any case in which this peculiar word "baithki" has been used and I am, therefore, uncertain as to what it really implies; but most probably it means "occupation" or "tenure".

The deed goes on to say that in consideration of the payment of the sum above mentioned the grantors had openly put the grantees in possession of 2 bighas and 16 biswas. It is then declared that the grantees are to remain in possession for ever subject to an annual payment of Rs. 3, which is described in the deed as being on account of "malguzari sarkari;" in other words Government revenue. The grantors expressly say that they have reserved no rights whatever in connection with the land granted except the right to receive this sum of Rs. 3 per annum as the Government revenue appertaining to the area granted. The document closes with a statement that the deed has been written as a shankalapnama with powers of transfer. I must construe this document as an out-and-out sale of an under-proprietary right. The use of the word "zar-i-peshgi" does not, in my opinion, show that the intention was to grant a lease only. Any such argument founded upon the use of the word peshgi is negatived by what follows in the deed, namely, the declaration by which the grantees are made liable to pay the Government revenue of Rs. 3 a year. A stipulation of this kind seems to me necessarily to import the grant of an under-proprietary right. The sum agreed upon, namely, Rs. 3 a year is not payable as rent to the grantors, but as the share of the Government revenue due from the lands granted—revenue which the grantors are under a liability to pay to the Government. This document, in my opinion, is evidence of the grant of what is called a "bai birt." The Subordinate Judge has recorded his opinion that there is an agreement to pay rent. I have already expressed my opinion on this point. He seems to have found in the document an agreement for rent by arguing that the proportionate share of the Government revenue payable in respect of 2 bighas 16 biswas granted to the third defendant worked out in fact at less than Rs 3 per year and so he says the balance necessary to make up this sum of Rs. 3 must be taken as rent. I am unable to follow this reasoning. It seems to me quite clear that the parties agreed by a rough calculation that Rs. 3 a year represented the Government revenue payable in respect of the area which was being transferred, and there is no reason to suppose that because this sum does not represent with mathematical accuracy the real proportion which would be due if the revenue were distributed, there was some intention on the part of the grantors to treat the payment as rent and not revenue. In my opinion the rights of the case are with the plaintiff and he is entitled to succeed.

It was suggested that there should be a fresh drawing of lots as the first Court, acted prematurely in ordering the parties to draw lots before deciding that the right of pre-emption had arisen. I do not think there is any need for the drawing of fresh lots. The Munsif clearly intended that if a right of pre-emption was found to exist, the plaintiff was entitled to have it as he had been successful in drawing the lot.

I allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the plaintiff's claim be decreed with costs in all three Courts against the defendant-respondent No. 3.

Appeal allowed.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 167 OF 1917.

April 15, 1920.

Musammat RAM KAUR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAGHBIR SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Principal and agent—Agent, collusive act of, detrimental to principal—Principal, whether bound.

Where an agent acting in collusion with a third party does an act without the consent of his principal and the act is detrimental to the interests of the principal, the latter is not bound by the act. [p. 632, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 19th October 1916.

Pandit Manmohan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Cooper, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 20th January 1916 Raghbir Singh, purporting to act as the agent of the plaintiff, Musammat Ram Kaur, executed a lease of her land in favour of Bihari Lal for a period of five years, the rent reserved being Rs. 150 payable to the proprietor and Rs. 382-14-6 payable to Government as land revenue. The lady, when she came to know of the lease, at once protested against the misdeed of Raghbir Singh, and repudiated his authority. In July 1916 she brought the action, which has led to the present appeal, for a declaration that the lease was not binding upon her. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit, and she accordingly comes up to this Court on appeal.

Now, there can be no doubt that on the 10th July 1911 Musammat Ram Kaur executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of Raghbir Singh, which contains the usual clauses conferring plenary authority upon the agent to conduct litigation on her behalf, and also authorises him to execute a lease or to get a kabuliat executed. Now, Raghbir Singh, as a witness for the plaintiff, has admitted that during the period of four years and a half, which intervened between the date of the power-of-attorney and the date of the lease in question, he never gave the land on lease; and it is by no means clear that he acted on her behalf in any other transaction except for a short period immediately after the execution of the power-of-attorney The fact, however, remains that the authority was not revoked until a week after the date of the lease, and that the agent taking advantage of the power-of-attorney granted the lease in question, the terms of which are wholly disadvantageous to her. It is to be observed that neither Raghbir Singh nor Bihari Lal deposes that Musammat Ram Kaur gave her consent to the terms of the transaction.

It is significant that Raghbir Singh had, some months before January 1916, left the village, and gone over to Ferozepore where he obtained an employment; and that in January 1916 he returned to the village and granted the lease in question without obtaining the consent of the woman. He says that he came back in response to a letter sent to him by her, but he is unable to produce that document and puts forward the excuse that he has lost it. This excuse is palpably false, and we have no doubt that he came to the village in order to lease the property to his friend Bihari Lal, with whom he appears to be in collusion.

The documents upon the record show that the rent in cash and kind for the land in dispute amounted to Rs. 713-4-0 in 1908-09, Rs. 816 9-0 in 1909-10, and Rs. 709 in 1910-11. The average for the three years comes to Rs. 746-4-0 per annum and it is a matter of common knowledge that during the last few years the prices of the produce and consequently of the landed property have gone up considerably. In these circumstances one would expect that the rent in 1916 would exceed the aforesaid average, but on the contrary we find that the rent reserved by the document executed by Raghbir Singh amounted to Rs. 532 14 6 only. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the transaction is detrimental to Musammat Ram Kaur, and no reason has been shown why the lease was given for a period of five years.

We have considered the evidence on the record and reached the conclusion that the transaction is wholy indefensible, and that the strange conduct on behalf of Raghbir Singh can be attributed only to his collusion with Bihari Lal. An act of this description done by the agent without the consent of the principal cannot be held to be binding upon the latter.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the judgment of the lower Court, decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 52 OF 1919.

November 17, 1919.

HURNANDRAI FULCHAND AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

PRAGDAS BUDHSEN AND OTHERS —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract, construction of—Condition, implied—Sale of goods to be supplied to vendor by third parties—Goods not supplied to vendor—Liability of vendor to purchaser.

Defendants undertook to supply a certain number of bales of Dhoties manufactured by the Bradbury Mills to the plaintiffs The agreement after setting out the details proceeded to say: "The goods under manufacture are sold. The same are to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the mills Delivery is to be caused to be given in full by the 3 st of December in the year 918." The mills failed to supply the full number of bales to the defendants, who consequently could not supply them to the plaintiffs. The latter sued the defendants to recover damages for breach of contract:

Held, that the basis or foundation of the contract was the anticipation, common to both parties, that the mills would supply the goods to the vendors, and that the goods not having been supplied by the mills, the foundation of the contract disappeared, and neither party had any claim against the other for damages [p. 634, col. 2; p. 635, col. 2; p. 637, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of Macleod, C. J. in Original Suit No. 273 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of

MACLEOD, C. J.—On the 26th November 1917 the plaintiffs entered into a contract with the defendants for the purchase of 864 bales of Dhoties of the Bradbury Mills of various numbers, lengths and widths. The plaintiffs signed the contract and a counterpart was kept by them. The contract signed by the plaintiffs states as follows:—

"(The goods) under manufacture are sold. The same are to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the mill. (Delivery) is to be completed on or before the 31st December in the year 1918. If you delay taking delivery, interest, insurance charges and godown rent will be charged according to the Bazar practice."

The counterpart runs as follows:—

"Delivery by the 31st December in the year 1918. (Goods) to be manufactured are sold. The same are to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the mills. If you delay taking delivery, interest, insurance (charges) and godown rent will be charged according to the Bazar practice."

There may be a little difference in the words but the terms of these two documents are in effect the same. It is urged by the plaintiffs that this is an absolute contract for the sale of 864 bales which had to be delivered by the defendants up to the 31st December 1918, whether as a matter of fact they were manufactured by the mills or not. On the other hand the defendants say that it is a conditional contract and if they can show that they contracted with the mills for the purchase of these bales and did everything in their power to get delivery of these bales and failed to get delivery owing to the default of the mills, then they are under no obligation to deliver to the plaintiffs any more of the bales than those of which they actually got delivery. The words are very similar to those in another contract I had to construe in a recent case with reference to goods to arrive from Europe, and to me it is perfectly clear that this contract is conditional. It is open to the parties to contract absolutely and it is open to the defendants to bind themselves to deliver the goods whether they got them or not. But it is difficult to suppose that any prudent man contracting for delivery of goods to be manufactured at the date of the contract in the future by a third party would contract to sell those goods absolutely. In my opinion the words in this contract admit of only one possible construction. The goods are stated to be under manufacture and delivery is to be taken by the purchasers as and when they are received from the mills. It follows that if the seller does not get the goods from the mills he cannot possibly give delivery, and it would require very plain words in the contract to bind him to pay damages to his purchaser on account of non-delivery if he had done everything in his power to get the goods.

It was urged by Sir Chimanlal that the defendants might be able under the terms of their contract with the mills to get damages for the default of the mills in delivering the goods and that it would seem inequitable that the defendants might get damages from the mills and yet be exempt from performing their contract with the plaintiffs. That is a matter which is quite irrelevant to the issue I have to decide. I have only to decide what was the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants. They could contract in any way they chose. The plaintiffs have nothing whatever to do with the terms in which the defendants have contracted with the mills. Supposing the defendants had bought unconditionally and themselves sold conditionally, they could not be likely to admit that they could not recover damages from their seller because they had not to pay damages themselves.

In my opinion, therefore, the defendants will succeed if they can show that they have done everything in their power to get the goods which they contracted to sell to the plaintiffs from the mills. Therefore, their contract with the mills which Sir Chimanlal objected to as irrelevant is in my opinion clearly relevant on the question I have to try.

It has now been proved that the defendants got delivery from the mills of 401 bales. They delivered to their other purchasers in full. If they had delivered the proper proportion to each purchaser as they got the bales from the mills, the plaintiffs would have got 23 bales more. Therefore, there was a breach of contract as regards 23 bales. I take the difference on the 31st of December to be annas 4 pies 6. That comes roughly to Rs. 2,875 for the 23 bales. Mr. Desai argued that the defendants had not proved that they had done everything they could to get the contract goods from the mills. But I cannot see that there was any default on the part of the defendants. Delivery under the contracts went on in a normal fashion until April 1918 when the mills employed over 300 looms on Government work. Whether the defendants could have sued the mills for breach of contract is a question which I do not think is relevant in this case. The defendants asked for delivery and were told that the looms were engaged on Government work and the weaving master has shown that the remaining looms could not be employed in weaving Dhoties of the contract description. The defendants, therefore, were not in default and they will only have to pay damages to the plaintiffs on 23 bales which I have already fixed at Rs. 2,875.

As to costs, I think the fairest order to make is that there will be no order as to costs. The costs payable by the plaintiffs would be found on an examination to correspond roughly with the costs payable by the defendants.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—In this case the plaintiffs sued to recover damages for the breach of a contract. The contract was an undertaking by the defendants to supply a certain number of bales of Dhoties manufactured by the Bradbury Mills on or before the 31st December of the year 1918. The defendants supplied a certain number but they did not supply the number contracted for. The plaintiffs, therefore, sued for damages for failure of the defendants to supply the full number.

The trial Court gave them a certain amount of damages on the ground that the defendants had failed to supply a certain number of bales which they ought to have supplied; but it refused a part of the damages claimed on the ground that in the circumstances of the case the contract was not to be interpreted as an absolute undertaking to supply the whole number contracted for.

On this the plaintiffs have appealed and they claim the full amount of the damages which they claimed in their plaint. They say the contract was an absolute contract to sell them the goods described.

The defendants, who are respondents, maintain that it became or was a conditional contract.

The appeal turns really on that point. If the contract was conditional, as the defendants maintain, the decree of the trial Court is correct. If it was an absolute contract, as the appellants maintain, then they are entitled to the full amount of damages.

The contract is in writing. It sets out all the details, the number of bales and so forth; and then it proceeds to say:

The question really resolves itself into this: Was this a contract by which the defendants undertook to supply the goods whether they received them from the Mills or not, or was it a contract which both the parties to it understood was based on the assumption that the goods would be supplied by the mills, the foundation of the contract being that the goods if supplied by the mills were to be delivered by the defendants to the plaintiffs? The trial Court has taken the latter view. There is no doubt that the goods sold were goods to be manufactured or in process of being manufactured by the Bradbury Mills, a mill in Bombay. This is not the case of a vendor who undertakes absolutely to supply goods which he will obtain somehow or somewhere in the open market. It is a contract to supply goods of a particular kind which he has to obtain from a particular mill.

Now, one way of looking at the case is to ask oneself whether it was probable that a business man would absolutely contract to deliver these goods of a particular kind made by a particular mill, whether he could obtain them from the mill or not. Looked at from that point of view, I think the probabilities are that a sensible business man would not undertake to deliver goods of that kind, whether he was able to obtain them from the mill or not. That way of looking at the case inclines one to the view taken by the trial Judge.

Another way of looking at it is to take the words of the contract themselves and see how the subject-matter of the contract is described. The word used to describe the goods is the word 'bunto', which may be translated in a variety of ways; but it is admitted that it means "goods that have not yet at any rate fully come into existence," "goods that remain to be manufactured or which are only partly manufactured." That is what is the subject-matter of this contract. The underlying idea, seeing that the goods are so described, is quite clearly to my mind this that the goods sold are goods which the vendor will receive from the Bradbury Mills. And I should describe the basis or foundation of the contract as the anticipation—an anticipation common to both the parties to the contract—that the mills would supply the goods to the vendor. So regarded, it follows that if the goods are not supplied to the vendor, the foundation of the contract disappears. Neither party, therefore, has any claim against the other for damages.

I may mention here that it was not argued in appeal that the plaintiffs had any claim against the defendants on account of negligence. Their claim in appeal was not based on an allegation that the defendants, had they been more active or more careful, could have obtained more goods from the mills than they did obtain. The finding of the lower Court was that the defendants were not in default in that particular. That is to say, they had obtained from the mills such goods as they could reasonably obtain and their failure to deliver the goods to the plaintiffs was due to the fact that the mills had not supplied them to the vendors, the defendants; and that conclusion was not attacked by Counsel who appeared for the appellants in his opening address.

Now, having arrived at this conclusion, as a matter of fact it seems to me that on that set of facts the law is comparatively simple. We have been referred to a number of cases and they take us back to an early case, that of Taylor v. Caldwell (1). The judgment in that case deals as a matter of principle with the question of implied conditions and contingent as contrasted with absolute contracts. In the judgment there occur these words:

"In none of these cases (i. e., certain cases which had been referred to) is the promise in words other than positive, nor is there any express stipulation that the destruction of the person or thing shall excuse the performance, but that excuse is by law implied, because from the nature of the contract it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the particular person or chattel. In the present case, looking at the whole contract, we find that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the Music Hall at the time when the concerts were to be given; that being essential to their performance."

That case dealt with a contract which could not be performed because a music hall had been destroyed by fire. The underlying idea, however, is that if the basis or foundation of the contract has disappeared, neither party can claim performance from the other. And this principle has been re-stated in very much those words in a number of later cases. I think I cannot do better than quote another sentence from the same case of Taylor v. Caldwell (1):—

"There seems little doubt that this implication tends to further the great object of making the legal construction such as to fulfil the intention of those who entered into the contract. For in the course of affairs men in making such contracts in general would, if it were brought to their minds, say that there should be such a condition."

I do not myself doubt for a moment that business men in Bombay, if they were called upon to express an opinion on this particular contract with which we are dealing, would say that the contract is based on the anticipation that the mills would deliver the goods to the vendors; and that, if the anticipation was disappointed, the vendors were not bound to give the goods to the purchasers.

I think, therefore, that the decision of the trial Court is correct and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The cross objections have not been pressed, and they also should be dismissed with costs.

MARTEN, J.—The question in this appeal is whether the suit contract was an absolute contract of sale by the defendants, or whether it was contingent on the goods in question being manufactured and supplied by the mills. The more material words are: "Delivery by the 31st December 1918. Goods to be manufactured (bunto) are sold. The same are to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the mills." Another translation of the word 'bunto' is 'goods under manufacture.' The parties themselves have not expressly provided for the event which has happened, viz, non manufacture by the mills of the greater portion of the goods.

Now, dealing with the matter generally as to what one would expect from reasonable business men, the learned trial Judge says:

"But it is difficult to suppose that any prudent man contracting for the delivery of goods to be manufactured at the date of the contract in the future by a third party would contract to sell those goods absolutely."

And when one considers the nature of the contract which the defendants had with the mills, one finds that it was not an absolute but a determinable contract. Under clause 4 of their contract (Exhibit 1), the mills were entitled to cancel the contract or the remaining portion if the mills met with any accident or obstruction or if for any other reason the mills could not give in full the goods mentioned in the contract or any portion thereof, and in that event the defendants were not to get any compensation whatever. Then, there was another clause that in case of strike, stoppage of machinery, or such unforeseen circumstance (sic) the mills did not undertake to give regular deliveries in terms of the contract.

Now, that being so, why should the defendants, who had not got an absolute contract themselves, contract to sell the goods absolutely? On the other hand, from the purchasers' point of view, and for the matter of that from the vendors' too, the third parties who were to manufacture the goods were well known mills in Bombay. Both parties might, therefore, reasonably consider that the mills would carry out their obligations honourably, and that if those obligations were not carried out it would be for some good and valid reason and not from any improper motive, and that accordingly a conditional contract would be fair to both the plaintiffs and defendants. Further, the mill contract (Exhibit 1) is mainly a printed form. There is not any direct evidence that the plaintiffs were familiar with it, but I think it a reasonable inference under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act that large buyers like the plaintiffs of 864 bales would know the usual selling conditions of the mills, or at any rate know that the mills did not guarantee delivery in all events. The probabilities, therefore, seem to me that the parties to the suit contract would contract on the basis of its being conditional on the manufacture of the goods, and not on the basis that the vendor would warrant the manufacture by the mills. I think this particularly applies in time of war with its numerous uncertainties, and, as regards this, there may be noticed the very long time for delivery which was allowed in the suit contract.

But we must decide this case not on probabilities, but on the contract the parties have actually entered into, for it was open to them to contract as they pleased. Before I pass on, there are some words in the contract which perhaps I should notice here. Exhibit 3 and Exhibit B are different translations of the same contract, viz., that handed by the defendants as vendors to the plaintiffs as purchasers. The words are "Delivery is to be caused to be given in full by the 31st of December" in Exhibit 2 and "delivery is to be completed on or before the 3 st December" in Exhibit B. Then in the counterpart, Exhibit A, signed by the plaintiffs the words are "Delivery by the 31st of December." Now, standing by themselves, there may be different shades of meaning between the words "delivery to be caused to be given in full by..." and "delivery is to be completed on or before..." and "delivery by...", but I think these words have to be read with the rest of the contract. That being so, their meaning is "delivery of goods which are to be manufactured or are under manufacture."

Now taking the words "goods to be manufactured," they indicate that the parties are dealing with something which is to be brought into existence in the future by a third party. That seems to me more consistent with the contract being conditional on that expectation being realised, rather than on one party warranting it shall be realised. Similarly, the expression "goods under manufacture" implies that the goods are not yet manufactured—at any rate wholly. So, too, the stipulation that the goods are to be taken delivery of "as and when the same may be received from the mills" would rather point to the contract being conditional on that receipt.

We have been referred to no authority either in the Contract Act or in any decided case which is precisely in point on the facts; but I think useful analogies may be drawn from other typical cases. One class of cases is referred to by the learned trial Judge, viz., the "goods to arrive" cases, which were dealt with by this Court quite recently in Tribhovandas v. Nagindas (2). I will not repeat what is said there by my learned brother and myself, but the authorities there cited tend to show that speaking generally in the case of goods to arrive from a third party, there is no warranty implied by the vendor that the goods will arrive: see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXV, page 144, note (q), and Benjamin on Sale, 5th Edition, page 585. Why, then, in the case of goods to be manufactured by a third party, should there be a warranty by the vendor that the goods will be manufactured?

Then, we were referred to Taylor v. Caldwell (1) which was frequently cited in the Coronation Procession cases. As regards that case

(2) 54 Ind. Cas. 230; 21 Bom. L. R. 1137.

"It is not essential to the application of the principle of Taylor v. Caldwell (1) that the direct subject of the contract should perish or fail to be in existence at the date of performance of the contract. It is sufficient if a state of things or condition expressed in the contract and essential to its performance perishes or fails to be in existence at that time."

In the present case I think anybody would say that the existence of the "manufactured goods" was essential to the performance of the suit contract.

Then in Tamplin Steamship Company v. Anglo Mexican Petroleum Products Company (4) Lord Loreburn dealt with the case of Horlock v. Beal (5) in which Taylor v. Caldwell (1) was cited with approval, and he says at page 403:—

"An examination of those decisions confirms me in the view that, when our Courts have held innocent contracting parties absolved from further performance of their promises, it has been upon the ground that there was an implied term in the contract which entitled them to be absolved. Sometimes it is put that performance has become impossible and that the party concerned did not promise to perform an impossibility. Sometimes it is put that the parties contemplated a certain state of things which fell out otherwise. In most of the cases it is said that there was an implied condition in the contract which operated to release the parties from performing it, and in all of them I think that was at bottom the principle upon which the Court proceeded. It is in my opinion the true principle, for no Court has an absolving power, but it can infer from the nature of the contract and the surrounding circumstances that a condition which is not expressed was a foundation on which the parties contracted."

Lower down he says:—

"That seems to me another way of saying that from the nature of the contract it cannot be supposed the parties, as reasonable men, intended it to be binding on them under such altered conditions. Were the altered conditions such that, had they thought of them, they would have taken their chance of them, or such that as sensible men they would have said 'if that happens, of course, it is all over between us?' What, in fact, was the true meaning of the contract? Since the parties have not provided for the contingency, ought a Court to say it is obvious they would have treated the thing as at an end?"

If it is necessary so to do, I think one may fairly imply a condition here that the goods were to be manufactured and supplied by the mills: and that if that condition was not fulfilled, both parties were to be released quoad those unmanufactured goods.

It is argued for the plaintiffs that the only object of stating that the goods were to be manufactured was to distinguish them from ready goods, and to entitle the vendor to deliver the goods by instalments as received from the mills, which but for this stipulation he would not be entitled to do. This may have been one object, but in my opinion it was not the only object. This still leaves one with this, viz., that both parties contemplated that the goods would be received from the mills—an event which in fact did not happen. There is, therefore, some resemblance between the present case and Howell v. Coupland (6), where both parties anticipated that a crop of potatoes would be grown on defendant's land, but in fact most of it perished from disease without default on the part of the defendant. Then the defendant was held excused by reason of his being prevented by causes for which he was not answerable (per James, L J. at page 262).

In the result, I am of opinion that on the true construction of the suit contract, and having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the vendor did not warrant the manufacture and supply by the mills of the goods in question, and that accordingly the decision of the Court below is correct.

I should add that there is no question here of the vendor being in default with the mills, or having put it out of his power to give delivery of the suit goods. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider whether an obligation on his part should be implid not at any rate wilfully to prevent fulfilment of the suit contract: see Hamlyn v. Wood (7). We are not dealing with the cas of a dishonest vendor who deliberately breaks his contract with the mills. If anybody is in default, it is the mills and not the vendor. But the fact appears to be that the mills could not give delivery, because a large proportion of their looms were engaged on Government contracts.

Accordingly, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed and that the cross-objections should be dismissed in both cases with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2174 OF 1916.

April 29, 1920.

ANANT RAM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

THE BHARAT NATIONAL BANK, LTD., DELHI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Practice and procedure—Pro-note, suit on—Defendant admitting execution but denying consideration—Burden of proof—Pleadings—Court, whether can set up new case.

Plaintiff Bank sued one A. for recovery of Rs. 27,000 on the basis of a pro-note for Rs. 25,000. Defendant, while admitting the execution of the pro-note, denied having received any consideration therefor and pleaded that the transaction was a bogus one and that he signed the pro-note on the assurance given him by one B., the Chief Manager of the Bank, who himself stood in need of money, that he (defendant) could not be liable as B ,had a fixed deposit of Rs. 25,000 in the Bank which would cover the transaction. Counsel for the Bank flatly contradicted the suggestion made by the defendant's Pleader that the fixed deposit receipt was obtained by B. as consideration for the pro-note and stated that it was given by B. as security for a debt already due. The Court held that no cash was paid to A., but decreed the claim on the ground that the consideration to A. was the fixed deposit receipt which was a good consideration. The defendant appealed:

Held, (1) that the suit being based on a pro-note the execution of which was admitted, the onus was on the defendant to prove that no consideration passed; [p. 639, col. 2.]

(2) that as no money was paid to A as consideration for the pro-note and as B. had paid no money into the Bank in consideration for the fixed deposit receipt the plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed and the Court was wrong in setting up a case for the plaintiff which not only he did not set up but which he through his Counsel definitely repudiated. [p. 641, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th April 1916.

Messrs. C. Bevan Petman and M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Babu M. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Bharat National Bank, Limited, of Delhi instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen against one Anant Ram for the recovery of Rs. 27,000 on the basis of a pro-note for Rs. 25,000. It was set out in the plaint that Anant Ram had taken a loan of Rs. 25,000 from the Bank on the 24th July 1911 and had executed a pro-note for the same in favour of the Bank agreeing to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum. It was further stated that the Bank had been paid Rs. 634-1-2 out of the interest through Barkat Ram and after remitting Rs. 47-6-6 a decree was asked for for Rs. 27,000. The Barkat Ram referred to in the plaint as having paid the item of interest on behalf of Anant Ram was the General Manager of the plaintiff Bank, and it is this Barkat Ram who signed and verified the plaint on behalf of the said Bank. The suit was filed on the 24th April 1913 and came up for hearing on the 13th May 1913. On that day Anant Ram failed to appear and proceedings were taken against him ex parte. Barkat Ram went into the witness box, swore to the pro-note having been executed by Anant Ram and stated that the sum of Rs. 25,000 was paid to Anant Ram in cash. He further stated that he had himself on the date in question sent a sum of Rs. 25,000 to the Bank through Anant Ram with a letter, asking that the said amount be deposited as a fixed deposit in his favour and that the advance to Anant Ram was to be secured on that deposit. On the basis of this statement an ex parte decree was passed against Anant Ram for the amount claimed. This decree was, however, set aside on application by an order dated the 28th May 1913, and on the 4th June 1913 Anant Ram filed his written statement in which while admitting the execution of the pro-note he flatly denied ever having received any consideration therefor. He proceeded to state that the transaction had been a bogus one, that Barkat Ram, the Chief Manager of the Bank, himself stood in need of money and that the said Barkat Ram had deceived him by stating that he Anant Ram would not be held liable for the debt as Barkat Ram, being the Chief Manager, would arrange matters and that it was on this assurance that the pro note was signed. Further it was stated that Barkat Ram had said that he had a fixed deposit of Rs. 25,000 in the Bank which would cover this transaction. Anant Ram also denied ever having signed what is known as a "debit voucher." It was also pointed out that this fixed deposit had matured on the 24th May 1912 and the Bank should have credited the amount to this pro-note. This written statement was traversed by the plaintiff, presumably through Barkat Ram, and when Anant Ram's Pleader said that the fixed deposit receipt for Rs. 25,000 was obtained by Lala Barkat Ram as consideration for the pro note, the suggestion was flatly contradicted on behalf of the Bank by its Counsel Mr. Kirkpatrick, who stated that the fixed deposit receipt was given by Barkat Ram as security for the debt already due. The following issues were framed:—

1. Was any deceit practised on defendant when he signed the pro-note as a token of its having been duly executed?
2. Was the pro-note without consideration?
3. Is plaintiff entitled to recover the debt in suit from defendant without first trying to recover it from the fixed deposit receipt given by way of collateral security?

and in due course the parties proceeded to trial.

The learned District Judge held that no cash was paid to Anant Ram and that the supposed loan was secured by the supposed deposit for which a receipt was issued in Barkat Ram's favour. The claim was nevertheless decreed on the ground that the consideration to Anant Ram was the fixed deposit receipt which was a good consideration. Against this decree the defendant has preferred this appeal and we have heard Mr. Bevan-Petman on his behalf, while Mr. Tek Chand has addressed us on behalf of the Bank.

The main point for determination is whether the pro-note was without consideration (issue No. 2). The suit being based on a pro-note the execution of which was admitted, the onus was placed, and rightly placed, on the defendant, and on his behalf it is claimed that the onus has been fully discharged. To prove his allegations he has produced Hira Lal, the then auditor of the Bank, Chetan Sarup, a clerk in the Bank, S. C. Bose, who was the Chief Accountant of the Bank, Jawala Pershad, the Treasurer of the Bank, and Mul Raj, a clerk in the Bank, and he himself has gone into the witness box. All these witnesses have definitely stated that no money was paid to Anant Ram when the pro-note was written and further that no money was received from Barkat Ram when the fixed deposit receipt was issued to him. Hira Lal says that when cash is paid out of a Bank, a debit voucher is prepared which is signed by the person who receives the cash. In the course of his duties the debit voucher which was prepared in connection with this deposit was seen by him, and he swears that it had no signature on the back either of Anant Ram or anybody else. This voucher, an important piece of evidence, is missing and it is said that it has been stolen. This witness also said that the closing balance on Saturday, the 22nd July 1911, as given in the cash book was Rs. 17,000 odd. Therefore, unless Barkat Ram paid in the Rs. 25,000 for which a fixed deposit receipt was issued, it is obvious that the Bank could not have advanced Rs. 25,000 to Anant Ram on Monday the 24th July 1911. Further it appears that several pages of the cash book have been removed and new ones inserted. This witness also states that the original pages in the loan ledger have been removed and new ones substituted for them, and that in the original there was an entry in the handwriting of Barkat Ram to the effect "in presence of the Directors."

It has been contended by Mr. Tek Chand that this witness is hostile to Barkat Ram and that he could scarcely be expected to remember the details he deposes to after a lapse of four years. It appears, however, that there were reasons for Hira Lal to have this matter impressed on his memory. He regarded this transaction as a suspicious one and challenged it. He was told by Barkat Ram that there was a fixed deposit which was the security for this loan and which would be credited against it on the due date, and a note to that effect was made. When the witness called for the fixed deposit receipt it was not forthcoming, although having been given as security it should have been in the possession of the Bank. Soon after this transaction Hira Lal found it necessary to sever his connection with the Bank, and on the 20th January 1912 submitted his resignation which he sent under cover of a private letter written by him to Sri Kishen Das who was the Chairman of the Bank. There is really no reason to think that Hira Lal had any grudge against Barkat Ram, and his statement is of importance as showing the extraordinary manner in which the affairs of the Bank were being conducted at that time.

The next witness Chetan Sarup states that no money was actually paid to Anant Ram and that no money was actually paid in by Barkat Ram, that vouchers were passed for cash, but the transaction was really a transfer. This witness was not cross examined, as Lala Barkat Ram for the Bank stated that there had been some misunderstanding about the time of taking up the case. The learned District Judge has made a note that the time fixed was 12 o'clock and everybody had been kept waiting for half an hour. He was not subsequently produced, but we see no reason to think that the blame for this attaches to any one other than the plaintiff. This witness is no longer in the employ of the Bank and it is said that he was dismissed. We are, however, unable to see any reason to doubt the veracity of his statement.

S. C. Bose, the next witness, was the Chief Accountant of the Bank on the 24th July 1911. His evidence is clearly to the effect that no money was received from Barkat Ram on that date and that no money was paid to Anant Ram. The deposit receipt, he states, was kept by Lala Barkat Ram although the lien was entered in the books of the Bank. Mr. Tek Chand argued that this witness had been dismissed for malpractices and referred to page 9 of the paper book, where are to be found certain resolutions of the Board at meetings held in connection with Mr. Bose. From these it appears that Mr. Bose had tendered his resignation. The first resolution is dated the 13th April 1912 and the last is dated the 7th April 1913, in which it was resolved that Mr. Bose be criminally prosecuted. There is nothing to show that this resolution was ever given effect to while, Thakar Das, a Director of the Bank, produced as a witness for the plaintiff, stated that Mr. Bose was found to have advanced large sums to Sen Ghosal and Co. without any authority. After a careful perusal of this witness's evidence we are unable to see any reason whatever for thinking that he is speaking falsely.

The next witness Jawala Pershad was a servant of Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das and used to work in those days as the Treasurer of the Bank. His evidence is to the effect that the transfer of Rs. 25,000 was made but nothing was actually paid out. No money came or went and the transaction was a mere transfer. This witness's evidence was attacked on the ground that he was an old employee of Sri Kishen Das, who was the Chairman and promoter of this Bank. There is no evidence whatever on the record worth the name from which it can be deduced that there was any ill-feeling between the said Sri Kishen Das and Barkat Ram and the evidence of this witness is, in our opinion, worthy of considerable weight.

Next comes Rup Narain, who also says that no money actually passed either in payment to Anant Ram or as received from Barkat Ram. This witness was dismissed from the Bank for refusing to go to a branch office at Etawah in November 1911. The reason for his dismissal is not one that can be regarded as a ground for disbelieving him.

Next there is the evidence of Mul Raj, who also swears that no money passed.

He is no longer in the employ of the Bank, having resigned.

Finally there is Anant Ram himself, who has gone into the witness box and has definitely and clearly stated that he received no money when he signed the pro note because he was distinctly given to understand by Barkat Ram, the Chief Manager of the Bank, that he would see that he incurred no liability.

After a careful consideration of all this evidence we are satisfied that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct and that no money was paid to Anant Ram as consideration for the pro note and further that Barkat Ram paid no money into the Bank in consideration for the fixed deposit receipt issued to him on the same day. On these findings it seems to us that the plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed and that the learned District Judge was wrong in setting up a case for the plaintiff which not only he did not set up but which he through his Counsel definitely repudiated. We would also note that the fact that Barkat Ram refrained from going into the witness box to submit himself to cross-examination is extremely suspicious. He was conducting the case for the Bank and the defendant repeatedly urged that Barkat Ram should be made a party, to which course the Bank through Barkat Ram declined to agree. He was fully aware of the defence set up and of the evidence given by the late employees of the Bank. He himself was the only person who could explain many of the circumstances, for instance, he could have proved where he got Rs. 25,000 which, he said, he sent to the Bank and why the fixed deposit receipt which was given as collateral security was not in the possession of the Bank. Mr. Tek Chand argued that it was very unlikely that Anant Ram would have been deceived by Barkat Ram, being a man of 36 years of age who had already served a sentence for forgery. A letter, dated the 12th March 1911, printed at page 2 of the paper-book from Anant Ram to Barkat Ram shows that these two were at that time on the best of terms and that Anant Ram was looking to Barkat Ram for assistance in obtaining an employment. There was, therefore, nothing improbable in his having relied on Barkat Ram's assurance that he, as the Chief Manager of the Bank, would see that Anant Ram would not incur any liability by signing the pro-note. It is also evident that the books of the Bank relating to this transaction are highly suspicious. The original pages have been removed and others substituted therefor, being marked "duplicate," a description which must be obviously incorrect as there can be no honest reason for preparing a duplicate set of books. The rate of interest 6 per cent. is also absurdly low, and in all the circumstances we are of opinion that the whole transaction is a bogus one and that Anant Ram is not liable to the Bank in any sum whatsoever.

Mr. Tek Chand complained that his client had not been given sufficient opportunity to produce certain witnesses, but we consider that the Court below dealt correctly with this question. In the view we take of the case it is not necessary to discuss the other points argued at the Bar and we accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Applicant.

VYRAVAN CHETTI v. SUBRAMANIAN CHETTI.

Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Gorakhpur dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the sole ground that no succession certificate had been filed. The plaintiff was one of several heirs of a deceased creditor. I have examined the order-sheet. The suit was finally decided on the 22nd of November 1918. It was on that date that the defendants first appeard to defend the suit and it was on that date the plea was taken that a suit without a succession certificate is not maintainable. The Court came to the conclusion that this was a good plea. It, however, dismissed the suit without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of obtaining the necessary certificate and filing it, as it obviously was the Court's duty to do for the ends of justice. If any such opportunity was given to the plaintiff, there ought to be something in the order-sheet or on the record to show that this was done. There is nothing on the record. As I have said above, the case came up for hearing on the 22nd of November 1918, and was heard and dismissed that day. I allow the application, I set aside the decree of the Court below, I direct that Court to restore the case to its original number on the file and to proceed to hear and determine it according to law. I am informed that the succession certificate has already been obtained. The Court will give the plaintiff an opportunity of filing it. If he refuses to file it, then his suit may rightly be dismissed by reason of his default, otherwise it must be decided on its merits. The costs of this application will abide the result of the suit.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Mortgage—Agreement between first and second mortgagees to share moneys equally—Registration, whether necessary.

An agreement between first and second mortgagees to share equally monies realised is, although not registered, admissible in evidence to prove such agreement. [p. 644, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the High Court, Madras, dated 16th November 1917, which reversed the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura.

FACTS.—The essential facts of the case are clearly set out in their Lordships' judgment. The Subordinate Judge held that the agreement in question was legally invalid for want of registration, and dismissed the suit. On appeal the High Court (Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Sadasiva Aiyar, J.) held that the non-registratinn of the agreement did not affect the claim of the plaintiffs, and remanded the suit. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar observed as follows :—

"Granting that under section 49 (c), Exhibit A cannot be received as evidence of any transaction affecting immoveable property, it may be received as evidence of any other transaction which does not affect such property but only affects the defendants personally as imposing a personal liability on them. In the Full Bench decision in Puloka Veetil Muthalakulangara Kunhu Moidu v. Thiruthipalli Madhava Menon (1) it was held that a document which purports to be a mortgage but which being unregistered cannot affect immoveable properly, was admissible in evidence of the personal covenant to pay contained in it. I think (though I was not at first clear about it) that this decision covers the present case and that though, so far as the security over the immoveable property is concerned, the plaintiffs cannot rely upon the plaint document Exhibit A to prove that the defendants' prior right of security over the immoveable property is affected thereby, there is nothing to prevent them from using it as evidence of the co ordinate transaction, namely, the personal covenant to divide the realisations equally, when and as realised. The mortgagors are not affected at all by the equal division of moneys realised by either of the parties to Exhibit A and such division cannot be taken advantage of by the mortgagors, nor can it be held to prejudice them in any suit brought by them for redemption of either mortgage or brought against them for sale under any of the mortgages. Even as regards the amounts due under the promissory note to the defendants, the debtors will not be bound to pay again, because the plaintiffs and the defendants divide the realised amount between themselves. In the Full Bench case in Pothi Naic'en v. Nagama Naicker (2), which was a case of a deed affecting both immoveables and moveables, the reason why without registration the deed was held not to affect even the moveables was because the parties did not intend to affect by division in the joint character of the moveables without affecting at the same time the joint character of the immoveables also. But in the present case, it cannot be held, looking at the terms of Exhibit A, that the equal division of moneys realised under the promissory note or either sets of mortgage documents, was not intended by the parties to be made, unless also the security over the immoveable properties was simultaneously affected. In fact, such a division could not affect it so as to bind the mortgagors without notice to them even if the document was registered; and the very informal character of the document as a 'Varthamanam', which is executed between friends and not intended to be stamped or registered, negatives the idea. I would, therefore, reverse the judgment of the lower Court and remand the suit for disposal according to law."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Dube, for the Appellants, submitted that the agreement was compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act as it affected interests in immoveable property, and that under section 49 it could not be admitted in evidence as it was not registered.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question was whether the arrangement to pool their claim was admissible in evidence.]

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships think it unnecessary to trouble Counsel for the respondents in this case.

The appellants are the first mortgagees of certain property. The respondents hold a second mortgage upon the same estates. It is unnecessary to determine the circumstances under which those mortgages arose, or the history of the title of the mortgagor. It is sufficient to say that on the 14th March 1907 an agreement was entered into between the first mortgagees and the second mortgagees which has given rise to the present dispute. The effect of that agreement was to put the first and the second incumbrances on a relative position of equality with regard to the security. The appellants having realised part of the estate, the respondents instituted the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen for the purpose of obtaining their share of the proceeds to which they claimed to be entitled by virtue of the agreement. The answer that was raised was, first, that the agreement required registration, and not having been registered could not be given in evidence; and, secondly, that in any circumstances no consideration had even been given by which the agreement could be supported. With regard to the question of consideration it is sufficient to say that the learned Judge before whom the case was first heard found that there was consideration from the fact that contemporaneously with the execution of this agreement there had been an arrangement made by which the defendants had profited by loans that the plaintiffs had made to the extent of Rs. 42,000, and the question was not further raised in the High Court. The point, therefore, is not open to the appel-lante; but if it were, their Lordships think there was abundant evidence to support the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge.

The real question, therefore, which now arises is whether or no the agreement of the 14th March 1907 required to be registered for the purpose of enabling it to be given in evidence upon these proceedings. That depends entirely upon the consideration of clause 3 of the agreement. Clause 3 of the agreement, after referring to the total amount of rupees that is owing to both the mortgagees and stating that interest is due to the first and second mortgagees under the documents, provides that their rights shall be arranged in the following way, that "both parties should, as regards rights, stand in the same position without claiming prior or subsequent rights, and divide and appropriate in equal halves, as per terms mentioned herein, whatever amount may be realised, on the date of realisation." The clause is open to two interpretations. It may be that the provision that the rights, both prior and subsequent, should stand on the footing of equality, is explained and limited by the following words, which state that the amounts of realisation shall be divided and appropriated in equal halves, or it may mean that two separate and distinct results are effected by the clause: first, that the rights should stand on a footing of equality and, secondly, that the proceeds should be equally divided. Whichever interpretation is taken, there is no objection to the lack of registration in such proceedings as those out of which this appeal has arisen, for, if the whole effect of the agreement is to provide merely that the realised money is to be divided in equal shares, then there is nothing in this agreement which requires to be registered, and if, on the other hand, there are two distinct provisions, the one relating to rights of property and the other with regard to the division of the realisation moneys then, as these proceedings relate merely to the question of the realised money, it need not be registered for the purpose of being given in evidence in this suit, although it may be that it would require to be registered for the purpose of being given in evidence in a suit relating to the regulation of the rights against the estate itself.

For these reasons their Lordships think that the judgment of the High Court was quite right, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioner.

Lala Dharm Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was referred to arbitration and two arbitrators were appointed. After some proceedings one of the arbitrators put in a sealed award on some preliminary points, and refused to take any further part in the proceedings. The other arbitrator then asked for instructions from the Court and was told that he could proceed by himself and record the evidence and file his award. Against this order an application for revision has been preferred on the ground that the reference to arbitration provided that the case should be decided by two arbitrators, and that one of them having withdrawn, either another arbitrator should be appointed or the Court should have decided the case on the merits. These grounds are clearly correct.

I, therefore, accept the application for revision and set aside the order complained against, and as both parties agree before me that the arbitration shall be superseded, I direct that the Court shall try the case on its merits. The costs of this Court will follow the result.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s 10 (1)—Transfer of proprietary right—Sir land, lease of, validity of.

Proprietors, when selling or about to sell their property, cannot be allowed to deprive themselves by any trickery or subterfuge of the rights which section 10 (1) of the Agra Tenancy Act was framed to give them.

Therefore, a collusive lease of sir land intended to defeat the law is entirely void.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 1st of August 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(January 10, 1920).—The plaintiff appellant Musammat Hem Kuar sued as ex proprietary tenant to eject the defendant Sewaram as her sub-tenant. Sewaram's sons are the superior proprietors of the Mahal. Sewaram's defence is that he holds the land under a lease for 101 years given to him on a rent of Rs. 40 per annum plus premium Rs. 500, which lease was given to him by the plaintiff-appellant when she was co-sharer and Lambardar before the partition. The lease is dated 18th February 1910. There is on record also a deed of agreement by plaintiff-appellant to sell her proprietary right to the respondent's sons. It is also dated 18th February 1910. The position seems to me quite clear. Musammat Hem Kuar on February 18, 1910, was contracting to sell her proprietary rights to the respondent's sons. She was Lambardar in the Mahal and simultaneously gave this lease of the sir land, which belonged to herself and her relative Musammat Amrit Kuar, to her vendees' father Sewaram with the intention of defeating the law of section 10, Tenancy Act. The Commissioner holds that the lease is invalid so far as other co sharers are concerned, but that Musammat Hem Kuar herself must be held to it and that now that she has become ex-proprietary tenant under the respondent's sons, she cannot eject the respondent because this lease stands in the way. This is tantamount to allowing a deliberate effort to get round the law of section 10, Tenancy Act, to be successful. I cannot agree with this finding of the Commissioner. It has been held over and over again by the Board and affirmed by the High Court that proprietors, when selling or about to sell their property, cannot be allowed to deprive themselves by any trickery or subterfuge of the rights which section 10 (1) was framed to give them. This lease of 18th February 1919 was a clear device of Musammat Hem Kuar and respondent in collusion to avoid the effect which section 10, Tenancy Act, would have when the projected sale of Musammat Hem Kaur's proprietary rights to the respondent's sons should come into effect. I hold that the lease, being a collusive one intended to defeat the law, is entirely void. Musammat Hem Kuar, plaintiff appellant, is, therefore, in my opinion clearly entitled to eject Sewaram respondent as her sub tenant, though, as the first Court held, the latter may have an equitable ground for suing her in the Civil Court for any nazrana he may have paid her in consideration for the lease.

I would set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the decision of the Assistant Collector, but as both parties have been equally parties to the attempt to defeat the law of section 10, I would let the parties pay their own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 90—Application to set aside sale—Appeal, second, whether competent—Non-transferable occupancy holding—Objection to sale of holding, when to be taken—Mortgagee, objection by, subject to equities against judgment-debtor.

There is no second appeal against an order passed on an application under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Although a tenant is entitled to get a sale of his holding in execution of a decree set aside on the ground that the holding is non-transferable, he, nevertheless, is bound to take the objection at the earliest possible moment: such an objection cannot be entertained in second appeal after the sale has taken place. [p. 646, col. 2.]

A mortgagee from a judgment-debtor is a representative of the judgment-debtor for the purpose of an application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and he cannot raise an objection which the judgment-debtor is incompetent to raise, as he is bound by all the equities enforceable against the judgment-debtor. [p. 646, col. 2; p. 647, col. 1.]

Messrs. Rai Tribhuwan Nath Sahai and Janak Kishore, for the Appellants.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for money and on 1st May 1915 attached before judgment the holding of the defendant. The suit was decreed on the 30th November 1915. On the 6th July 1916 the defendant gave a mortgage of part of the holding to Sri Krishna Rai. On the 11th July 1916 execution of the money-decree was taken out by the plaintiff and the holding was attached for the second time on the 16th July 1916. Notice under Order XXI, rule 66, Civil Procedure Code, for settling the sale proclamation was served upon the defendant on the 4th August 1916, and the holding was sold on the 30th November 1916 and was purchased by the decree-holder. An application was then made by the defendant to set aside the sale. A similar application was also made by the mortgagee. Both applications were dismissed by the Munsif and there were appeals to the District Judge with a like result.

The present defendant and the mortgagee have preferred second appeals to this Court, namely, Appeals Nos. 71 and 70 of 1918.

Appeal No. 71.—In this appeal there is a finding of fact, which is fatal to the appellant. It is found that the tenant-defendant was served with notice of the sale proclamation under Order XXI, rule 66. In so far as his application under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, attacks the sale on the grounds of irregularity and fraud in publishing and conducting the sale, there is no second appeal against the learned Judge's order. The tenant, however, is competent to prefer a second appeal in so far as the application was one under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

Now, this objection as to non-transferability, which is the ground on which he could come in under section 47, was an objection which it was competent for him to take, firstly, when the attachment before judgment was made, secondly, when the attachment was made in the execution proceedings, and thirdly, when he was called upon to settle the sale proclamation. The law is that a tenant is entitled to get a sale set aside on the ground that the holding was non-transferable, but he must make his objection at the earliest possible time. In this case, it being found as a fact that the tenant was served with notice under Order XXI, rule 66, he ought, at least, to have come in then and made his objection with regard to the non-transferability of the holding. Not having done so, he cannot be heard in this Court. His appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 70.—Then let us turn to this appeal. Here it is contended that there is no bar in law to a man's purchasing a share in a non-transferable occupancy holding. This is conceded, and it is open to the mortgagee to apply under section 47 as a representative of the judgment-debtor. But the mortgagee was admittedly a purchaser pendente lite and is, therefore, bound by all the equities enforceable against the judgment-debtor. Therefore, he is not competent now to raise the objection, which the judgment-debtor has been found incompetent to raise.

His appeal, therefore, must also be dismissed with costs.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

On 18th August 1919 D. entered into an agreement with S., the owner of an oil mill, for the purchase of 101 maunds of castor oil at Rs. 31-12-0 per maund to be delivered at Cawnpore in 8 days, S. despatched a portion of the oil on the 21st August and the remainder on the 23rd August to a firm at Cawnpore, and called upon D. to take delivery after having the oil weighed at the shop of that firm. D. failed to take delivery, and further refused a telegram from S, warning him that if he did not take delivery in 2 days the oil would be sold at the prevailing rate, and that he would be liable for damages caused by re-sale. On 13th September S. sold the oil for Rs. 26 a maund and brought the present suit to recover as damages the difference between the contract rate and the price realised by re-sale:

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the damages claimed, as the transaction did not amount to a complete sale, but was merely a contract to sell, that the sale could not have become complete until the quantity of the oil sold was separated and taken to Cawnpore and was weighed or was otherwise ready for delivery within the knowledge and with the consent of D. and that S. was merely entitled to the difference between the rate agreed and the market rate prevailing on the date of the breach. Application to revise the order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 1st December 1919.

Mr. H. N. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mukund Behari Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has a castor oil mill at Lucknow. On the 18th August 1919 the defendants agreed to purchase 101 maunds of castor oil from the plaintiff at Rs. 31-12 0 per maund to be delivered to them at Cawnpore and paid Rs. 101 as earnest money. The delivery of the oil was to be made in eight days.

The plaintiff despatched a portion of the oil on the 22nd August and the remainder on the 23rd August 1919, apparently to the address of a firm called Sidhgopal-Sheogopal at Cawnpore, and informed the defendants that they should get the oil weighed at the shop of that firm and take delivery. The defendants did not, however, take delivery. On the 4th September 1919 the plaintiff sent a telegram to the defendants, asking them to take delivery of the oil deposited with the firm of Sidhgopal-Sheogopal at Cawnpore within two days and warned them that if they did not do so, he would sell the oil at the prevailing rate and sue them for damages. The defendants refused to accept the telegram which came back undelivered.

On the 13th September 1919 the plaintiff sold the oil to Diwan Chand at Rs. 26 per maund. In the present suit he seeks to recover Rs. 493 2 0 as damages from the defendants after giving credit for the earnest money which he had received. The Court below dismissed the claim. Its finding is that inasmuch as the plaintiff had failed to prove the difference between the rate agreed and the market rate prevailing on the 26th August 1919, no damages could be awarded to him.

In order to determine whether the damages should be awarded according to the rate prevailing on the date of the breach of the contract of purchase or on the date on which the re sale took place, it is necessary to ascertain whether the sale of the oil was complete on the date on which the earnest money was paid. If it was a mere contract to sell, section 107 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) has no application, because as pointed out in Angulia & Co. v. Sassoon & Co. (1), no sale can be complete unless there is an ascertainment of the goods sold or an appropriation thereof by the vendor with the assent of the vendee. Section 80 of the Indian Contract Act provides that where, by a contract for the sale of goods, the seller is to do anything to them for the purpose of putting them into a state in which the buyer is to take them, the sale is not complete until such thing has been done. Section 82 declares that where the goods are not ascertained at the time of making the contract of sale, it is necessary to the completion of the sale that the goods shall be ascertained. The illustration appended to that section shows that if a person agrees to sell to another 20 tons of oil out of his cisterns, which at that time contain more than 20 tons, no portion of the oil in these cisterns becomes the property of the person who agrees to purchase, till that oil is ascertained or set apart by weighment or otherwise. Section 83 lays down that where the goods are not ascertained at the time of making the agreement for sale, but goods answering the description in the agreement are subsequently appropriated by one party for the purpose of the agreement and that appropriation is assented to by the other, the goods have been ascertained, and the sale is complete.

It is not possible to say whether the plaintiff had at his mill 101 maunds of castor oil on the date on which he entered into the contract of sale. Even if he had, the sale could not have become complete until the quantity to be sold was separated and taken to Cawnpore and was weighed or was otherwise ready for delivery within the knowledge and with the assent of the defendants. In Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (2) it was held that section 107 applied only to the purchaser subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase-money. In such a case the vendor is entitled to receive the difference between the contract price and the price fetched at the re-sale. In Jamal v. Mcolla Dawood Sons & Co. (3), where a certain person had agreed to purchase certain shares to be delivered by a certain date but subsequently refused to do so in consequence of the shares having since largely fallen in value, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed: "If the seller holds on to the shares after the breach, the speculation as to the way the market will subsequently go is the speculation of the seller, not of the buyer; the seller cannot recover from the buyer the loss below the market price at the date of the breach, if the market falls, nor is he liable to the purchaser for the profit, if the market rises." They pointed out that the decision in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (4) that the market value at the date of the breach was the decisive element was upheld in the House of Lords in Williams Brothers v. Ed. T. Agius Limited (5) and that though in the former case the breach was by the seller to deliver, the proposition was equally true where the breach was committed by the buyer. They further said that section 107 of the Contract Act dealt with cases where a seller had lien on goods or had stopped them in transit, but not where goods had not passed from the possession and ownership of the seller himself. In fact there can be no re-sale unless there has been a sale. Where there has been a contract, its rescission in certain circumstances gives the party injured by the breach a right of action under section 73 of the Contract Act. The decisions in Mcll Schutte & Co. v. Luchmi Chand (6) and Best v. Haji Muhammad Sait (7) do not apply, because in each of those cases a power of re-sale in case of refusal to take delivery was expressly reserved by the contract of sale. In Iraq Narain v. Mul Chand (8) and Basdeo v. John Smidt (9) there was a sale of specific goods which was complete in itself.

Here there was no complete sale. There was only a contract to sell and the plaintiff cannot consequently recover the difference between the contract price and the price fetched at the re sale which took place much later. As there is no evidence on the record to show what the market-rate was at Cawnpore on the date of the breach of the contract, the Court below is directed to determine, after taking such relevant evidence as the parties may adduce,

(1) What was the prevailing market-rate at Cawnpore on the date on which the contract was broker, namely, the 26th August 1919?

(2) To what damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

Two months' time will be allowed for a return of the findings and ten days from the date of the findings will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

Application against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 10th January 1920

JUDGMENT.

COUTIS, J.—This an application made in revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr directing Additional Court-fee to be paid.

An exactly similar case to the present one was decided by Roe and Jwala Prasad, JJ. in Bhubneshwari Prasad v. Mohan Lall (1). In that case, following the decision in Chandramani Koer v. Pasdeo Narain Singh (2), the learned Judges remarked that "although in Banke Behari v. Ram Bahadur (3) a Divisional Bench of this Court had interfered with an interlocutory order of this description, but generally the cursus curiæ of the Calcutta High Court and of this Court has always been not to take action under section 115, when there is another course open and no irremediable harm can be suffered by the interlocutory order." I agree with the view taken in the case of Bhubneshwari Prasad v. Mohan Lall (1) and for the reasons given in the case, which I have just quoted, I would dismiss the application with costs. U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 3 (1), 4 (12) (b)—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 2 (4)—Sir land, status of, whether affected by subsequent passing of Agra Tenancy Act—Interpretation of Statutes—"So far as may be", meaning of.

Land which has once acquired the status of "sir" before the Agra Tenancy Act came into force might lose its status by the passing of that Act and by the change of definition therein, if it does not satisfy the requirements of the new definition. [p. 65, col. 1.]

SHEOGHULAM KOERI v. PERMESHRI LAL.

A land is not "sir" within the meaning of section 4 (12) (b) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act if it was not in a proprietor's personal cultivation immediately before the commencement of that Act. [p. 651, col. 1.]

In interpreting a Statute, where there is no ambiguity in the language used, it must be accepted as it stands, and a Court is not justified in questioning whether the meaning conveyed by the language used was what was in reality intended by the Legislature. [p. 650, col. 2; p. 651, col. 1.]

The expression "so far as may be" in section 3 (1) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act or in section 2 (4) of the U. P. Tenancy Act means "unless a different intention appears from the wording of the Act itself" or "unless it would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act." [p. 651, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 2nd of June 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FEARD, S. M. (January 6, 1920).—The plot in suit was in 1311 recorded as the khudkasht of 31 years of the respondent with appellant as his sub-tenant of eleven years' standing. It is obvious from this that the plot had not been cultivated continuously for 12 years by the proprietor himself immediately before the commencement of the Land Revenue Act, III of 1901, on the 1st January 1902. For this reason the Assistant Collector decided that it was not sir within the definition of section 4 (12) (b) of the Land Revenue Act. It has not been suggested at any time that the land is sir under section 4 (12) (a) or section 4 (12) (c). The Assistant Collector, therefore, held the defendant-respondent to be an occupancy tenant. It is true that the land was recorded as sir at the recent settlement, but as the Assistant Collector points out, this was not a judicial decision and the entry was under Mahesh Prasad v. Radhika Prasad (1) subject to disproof. The Commissioner in first appeal has held that for the purposes of section 4 (12) (b), Land Revenue Act, if sir rights have been acquired at a previous time it is not necessary that the land should have been in the proprietor's personal cultivation for 12 years immediately before the commencement of the Tenancy Act, and he found that the proprietor had in fact required sir rights during the period of his recorded khudkasht cultivation before the respondent came on to the land as cultivator in 1299. The question, therefore, is whether those previously acquired but not recorded sir rights are to be disregarded because the proprietor had not continuously cultivated for 12 years immediately before the Tenancy and Land Revenue Acts of 1901 came into force on 1st January 1902. This view was held by the Board in Petition No. 185 of 1914-15 decided by Messrs. Holms and Campbell (2). They point out that if this view be not taken, the word "immediately" in the definition has no meaning. They refer to a previous decision in Petition No. 6 of 1905-7 Sukhnandan Singh v. Bhagwan Dat Dube (3), as showing that Sir Duncan Baillie had been of the same opinion, but, on reference to the decision they quote, I find that it was not Sir Duncan Baillie's decision but a decision of Messrs. Cruickshank and Reynolds, who discussed the point and came to the entirely opposite conclusion holding that section 3 (1) of the Land Revenue Act, III of 1901, and section 2 (4) of the Tenancy Act, II of 1901, distinctly preserve under these new Acts rights acquired under the old Act and that although the absoluteness of section 2 (4), Act II of 1901, is modified by the words "as far as may be" used later in this sub section, nevertheless sir rights acquired under the old Act would hold good under the new Acts notwithstanding the use of the word 'immediately' in this definition in section 4 (12) (b) of the new Revenue Act. They did not consider what was meant by inserting the word 'immediately' in this definition. So far from being of the opinion ascribed to him by Messrs. Holms and Campbell in their decision in Petition No. 185 of 1914-15, Sir Duncan Baillie seems to have followed Messrs. Cruickshank and Reynolds, for in Petition No. 8 of 1912-13, Baiju Ahir v. Musammat Lachhimia Koer (4), he distinctly held that land which has once acquired the status of sir before the Tenancy Act came into force cannot lose its status simply by the passing of the Tenancy Act and by the change of definition therein.

I have given the point careful consideration. I am of opinion that the earlier decisions were unsound and that the view taken by Messrs. Holms and Campbell in the later decision is correct. It is a well-known rule of interpretation that where there is no ambiguity in the language used, it must be accepted as it stands, and we are not justified in questioning whether the meaning conveyed by the language used was what was in reality intended by the Legislature. The words "immediately and before the commencement of this Act" were not in the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), and it must be presumed that they were deliberately inserted in the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901). The Legislature had power to alter the definition of "sir" so as to exclude land which under the old definition had acquired the character of sir, and we must take it that it deliberately did so. The wording of section 4 (12) of Act III of 1901 is absolutely clear and is capable of only one interpretation. Section 3 (1) of Act III of 1901 or section 2 (4) of Act II of 1901 do not help the respondent, as in both these sections there is also a saving clause, namely, "so far as may be". The words "so far as may be" can only be construed to mean "unless a different intention appears from the wording of the Act itself" or "unless it would be inconsistent with provisions of the Act," and we cannot regard them as overriding the precise wording of section 4 (12) (b) where the emphatic word "immediately" is used. The respondent, therefore, cannot claim that the land in suit is "sir" within the meaning of section 4 (12) (b), Act III of 1901, on the ground that it may have become his sir by many years of personal cultivation in the period antecedent to the introduction of Act III of 1901: the claim is barred by the fact that it was not in his personal cultivation immediately before the commencement of that Act.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and setting aside the Commissioner's appellate decision would restore the decision of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant throughout.

Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 41—Custom—General rule, whether abrogated by special custom—Appeal, second—Certificate, whether necessary.

Plaintiffs, the sister's son and grandson of one N, the last male owner, sued for a declaration that a gift made by defendant No. 1 in favour of one M, the deceased husband of defendant No. 2, shall not affect their reversionary rights, alleging that both under Hindu Law and by custom they were entitled to succeed to the property in suit. The Court, holding that the plaintiffs had established a special custom which entitled them to succeed to the property, decreed their claim. On appeal the District Judge held that the special custom had not been proved and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. An application for the grant of a certificate under the Punjab Courts Act was also dismissed. The plaintiffs filed a second appeal in the High Court:

Held, that the question for decision before the lower Appellate Court was whether the general rule of custom had been abrogated by a special custom and, therefore, no second appeal was competent without a certificate. [p. 652, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur and Kangra, at Hoshiarpur, dated the 26th March 1916, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Kangra, dated the 16th November 1914.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lalas Hargopal and Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Hargopal for the respondents that this appeal is not competent owing to the want of a certificate.

The plaintiffs appellants in the case sued for a declaration that a certain alienation by way of gift made in favour of one Mangu, the deceased husband of Musammat Omanpatti, the principal defendant respondent, would not affect their reversionary rights. The plaintiffs were the sister's son and grandson of Naurang, the last male owner, vide pedigree table (page 4 in the printed book). Their contention was that both under the Hindu Law and by custom they were entitled to succeed to the property in suit. The trial Court held that the plaintiffs had established a special custom which entitled them to succeed to the property and granted them a decree accordingly. On appeal the learned District Judge took a different view and held that the special custom set up had not been proved. The plaintiffs' suit was accordingly dismissed. An application was put in by them before the District Judge for the grant of a certificate under section 41 of the Panjab Courts Act relating to the special custom in question. This application was, however, dismissed on the 24th April 1916.

The preliminary objection must, in our opinion, prevail. A perusal of the judgment of the learned District Judge clearly shows that it has been held that the general custom prevalent in the province is that a sister's son and grandson have no locus standi to challenge an alienation of this nature. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri contended that this decision was wrong and had been arrived at on a question that was never properly before the lower Appellate Court. Reference was made to Nur Ali v. Bahawal (1) for the proposition that in such circumstances a second appeal was competent without a certificate. With this decision we have no quarrel, but we do not consider that it has any application to the case before us. The question for decision in the Court below was whether the general rule of custom by which sisters and their issue are usually excluded from succession had been abrogated by a special custom and, therefore, the question on which a decision was arrived at was properly before that Court. It may be that the decision is incorrect but an examination of it is not possible for want of the necessary certificate. We accordingly allow the preliminary objection and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Sister's son's son, adoption of, validity of—Adopted son, whether can succeed to occupancy rights.

Although the adoption of a sister's son's son may amount to a breach of caste custom, it nevertheless, is not illegal or void. [p. 653, col. 1.]

An adopted son can succeed to an occupancy right, and is not liable to ejectment as a non-occupancy tenant. [p. 653, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 9th of May 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—(December 19, 1919).—In this case the Commissioner has held that the adoption of the appellant by the last occupancy tenant, Ram Barat Rai, was invalid, the appellant being his sister's son's son (or son of his bhanja). This finding is disputed as a matter of law in this appeal, it being contended that there is no bar to the adoption of such a relation. It is admitted that the sister's son (father of the appellant) could not have been adopted, but it is pointed out that the prohibition only extends to the sister's son, mother's son, and daughter's son. This is based upon the precept of Hindu Law that a person should not be adopted whose mother the adoptive father could not himself have married.

I infer that the Commissioner laid stress on the clans to which the parties belonged. Ram Barat Rai was of the Kausik clan, while the adopted boy was a Sengar and the Commissioner's view seems to be that his mother being also a Sengar could not legally have been married to Ram Barat Rai, for a Kshattriya woman by custom must marry in a clan higher than her own. But this is only a custom of the caste and need not necessarily create a legal bar. I find that the principle of factum valet in the stronger case of the adoption of an only son of his father was upheld in an exhaustive judgment by the Privy Council in the case reported as SHWE HMAN v. MA E MYA.

Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma (1), although the adoption might be regarded as sinful. This judgment affirmed that of the Allahabad High Court Beni Prasad v. Hardai Bibi (2) in the same case to the same effect. Here if there had been a marriage between the adoptive father and the mother of the boy it would, at the worst, have been no more than a breach of caste custom or practice, and although the adoption may be held reprehensible among Kshattriyas, it would probably not be held sinful even by the opinion of the brotherhood. I cannot regard it as illegal and void.

It is settled law that an adopted son can succeed to an occupancy right and the appellant was not liable to ejectment as a non-occupancy tenant. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Commissioner, and restore that of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant in all Courts.

FERARD, S. M.—(December 20, 1919).—I agree, Ram Barat could have married the appellant's mother. It would not have been unlawful, though she was of a higher clan than Ram Barat and only one degree outside the incestuous bar. Ram Barat's adoption of appellant was, therefore, valid. In the case quoted by my colleague as analogous the outrage to Hindu feeling must have been considerably greater than in the present case but the Privy Council held the adoption legal.

MA E MYA AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Contract—Separate covenants, breach of, whether constitutes one cause of action—Suit in respect of one breach—Subsequent suit in respect of other breach, whether maintainable.

Where in a contract there are two covenants to be performed at different times, but both secured in the same manner, a breach of both the covenants constitutes one cause of action, and if a suit is brought in respect of one breach only, a subsequent suit in respect of the other breach is barred under rule 2 of Order II of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 656, col. 1.]

Mr. Ko Ko Gyi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Maung Gyi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants mortgaged a piece of land for Rs. 700 in Tabaung 1273 B. E., with the covenant that both principal and interest were to be paid in Tabodwe of the following year. Defendants through their Counsel allege before me that there was a subsequent oral agreement to the effect that interest was to be paid annually and the principal on demand. This was not alleged in the pleadings, nor has either of the lower Courts referred to it. Counsel further alleges that in a previous suit for the recovery of the third year's interest on the mortgage, the subsequent oral agreement was referred to. But I cannot see that the allegation was made in the same form as it has been before me. Under the circumstances I am bound to say that the alleged subsequent oral agreement cannot be allowed to be set up. But the fact remains that the plaintiffs did not foreclose the mortgage but went on receiving interest for two years, and when default was made in the payment of the interest for the third year, they sued and got a decree for it in Civil Regular No. 159 of 1915 of the Township Court of Myanaung. After that the defendants paid interest for two years more, and when they made default in the payment of the interest for the sixth year, the present suit for the principal and interest due on the mortgage was filed.

Both the lower Courts have held that the suit was barred under Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. The reason would seem to be that the plaintiff should have sued for the principal as well in the first suit as it also had fallen due.

Order II, rule 1, of the Code provides that "every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action," and further that "if a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted." The rule means that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising from one and the same cause of action, and not that every suit shall include every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant. It is clear that there may be different causes of action arising out of the same transaction, in which case the plaintiff may sue on any one of them and his subsequent suit on any one or all of the other causes of action will not be barred under the rule.

The law as stated above is perfectly simple, but it has often been found difficult to apply, owing to the difficulty of ascertaining what the cause of action is in a given case.

In this case there would seem to be two covenants, namely (1) to pay the principal in Tabodwe of the year following the year of the mortgage, and (2) to pay interest so long as the principal remains unpaid. At the date of the previous suit both the covenants had been broken and both the principal and interest had fallen due, but the plaintiff based his claim on one of the covenants only, namely, the covenant to pay interest. The covenants arise under one transaction, the contract of mortgage. If a breach of each covenant gives rise to a separate cause of action, the present suit does lie. If a breach of both the covenants constitutes but one cause of action, it is barred, because the plaintiff by suing for interest only in the previous suit had split up his cause of action.

In his commentaries on the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, in notes under section 43 (now Order II, rule 2), Hukm Chand says at page 535:—"Where there are more covenants than one in a contract which are to be performed at different times, the breach of each constitutes a single and independent cause of action on which a separate suit may be brought. When a suit is brought, however, on any contract after there has been a breach of several covenants, the breach of them all is considered a single cause of action. All the covenants to be performed before the suit is brought are deemed joined into one by the contract and the breach of all the covenants enforceable before that time deemed as one entire breach. And on a contract containing various undertakings the plaintiff suing for the breach of one is held thereby to waive his rights to the others."

So, both the covenants under the mortgage having already been broken at the date of the previous suit, plaintiff's cause of action then was the breach of both of them and he should have sued for all his remedies.

Hukm Chand, however, goes on to state at page 542:—"This principle is not applicable when the covenants are so different in their nature as to be considered separate contracts, in which case the breach of each covenant will be a separate cause of action. So also the breach of a covenant in a mortgage-bond to pay interest each year which covenant is not confined to the fixed period of the mortgage and is distinct from, and independent of, the claim of the mortgagee to recover the principal sum and the performance of which is secured in a different manner, gives rise to a distinct cause of action which can be sued upon without suing for the principal, and a decree obtained on such bond for overdue interest does not bar a subsequent suit to recover the principal and interest by sale of the mortgaged property." And he quotes as his authority for these remarks the case of Yashvant Narayan Kamat v. Vithal Divakar Parulekar (1).

In that case it was held that the covenant to pay the interest was separate and apart from the covenant to pay the principal, and the ground seems to me to be that the performance of the former covenant was secured in a different manner to the performance of the latter covenant. The material portion of the bond in that case was as follows:—"In security for the above (the principal sum) I mortgage the property . . , and as I have kept with me the possession of the property I have agreed to pay interest . . . and the period of this mortgage is fixed at five years. As to assessment . . . I will pay the same to Government directly, and I will continue to pay Rs. 75 every year as interest. In the year in which interest will remain unpaid I will deliver the property into your possession without any objection." The words I have italicised show the special way in which the performance of the covenant to pay interest was secured. That was the reason why it was held that the particular covenant to pay interest was considered as separable from the rest of the terms of the mortgage. This Bombay case is relied on by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff, but I am unable to see how that ruling covers the present case. Both the covenants in the present case are secured in the same manner, that is by the mortgaged property. There is no special security in favour of the one or the other. In my judgment the covenants cannot be said to be separable after their breach. I am strengthened in my view by the observations of Chatterji and Rattigan, JJ., in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2) with reference to the Bombay case. They say as follows:—"The learned Chief Justice draws a distinction in favour of allowing the claim to proceed on the ground that the covenant to pay interest, which was not confined to the fixed period of the mortgage, was distinct from, and independent of, the claim of the mortgagee to recover the principal sum, and its performance was secured in a different manner. 'Its breach....,' he says, 'gives rise to a cause of action which can be sued upon without suing for the principal.' If the distinction is well founded, which is not very clear to our minds, the case is not on all fours with the present case, and should be excluded from consideration." The facts of the Punjab case are similar to those before me. In that case when the suit for interest was brought, the whole of the principal sum had fallen due and both the principal and interest were secured by the mortgage, there being no special security in favour of the one or the other. It was held that a subsequent suit for the principal and interest was barred. The ground of the decision was that when several breaches of covenants made under one contract have occurred, the cause of action of the various breaches merges into one and renders it obligatory upon a plaintiff to include all claims to which he is entitled under his contract in one action. The principle laid down in this case was followed in another Punjab case (Rattigan and Shah Din, JJ.) reported as Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan (3). In that case the second suit was also for interest only. It was argued by Counsel that, although a suit for the principal may be barred, a suit for further interest on the covenant to pay interest was not barred, but the Court held that interest being accessory to the principal, it follows that a subsequent suit for interest, although accrued due after the decision of the previous suit, is equally barred.

In Hikmatullah Khan v. Imam Ali (4) the same principle was adopted. Straight, J., in whose judgment Brodhurst, J., concurred, observed on the apparent hardship upon the plaintiff entailed by his ruling:—"I cannot help saying in passing that I feel that the conclusion at which I have arrived will have the unfortunate result of enabling those defendants to escape from the payment of a debt which in all honour and conscience they undoubtedly owe to the plaintiff. But there is no rule of procedure which is founded in better reason and good sense than that which prohibits persons, who bring suits, from what is called splitting their demands."

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff relies very strongly upon Badi Bibi Sahibal v. Sami Pillai (5). But that case is distinguishable from the present, inasmuch as there the date agreed upon for the payment of the principal sum had not arrived when the previous suit for interest was filed. The bond was as follows:—"We (the obligors) shall pay interest at 7 per cent. per annum before the 30th October of each year; we shall pay in full the principal amount on 30th October 1878 after clearing off the interest and redeem this deed: should we fail to pay the interest regularly according to the instalments, we shall at once pay the principal together with the amount of interest." Default was made in the payment of interest in 1876, and in 1877 the plaintiff sued for the interest then due, expressly stating in the plaint that he agreed to accept payment of the principal and the subsequent years' interest at the times fixed in the deed, and he obtained a decree. The plaintiff in 1883 sued for both principal and interest. It was held that the suit was not barred under section 43 of the old Code. As regards the covenant to pay the principal and interest due, directly default was made in the payment of any year's interest, though the time fixed for the payment of the principal had not arrived at the time of the default, Muttusami Ayyar, J., observed as follows:—"The alternative provision in Schedule A is one that was inserted for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff. He had, therefore, an option to sue either for the first year's interest only or for the same together with the principal amount." I, therefore, hold that the Madras case does not apply.

In the result I would hold that the suit was barred under Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JAIKARAN SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Lease, construction of—Istimrari lease, duration of.

A lease, described as istimrari, which contains no specific clauses referring to succession and transfer, is good only for the lifetime of the lessee, and, by itself, is no defence to a notice of ejectment against the successors of the lessee.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 29th of May 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a case in which the plaintiff-respondents contested a notice of ejectment. For the purposes of this appeal it is sufficient to say that they relied upon a perpetual lease executed in 1867 and claimed that in any case the present rent is favourable.

There can be little doubt that the land was originally held under the Patta relied upon, but there is nothing in it to suggest that it was heritable or transferable. The only word in it which can suggest anything of the sort was istimrari, but it has been constantly held that in the absence of specific clauses referring to succession and transfer such a lease is good only for the lifetime of the lessee. The original lessee is admittedly dead and the plaintiffs-respondents are his successors by inheritance. In my opinion, therefore, the lease by itself is no defence to a notice to ejectment against the present plaintiffs.

There remains the question whether the rent is favourable. Both the parties are Thakurs and this alone is almost sufficient to raise a presumption of privilege in favour of the tenants, though apparently at the settlement no caste privilege was definitely recognised. The rent is, however, extremely low, the area in suit being more than 26 acres and the rent only Rs. 10-3-0, whereas the circle rate for the land to which the plots in suit belong is Rs. 9 per acre. On that basis the rent should be at least Rs. 24. The lower Courts have found as a fact that the rent is favourable within the definition of section 107 (i) of the Oudh Rent Act and the Commissioner has found as the same rent has prevailed for a long period, its lowness is not accidental but deliberate.

I find no reason to disagree with the Commissioner's finding and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Opium Act (I of 1878), s. 9—Sale of morphia to patients by approved medical practitioner without license—Offence.

An approved medical practitioner is entitled under the Bengal Morphia Rules to possess a certain quantity of morphia drugs for use in his practice but not for sale. A medical practitioner who sells morphia, which he has prescribed to one of his patients, without a license is liable to conviction under section 9 of the Opium Act. [p. 660, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Rangpur, dated the 8th July 1919.

FACTS will appear from the judgment of the First Court and the petition to the High Court.

The following is the judgment of the First Class Magistrate, Rangpur:—

"The case for the prosecution is that the accused sold, without any license, from his dispensary at Nawabganj, a certain quantity of morphia in the form of Liq. Morphia Hydro. and a certain quantity of opium in the form of Tinct. Opii in contravention of rules made and notified under section 5 of the Opium Act, Act I of 1878.

In connection with some other excise article, the dispensary premises of the accused were searched on the 14th June last and among other things, three prescriptions were seized, the first prescription, Exhibit 1, bears date 22nd May 1919 and contains the item Liq. Morphia Hydro. The second prescription, Exhibit 2, dated 13th June 1919, was for Tinct. Opii, while the third prescription, dated 5th June 1919, contains among other drugs Liq. Morphia Hydro.

Three charges have accordingly been framed against the accused under section 9 of Act I of 1878 and as the three offences were committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of these offences, they are being tried together at one trial under section 234 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Altogether 5 witnesses have been examined by the prosecution and no evidence has been called by the accused. In his statement before the Court the accused says that he is a qualified medical practitioner and the articles which are the subject matter of the present case were used by him for his own patients.

It may be remarked here in passing that in Notification No. 562 S. R., dated 2nd March 1918, under section 5 of the Opium Act, "Qualified medical practitioner" has been defined to mean "any person registered or who is entitled to be registered as medical practitioner under any Medical Act in force in India."

No evidence has been adduced to show that the accused has been registered or is entitled to be registered as aforesaid. The fact that he practises as a doctor is a presumption but certainly nothing more than a presumption in favour of a registrable qualification. Every medical practitioner is not a qualified medical practitioner under the Act.

It has been urged by the defence that the charge relating to the sale of Tinct. Opii, as per prescription, Exhibit 1, is sufficiently answered by rule 53 of the notification which runs as follows:—A qualified medical practitioner may use intoxicating drugs in the course of his practice or may compound or dispense the same for the use of his own patients for bona fide medical purposes.

As stated above, it is doubtful on the evidence before the Court whether the accused is a qualified medical practitioner in the sense intended by the Legislature. I am, however, inclined to give him the benefit of the doubt. P. W. No. 3 Hem Chandra Bhattacharjea has stated that the prescriptions are in the handwriting of the accused It is clear, therefore, that the accused can claim immunity under rule 53 quoted above.

In the rule just quoted "Intoxicating drugs" mean according to section 2 (10) of the Notification No. 562 S. R. "every preparation or admixture of opium or of the poppy but does not include smoking preparations morphia or its allied compounds or poppy heads." The rules relating to morphia are contained in Notification No. 561 S. R. dated 2nd March 1918 made and published under rule 5 of the Opium Act, 1878.

In these rules, hereinafter called the Bengal Morphia Rules, 1918, the provisions relating to sale are contained in sections 19 and 20. In these there is no provision corresponding to rule 53 of Notification No. 562 S. R. All sales under the Bengal Morphia Rules must be either by a licensed dealer or by a licensed chemist. No man can, therefore, sell morphia without a license.

The learned Pleader for the defence has placed a good deal of emphasis on provision 6 of the Bengal Morphia Rules which says "An approved practitioner may possess for use in his practice but not for sale morphia drugs not exceeding in the aggregate 120 grains."

It has been urged that "use in practice" is equivalent to "sale to his own patients." This contention the Court is unable to accept on the following grounds:—

First, the provision of rule 6 relates exclusively to the possession of morphia drugs and cannot in any way govern the substantive law relating to their sale which is regulated exclusively by the provisions of rules 19 and 20 under the heading V.—Sale.

Secondly, rule 6 states that "an approved practitioner may possess for use in his practice but not for sale," An emphatic distinction is made here between use in practice and sale. The argument that use in practice is a modified form of sale to one's own patients does not seem to be a sound one.

Thirdly, there is no provisions in the Bengal Morphia Rules corresponding to rule 53 of the Notification No. 562 S. R. If the Legislature intended to permit sale of morphia drugs by an approved practitioner to his own patients they would have provided for it explicity as they have done in the case of opium and intoxicating drugs.

Fourthly, rule 53 of the Notification No. 562 S. R. provides for

(1) Use in practice,

(2) Compounding for the use of one's own patients.

(3) Dispensing for the use of one's own patients.

A clear distinction has been made between case No. (1) and the other two cases. It would be logical to follow this distinction in interpreting rule 5 of the Bengal Morphia Rules.

Lastly, it is easy to note the distinction between use in practice and serving on a prescription to a man's patient. The former comprises cases where morphia administered to a patient on the spot, e.g., in surgical operations or injunctions by the medical attendant. In the latter case it is a matter of pure chance that the prescribing doctor happens to have a dispensary of his own. His duty as a physician ends with drawing up the prescription. The patient is at liberty to obtain the medicine in the usual course at a chemist's shop duly licensed to sell under the Act.

Sale of morphia, therefore, without a license is clearly a contravention of the Bengal Morphia Rules, and as such punishable under the Act.

The prescriptions, Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 1 (2), show that morphia was supplied from the dispensary of the accused. The accused has not shown by the production of his account books or by examining his patients that no consideration passed for the supply of these drugs and the presumption is that they were not given away free of charge. On one of the prescriptions Exhibit 1 (2) is entered the word gratis. This is a piece of rebutting presumption on which the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. But the fact that no such entry is made on the other prescription, Exhibit 1, is a strong presumption that its contents were not supplied gratis. Morphia Hydro, was certainly sold on this prescription Exhibit 1 dated 22nd May 1919. P. W. No. 2 says that accused has no license. No license has been hitherto produced. The accused is, therefore, found guilty on this charge under section 9 of Act I of 1878 and sentenced to pay a fine of rupees fifty only, in default one week's simple imprisonment.

The accused is acquitted in respect of the remaining two charges."

An appeal to the Sessions Court having been rejected, the accused applied in revision to the High Court.

The following are the material portions of the petition :—

"That the petitioner is a qualified and leading medical practitioner in the town of Rangpur, where he has kept up a persistently honest reputation during the last 16 years of his practise and been elected to represent the locality on the Municipal Board.

2. That on the 14th June last the Superintendent and some other officers of the Excise Department raided his dispensary, held a search at which the petitioner rendered ungrudging assistance and took into custody three prescriptions dated respectively 22nd May 1919, 13th May 1919 and 5th June 1919.

3. That three test cases were then started against the petitioner under section 9 of the Opium Act and the petitioner was acquitted in such two of them as related to the last two of the said prescriptions.

4. That the prescription dated 22nd May 1919 was drawn up for one of the petitioner's patients who had undergone a surgical operation and was couched substantially in the following terms :—

R1. Liqr. Morphia Hydrochlor. m. X.
Aqua ... ... cz. 1V.
One dose to be taken as directed.

R2. Absorbent cotton 1 Packet.

5. That the total quantity of morphia contained in the said Recipe No. 1 was equivalent to the eleventh part of a grain, that the market price thereof is half a pice and that the price levied for the said prescription which had been served at the petitioner's dispensary was eight annas only.

6. That the charge formulated against petitioner in regard to the said prescription was that he had accepted consideration for the said item of morphia contrary to the provisions of the Bengal Morphia Rules.

7. That the prosecution furnished no evidence which could establish that the said sum of 8 annas or any part thereof was appropriated against the price of the said morphia.

8. That the learned Magistrate who tried the petitioner on the said charge discussed the law on the subject without properly considering in detail the evidence on record, and convicted the petitioner under section 9 of the Opium Act and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or in default to undergo one week's simple imprisonment.

9. That the petitioner thereupon moved the learned Sessions Judge of Rangpur for a reference to this Hon'ble Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code.

10. That the learned Sessions Judge held that the question of law was not free from doubt but accepting the interpretation placed thereon by the trying Magistrate refused the said motion on 2nd September 1919.

12. That being aggrieved by the said conviction and sentence the petitioner begs to move your Lordships on the following, amongst other,

GROUNDS.

I. For that in the absence of any evidence proving that the said sum of eight annas or any part thereof was charged against the price of morphia contained in the said prescription, the learned Magistrate has erred in law in convicting the petitioner under section 9 of Act I of 1878,

II. For that the market price of the said morphia being only half a pice, the learned Magistrate ought to have found that the said sum of eight annas was accepted as the price of the absorbent wool.

III. For that the facts found do not warrant a conviction under section 9 of the Opium Act.

IV. For that the interpretation put upon the word 'Use' in the Morphia Rules is too narrow and is not borne out by the context and by the frame of the Act.

V. For that learned Magistrate ought to have held that the said term included both use for consideration and use for no consideration and that the real limitation enacted by the clause in question was directed as against the class of persons to whom a qualified medical practitioner could sell morphia.

VI. For that the learned Magistrate ought to have held that there was no infringement of the opium rules by the petitioner.

VII. For that having regard to the bona fide manner in which the petitioner acted throughout the search and the trial and the uniform reputation for honesty and rectitude that the petitioner has borne during the course of his long practice, and to the almost negligible value of the morphia used and alleged to have been charged for, the sentence passed upon the petitioner is too severe."

Babu Girija Prosonna Sanyal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been granted limiting it to the ground that "the facts found do not warrant a conviction under section 9 of the Opium Act." The facts found are that the accused sold morphia as evidenced by his prescription, dated the 27th May 1919. And that it was not supplied gratis.

We think that the Magistrate was right in convicting the accused. We consider his judgment to be good and very well considered. Rule 6 expressly states that an approved practitioner may possess morphia for use in his practice but not for sale. The Magistrate is quite right in saying that there is a clear distinction between use in practice and sale to one's patients. We agree with the view expressed by him.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged and the conviction and sentence affirmed.

Rule discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 80—Perjury, trial for—Prosecution, duty of—Recital in judgment, whether can take the place of deposition—Admissibility of recital—Sanction to prosecute, refusal to grant by trial Court—Sessions Judge, interference by, when justified.

In a prosecution under section 193, Penal Code, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove conclusively that the statement made by the accused was necessarily a false statement. [p. 661, col. 1.]

The recital in a judgment of a statement made by a witness cannot take the place of a record of the deposition of the witness, nor can such recital be accepted as evidence under section 80 of the Evidence Act, and it, therefore, cannot form the basis of a prosecution under section 193 of the Penal Code. [p. 662, col. 1.]

Where a trial Court which has the advantage of seeing a witness in the box, and is cognisant of the full facts in connection with the case, refuses to sanction the prosecution of the witness, the Sessions Judge should not, unless a clear case is made out against the witness, too readily adopt a different view and grant sanction. JUDGMENT.

JAWALA PRASAD, J.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 193, Indian Penal Code, of having made falsely the following statement:—"There was no dispute in survey between me and the accused in respect of this orchard. Before the Attestation Officer, I did not say that the deed was a farzi one."

Nirghin Mahton, the petitioner, gave his evidence as a prosecution witness in a criminal case brought against Misri Lal by one Bulaki Sahu under section 323, Indian Penal Code, before Babu Dharikshan Singh, Deputy Magistrate, on 4th April 1919. In cross-examination on behalf of Misri Lal, he admitted having executed a sale-deed in favour of Misri Lal in respect of an orchard for Rs. 100 and denied that this sale-deed was a farzi one. Being further cross-examined he made the statement quoted above. The passage consists of two distinct statements. The Courts below have held that both the statements are false. The learned Sessions Judge has dealt with them together. I would prefer to deal with them separately.

As to the first statement—"There was no dispute in survey between me and the accused in respect of this orchard"—it is clear from the statements both by Misri Lal and Qanoongo Ram Gobind Sahay (P. W. No. 3) that there was no dispute between the petitioner and Misri Lal during the survey. Misri Lal clearly states that there was no tanaza at the time of khanapuri which took place 2 years ago (1917) and that the petitioner filed a tanaza (dispute) for the first time on the occasion of the attestation in 1919. Qanoongo Ram Gobind Sahay also says the same thing. He clearly states that the survey operations terminated with the stage of khanapuri in the year 1917 and that the dispute was filed at the attestation. He says that up to the stage of khanapuri it is survey operation and the subsequent stages are the settlement operations. He, therefore, makes a clear distinction between the survey and the settlement stages. No doubt the petitioner filed a tanaza at the attestation after the settlement stage had commenced, and the survey operations had ceased two years before that in 1917. The Courts below also recognized this distinction, but overruled the contention of the accused by the observation that these people generally understand by the word 'survey' the whole operation. When there is a distinction between the survey and the settlement stages as is recognized by the expert witness Qanoongo, the accused may fairly contend that he was strictly true in his statement "there was no dispute in survey between me and the accused in respect of this orchard." There is no evidence on the record that the people generally understand by the word 'survey' the attestation stage also which is a part of settlement operations, much less is there any evidence that the accused actually did understand so by the word 'survey' or that he was not making the distinction which actually exists between survey and settlement operations. Moreover, the statement quoted above was made in answer to a question in cross examination and apparently the question must have been—Was there any dispute between him and the accused in survey—and if the answer of the accused was "no," the above statement would appear in the form in which it finds place in the evidence of the accused. The question then arises in what sense the learned cross-examiner used the word 'survey,' whether he used it in the technical sense in which it is used by the survey authorities, or in the more popular sense. There is no evidence on the record of this case as to the meaning of the word 'survey' in the question put by the cross-examiner. It lay upon the prosecution to prove conclusively that the statement in question made by the accused was necessarily a false one. The prosecution has, to my mind, failed to discharge this onus and the accused cannot be convicted upon a dubious interpretation of the word 'survey.' The prosecution has, therefore, failed to prove that the statement in question was necessarily false.

As to the second statement, namely, "Before the Attestation Officer, I did not say that the deed was a farzi one," its falsity rests entirely upon the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer, dated the 15th January 1919, Exhibit A, in the body of which at one place the following passage occurs:—

"Nirghin Mahton 1st party who says that the sale deed, dated the 2nd December 1913, in favour of Isri Lal is a farzi one and does not substantiate it by any evidence."

It is obvious that the above is not a record of the verbatim statement or a translation of the verbatim statement made by accused on an examination of him by the Attestation Officer. The Attestation Officer during his investigation might have put some question to the petitioner and he might have made some statement to him. It is not clear whether the above passage in the judgment of the Attestation Officer is quoted from the statement of the petitioner actually made before him, or it is a statement of the petitioner's case taken from the dispute list prepared by the Qanoongo five days before the judgment of the Attestation Officer. In any case, the recital in the judgment cannot certainly take the place of a record of the deposition of the petitioner. The Qanoongo admits that there is no record by the Attestation Officer that the petitioner was examined on solemn affirmation or that his deposition was explained to him. He is positive that the deposition was not signed by the accused. Apparently the Qanoongo himself does not remember, and cannot possibly be expected to remember, the exact statement made by the witness when he himself did not examine the petitioner or record his statement. He does not pretend to know the exact words in his examination-in-chief and it is clear that he has simply to rely upon the passage quoted above in the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer in order to prove what the statement of the petitioner was before the latter officer. This is clear from the following statement in his cross-examination on behalf of the petitioner:—

"Nirghin stated before the Attestation Officer that the sale-deed which he had executed in favour of Isri Lal was a farzi one".

It is the case of the prosecution that the word "Isri" in the above statement is not that of the petitioner. According to the Qanoongo the above is a faithful record of what the petitioner stated before the Assistant Settlement Officer, for he does not say that the petitioner stated Misri Lal, and that the Assistant Settlement Officer by mistake recorded 'Isri Lal.' If the Qanoongo is correct, then the case of the prosecution has no legs to stand on. The Courts below, however, explain it away by holding that Isri Lal must be a mistake for 'Misri Lal.' Be that as it may, the record of the statement of the petitioner in the judgment is not very faithful. It does not purport at all to be a deposition of the petitioner, for the recital above is incomplete. It has not been proved by the best evidence in the case, namely, that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, who recorded it, and in a case of this kind it is not permissible to prove the statement by secondary evidence, such as that of the Qanoongo. What was stated by the witness to the Assistant Settlement Officer could only be proved by him or by a record of the deposition of the petitioner with all the formalities required by law. The recital in the judgment cannot be accepted as evidence under section 80 of the Evidence Act. Besides, the attention of the petitioner was not drawn to the statement in question while he was being cross-examined in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate Babu Dharikshan Singh, when he is supposed to have made a contrary statement, and no chance was given to him to explain it or to correct himself, for it was open to the petitioner to correct himself at any stage of his examination before Babu Dharikshan Singh. The learned Assistant Government Advocate concedes that the attention of the petitioner was not drawn to the previous statement said to have been made by him on the strength of which the petitioner has been convicted. It is obvious that the attention could not have been drawn to it because the dispute list itself was not in the hands of the cross-examiner at the time when the statement in question, the subject-matter in charge, was made by the accused. The tanaza and the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Exhibit 2, were filed in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate on the 15th April 1919, while the witness was examined on the 4th April 1919. It has not, therefore, been proved in this case that the second statement also, namely, "Before the Attestation Officer I did not say that the deed was a farzi one" made by the petitioner before Babu Dharikshan Singh is false.

The result is that the conviction of and the sentence passed against the petitioner must be set aside and the fine, if already paid, should be refunded.

It may not be out of place to allude here to the way in which the prosecution was started in this case. The Deputy Magistrate before whom the petitioner was examined refused to give sanction to Misri Lal to prosecute the petitioner for perjury on very strong grounds, namely, that there was no mala fide intention on the part of the petitioner in making the statement in question, that Misri Lal was a man of fighting temperament, and sanction was applied for to wreak vengeance on the petitioner who had ventured to depose against him and finally that the case was not a fit one in which sanction should be given. The learned Sessions Judge, to whom Misri Lal appealed against the order of the Magistrate refusing sanction, agreed with the Magistrate that it was not a fit case in which sanction should be given to the complainant, but he himself directed the prosecution of the accused under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No doubt discretion is vested in the Sessions Judge to direct prosecution under section 476 of the Code and this Court declined at that stage to interfere with that discretion. It is clear, however, that the learned Sessions Judge would have been well advised if he had used his powers sparingly in this case. When the trial Court, which had the advantage of seeing the petitioner in the box and was cognizant of the full facts in connection with the case in which the petitioner was examined, did not think it right to give sanction for prosecution, the learned Sessions Judge should have been chary in taking a different view unless the case was clearly made out against the petitioner. He had the record with him and had he fully considered the matter, he would not have perhaps himself started the prosecution in this case. There was at least a clear case of doubt as to whether the statement made by the accused was false and the benefit of the doubt should have been given to the petitioner and he should not have been put on his trial on an off chance of conviction.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

MAHOMED HOSAIN—APPLICANT

versus

MA PWA HNIT—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Muhammadan Law—Maintenance, order for—Divorce, effect of—Period for which order effective.

A Muhammadan wife obtained an order for maintenance, and applied to the Court for the recovery of arrears due thereunder. The husband pleaded that he had divorced her, and was, therefore, no longer bound by the order. The wife denied knowledge of the divorce, which she alleged was pronounced in her absence and which come to her knowledge only when her husband raised the plea:

Held, that the order of maintenance would become inoperative on the expiration of the divorced wife's iddat, and that, in this case, that period should not be deemed to have expired until the expiry of three months from the date on which she was made cognisant of the divorce. [p 664, col. 1.]

Mr. Rahman, for the Applicant.

Mr. Vakharia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Mahomed Hosain was ordered on the 17th November 1917 to pay Rs. 25 a month for the maintenance of his wife Ma Pwa Hnit and Rs. 15 a month for the maintenance of his three children by her. On the 12th August 1918 Ma Pwa Hnit applied to the Magistrate for the recovery of arrears of maintenance money on the above order. On the 3rd September 1918 the applicant filed a petition pleading that he had divorced her on the 19th July 1918 and, therefore, that he was no longer bound to pay for her maintenance. The Magistrate held that there was no valid divorce and he dismissed the applicant's petition. The applicant then filed a petition in the Sessions Court in revision, and the learned Sessions Judge has submitted the proceedings to this Court with his opinion that the applicant divorced the respondent according to Muhammadan Law on the 19th July 1918 and that he was entitled to have the maintenance order cancelled on the expiry of three months from that date, i.e., the expiry of the period of iddat.

Both parties were represented by Counsel at the hearing of the case in this Court. For the respondent it is not now urged that the divorce is invalid, but it is urged that the wife was not cognizant of the talak which was pronounced in her absence, and secondly, that the respondent was not shown to be in a state of "purity" at the time of its pronouncement.

The applicant's case was that although the talak was pronounced in the respondent's absence, she was informed of the divorce by letter. She denies receiving any letter about it and it cannot be held that she did receive such a letter. The law is clear that the repudiation to be effective must come to the wife's knowledge, and it cannot be held in this case that she became cognizant of it till the 3rd September 1918 when the applicant filed his petition against the continuance of the maintenance order.

The condition as to "purity" appears to be essential in the case of Shias, but not in the case of Mahomedans governed by the Hanafi School of Law (vide Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, Volume 2, page 56). The parties in this case are said to be Sunnis, i.e., belonging to the Hanafi School. But, in any case, it has never been pleaded by the respondent that she was not in a state of "purity" at the time of the divorce. It is a matter specially within her own knowledge, and in the absence of any plea to the contrary I think it is right to assume that she was in a state of "purity."

According to the ruling in the Allahabad case of Din Muhammad, In the matter of the petition of (1) which was followed in Maung Ba Shwe v. Ma Nyun (2), the order of maintenance does not become inoperative until the expiration of the divorced wife's iddat or term of probation. In the present case the iddat should not be deemed to have expired until the expiry of three months from the date on which Ma Pwa Hnit was made cognizant of the divorce, viz., three months from the 3rd September 1918. Her maintenance is, therefore, payable by the applicant up to the 3rd December 1918.

The order of the 1st Additional Magistrate, Wakema, dated 24th February 1919, in Criminal Miscellaneous Case No 48 of 1918, is modified accordingly; that is to say, the applicant must continue to pay his wife's mainterance up to 3rd December 1918. The payment of Rs. 25 for the wife should cease from that date, the original order for maintenance continuing only as regards the monthly payment of Rs. 15 for the three children.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 29 OF 1920.

April 28, 1920.

REKHA AHIR—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case—Apprehension against fair and impartial trial—Delay in examining complainant—Disregard of preliminaries prescribed by Code, effect of.

In dealing with applications for the transfer of cases each case must be decided upon its own circumstances. [p. 666, col. 1.]

It is not every kind of apprehension that will entitle an accused person to a transfer of the case against him; there must, upon the record, be reasonable grounds for apprehending that the trial would not be fair and impartial. Inordinate delay in examining the complainant, or a disregard of the preliminaries prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure for dealing with complaints, and awaiting the consideration of the evidence in another case with which the accused has no concern, in order to decide whether any action should be taken upon the complaint, are matters which afford reason to the accused to apprehend that he will not have a fair and impartial trial, and such a case is a proper one in which to direct a transfer. [p. 666, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Chapra, dated the 9th March 1920, refusing to transfer a case pending against the petitioner in the Court of the Sub Deputy Magistrate, Gopalganj.

FACTS appear from the following order of the Deputy Magistrate, Gopalganj, dated the 3rd March 1920.

"Accused Rekha Ahir only appears. The service report of summonses against the remaining accused read: they have been hung up and served. The learned Pleader on behalf of the present accused raises the question of my jurisdiction in trying the case on the following grounds:—

1. That the summons was not issued on hearing the complainant on examination but upon the evidence of the other case and that this Court has taken cognizance of the complaint under section 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code, and if it has not, the examination of complainant was necessary.

2. That his case, according to my order dated 30th January 1920 should have been seen after the disposal of the other case and as such the order passed on 19th February was illegal.

(3) That the complainant should have been examined at once and not after a long time on 21st February.

The cognizance of this complaint, the protest petition being treated as complaint, was already taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and I have no such power as a Subordinate Magistrate. I examined the complainant under section 200, clause (c), as this must be done according to my interpretation and impression. The evidence of the other case led me to hold that there is a prima facie case against the accused in this case. I think the time taken to consider and pass the orders dated 19th February and 21st February acted as a substitute of a preliminary enquiry for proceeding with a trial. The order dated 30th January was not a judgment and I think I am entitled to review it, being an ordinary order of this proceeding. The time taken is not long, as the full facts in the written statement of the accused in the other case were given on 14th February and the case diary was not shown to me till I heard the argument. I find that the grounds urged are not sound and legally justified."

Messrs, A. B. Mukherjee and Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—Upon the information of one Kuldip Rai, lodged on 15th November 1919, two occurrences were disclosed: one between himself and Chandra Khan in the field of the latter judgment-debtor, and the other between the complainant's men and some other persons in Bishunpura Bazar. The complaint in both the cases was one and the same, but the place of occurrence and the accused were different in both the cases.

The Sub-Inspector submitted his report in respect of both the occurrences, holding that the first occurrence was proved in respect of which he submitted a charge-sheet, and that the second was not proved.

The accused in the first case were upon the charge-sheet put on their trial and the case was made over to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Gopalganj for disposal. The witnesses for the prosecution in that case were examined between the 27th and the 29th November. On the latter date, the complainant put in a petition, before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gopalganj, expressing his dissatisfaction with the report of the Police as regards the second occurrence. That complaint was transferred to the same Deputy Magistrate who was holding trial in the first case, for disposal.

On the 30th January the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, without examining the complainant, ordered the case to be put up after the disposal of the first case. The arguments in the first case finished on the 14th February. On the 19th February the Magistrate made the following order in the second case:—

"Considered the evidence in the other case. Issue notice to Kuldip Rai to appear on 21st February 1920 for his examination."

On the 21st February, the complainant was examined on oath, and the accused in that case was summoned under sections 147 and 323, Indian Penal Code, fixing the 3rd March for hearing. That was the date fixed for the delivery of judgment in the first case, but the judgment was not delivered and was adjourned to 18th March.

The accused in the second case objected to the trial of their case on the ground that cognizance was not properly taken and that they were summoned not upon the merits of the complaint, nor upon any enquiry held under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but that they were summoned upon the impression of the Magistrate on the evidence recorded in the first case with which the accused in the second case had no concern.

The Magistrate overruled this contention, observing as follows :—"The evidence of the other case led me to hold that there is a prima facie case against the accused in this case. I think the time taken to consider and pass the orders dated 19th February and 21st February acted as a substitute of a preliminary enquiry for proceeding with a trial."

It is thus clear that but for what was disclosed in the trial of the first case the Magistrate would not have thought of taking any action upon the complaint in the second case.

The petitioners moved this Court against the order of the Magistrate summoning them, on the ground that it was illegal. That petition was summarily rejected. They then made the present application for transfer of the case to the file of some other Magistrate. This application was admitted and has now been put up for hearing. I have, therefore, to consider whether there is sufficient ground for transferring the case from the file of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate to that of some other Magistrate.

The petitioner urges that there is reasonable ground for his apprehension that he will not receive a fair trial at the hands of the Magistrate. The learned Assistant Government Advocate strenuously opposes this application. In support of his contention, he cites the authority of Amrit Mondal v. Emperor (1) decided by a Bench of this Court. That decision related to a counter case and it was held there that there was no reasonable ground for apprehension, merely because the Judge in a former case had expressed certain views as to which of the two versions was correct. The learned Vakil on behalf of the applicant distinguishes that case from the present one upon the ground that the case on the evidence of which the Magistrate summoned the accused was not a counter-case to the present one.

Without expressing any opinion as to whether this distinction is real or otherwise, I think that in a case of transfer each case is to be decided upon its own circumstances. It is true that every kind of apprehension will not entitle an accused person to a transfer of his case, but that upon the record there must be reasonable ground for an apprehension that the trial would not be fair and impartial. In the present case the Magistrate had inordinately delayed the examination of the complainant when the complaint was transferred to him on the 30th January. The Code requires that the complainant should be examined as soon as the complaint is presented, though there is no limit of time prescribed for it, and when a complaint is transferred under section 192 of the Code to another Magistrate without the complainant having been examined by the Magistrate taking cognizance of it, the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred is equally required to forthwith reduce the examination of the complainant on oath to writing. If the Magistrate had then examined the complainant, he would have been in a position to determine solely upon the merits of the complaint whether the accused should or should not be summoned, and if he had distrusted in any way the truth of the case he would have started an enquiry under section 202 of the Code. There was absolutely no reason for the Magistrate to disregard these preliminaries prescribed by the Code and to await the consideration of the evidence in another case in order to decide whether any action should or should not be taken upon the complaint in question. And when after a lapse of three months after the first information was lodged, which the Police on local inspection had reported to be untrue, and when long after the complaint was filed in Court, the Magistrate suddenly, upon something that transpired in a case with which the accused had no concern, thinks of starting a prosecution against the accused and summoning him without in any way enquiring as to the truth or otherwise of the belated complaint, it cannot be said that the accused had not reason to apprehend that the Magistrate was unduly prejudiced against him. The other case was over on the 14th February and the Magistrate had considered the evidence in that case so far as the charge against the present accused was concerned, yet he did not like to let the accused know his own views of the evidence, by delaying the delivery of his judgment in that case and putting it off from day to day until three months have already elapsed. Why this concealment from the accused? The accused was entitled to know the clear views of the Magistrate upon the evidence in the other case which led him to believe the truth of the present complaint. If the judgment in that case were delivered, the accused would perhaps have been in a better position to judge of the ground upon which the Magistrate acted in that case for summoning him in the present case. He would then have been perhaps in a better position to meet the grounds upon which the evidence in that case was held by the Magistrate to bear upon the truth or otherwise of the present case.

These grounds may not be sufficient to impugn any real bias in the mind of the Magistrate against the petitioner, yet they are sufficient to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused as to his receiving fair and impartial trial.

To my mind, strong grounds have been made out for the transfer of this case, and I, therefore, direct that this case be heard by some other Magistrate available at Gopalganj, or by any other Magistrate near that Sub-Division either at Sewan or at Chapra, to be selected by the District Magistrate of Saran.

SUNDAR SINGH AND ANOTHER—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Approver—Statement made at end of trial, value of—Corroboration—Statements extorted by Police under threat of implication, value of.

An approver's evidence is in itself tainted evidence though in some cases it may be worthy of belief for various reasons, but the uncoroborated statement of an approver taken at the end of the trial is of no value whatever. [p. 668, col. 2.]

Statements of witnesses extorted by the Police under threats of implication in the crime cannot fail to detract from the value of their evidence, especially where they had no reason for refraining from deposing against the culprits. [p. 668, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 26th February 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Diwan Chand Saini, for the Appellants.

Mr. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Sessions Judge of Gurdaspur, agreeing with the Assessors, has convicted Sundar Singh and Harnam Singh of the murder of one Udham Singh on the night of the 13th of October last and has sentenced them to be hanged. We have heard their appeals argued exhaustively by Mr. Tek Chand and the sentences of death are also before us for confirmation. The third accused in the same case, Hazara Singh, became an approver after the conclusion of the prosecution evidence and was discharged.

Briefly the story for the prosecution is that the two brothers, Sundar Singh, and Harnam Singh, had been much troubled in civil and criminal litigation by Udham Singh. There had been one criminal case between them in which some of the family of the accused were fined under section 323 in 1914, and there had been three pre-emption cases of which one was pending on the date of the murder. On the day before the murder a Local Commissioner had visited the village in order to ascertain the cost of a well sunk on the land in dispute, and on this occasion abusive language is said to have passed between the parties. Embittered by this litigation the two brothers, Sundar Singh and Harnam Singh, are said to have determined to remove their troublesome enemy and to have obtained the assistance of their cousin Hazara Singh. They, therefore, visited his bara where he was sleeping, early in the night, and after killing him there took his body on a mare to the river, some ten miles away, and cut it up in small pieces and threw it in the river. Their crime was witnessed by four persons, Amir chowkidar, Kharak Singh, Natha Singh, and Gurbattu. There was also much other evidence produced of persons who saw them going to and coming back from the river after the occurrence, and there was also evidence of the discovery of the bones of the deceased and of other articles belonging to him or to the murderers. Finally there was a detailed statement of the approver. Mr. Tek Chand has in very scathing language criticised the whole of this evidence and asks us to hold that it is false from the beginning to the end. He does not, however, seriously press his ground of appeal that Udham Singh has not been murdered. The whole of the case, as Mr. Herbert for the Crown admitted, depends upon the credibility of the eye-witnesses and the approver and we will, therefore, begin by examining their evidence. At the time of the murder the moon had apparently just risen and it was easy, therefore, for persons well acquainted with the accused to recognise them from a short distance. There were several people sleeping in the vicinity and of these four are said to have been awakened by the noise and to have seen the murderers. As is shown by the plan, the witnesses were standing round the scene of the occurrence. None of them interfered and the accused were able to take away the body unmolested. Immediately after their departure the relations of the deceased, lambardars and other villagers arrived and after some sort of pursuit Lachman Singh, the first cousin of the deceased, went with Amir chowkidar and others to report the case to the Police. Inspite, however, of the presence of the alleged eye-witnesses on the spot before his departure and his knowledge which he must have obtained from them, he made a report that his suspicion fell upon nine persons among whom the three accused were included. This statement was not contradicted by Amir chowkidar, who was present. It is suggested that Amir and other witnesses did not disclose their knowledge out of fear. We find it difficult, however, to accept this theory as the culprits had long departed, and as none of the eye-witnesses, except Gurbattu, were well disposed to the accused. The above circumstances are in no way in favour of their credibility, and our distrust of their evidence is further increased by the circumstances in which they came forward to give their evidence. According to the statements of the witnesses themselves, none of them disclosed their knowledge on the arrival of the Police and eventually only after some Police pressure. It may be noted that no proper invetigation began till the 15th. Natha Singh says that he made his statement on the 16th. Kharak Singh says that he did not speak out till 4 or 5 days after the occurrence, and then only after having denied all knowledge and after having been threatened by the Sub-Inspector of Police that he himself would be implicated unless he made a statement. The same was the case with Gurbattu. The zimnis show that Natha Singh and Kharak Singh made their present statements on the 16th, and this is probably correct, but there is no information on the record to this effect as although the Sub-Inspector says he enquired from them on this date, he does not say that they made their present statements on the 16th. The fact that the statements of the witnesses were extorted by the Police under threats of implication in the crime cannot fail to detract from the value of their evidence and this is especially the case when none of them, except, perhaps, Gurbattu, had any reason for refraining from deposing against the culprits. As for Amir chowkidar, it is obvious that his present statement is worthless and it has been rightly discarded by the Court below. We notice also that on the 15th he said to the Police that he had seen four murderers but could not identify them.

The Sessions Judge did not trust Gurbattu and we agree with his opinion regarding this witness. He, however, believed Kharak Singh and also Natha Singh to a modified extent. We do not believe Natha Singh to any extent, as he is badly disposed towards the accused and would certainly have spoken against them at once. We are not also inclined to trust Kharak Singh in view of the first report, and his subsequent denial of all knowledge, and the fact that he made his final statement under Police pressure.

We do not believe any of the eye-witnesses, and there remains the statement of the approver made, as we have mentioned, at the conclusion of the trial. He was aware of the statements made by the witnesses and whatever his previous knowledge, he was in a position to make the statement which he did, and he had every inducement to make it. His statement threw no new light on the case and no material corroboration of it was possible. An approver's evidence is in itself tainted evidence, though in some cases it may be worthy of belief for various reasons, but we hold without hesitation that the uncorroborated statement of an approver taken at the end of the trial is and must be of no value whatever, and we have some difficulty in understanding why the Sessions Judge tendered a pardon to Hazara Singh.

The evidence of the eye-witnesses and the approver being disbelieved, it is obvious that the prosecution case must fail, but there are some other pieces of evidence relied on by the Sessions Judge which require a brief discussion. In the first place Sundar Singh is said to have pointed out the place where the body of the victim was cut up into pieces and thrown in the river, and from this place humman bones were said to have been found. The Sessions Judge held that the pieces of bones found were undoubtedly those of a human being, but as Mr. Tek Chand points out, this finding is in no way warranted by the medical evidence. The Doctor said that he could give no information as to 25 pieces of bones, but that one piece might have formed part of the temporal bone and that he was uncertain on this point. There is, therefore, doubt as to the nature of the bones found.

In the second place Mr. Tek Chand contests the admissibility of the statement said to have been made by Sundar Singh, which led to the discovery. He points out that Hazara Singh had admittedly given full information before Sundar Singh made his statement. It is not necessary, however, for us to discuss the legal admissibilty of this evidence, as it is not shown that any discovery was made in consequence of Sundar Singh's statement. At the same place a jhul and a rope belonging to Hazara Singh were said to have been found, but as pointed out by Mr. Tek Chand, this evidence would only tell against Hazara Singh. However, there appears to us considerable doubt as to the identity of these articles. Regarding the jhul, there is only the statement of one witness which appears worthy of little credit, while the mother and the brother of Hazara Singh both denied that it belonged to him.

There is also some evidence regarding the recovery of a saddle said to have been used on the mare when going to the river and a jhul belonging to the deceased. They are said to have been found in the chari field of Bahadur Singh. But this recovery was made in the absence of the Police and through one Tara Singh, who is very hostile to the accused, It is not surprising that the jhul bore marks of human blood but such marks were absent on the saddle. We do not think this evidence of any value.

Finally there remain the statements of the persons who saw the accused going to and coming back from the river. The evidence of most of them has been disbelieved by the Sessions Judge and rightly so, in our opinion. He thinks, however, that Bhagat Singh and Nathu chuhra might have seen Hazara Singh and Sundar Singh returning from the river. Bhagat Singh, however, is obviously a hostile witness and he was produced by Tara Singh and other enemies of the accused, while Nathu chuhra is a servant of Bhagat Singh. There are other reasons for disbelieving this witness which need not be mentioned.

After a careful hearing of the case and a perusal of the evidence and the Police diaries, we are unable to be satisfied as to the guilt of the appellants and we, therefore, accept their appeal and acquit them.

Appeal accepted.

Sheikh NURUL HASSAN—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 406—Criminal breach of trust by servant—Trust, nature of, to be established—Transaction involving adjustment of accounts—Retention of money, whether offence.

Accused was employed as agent by the complainant to collect on his behalf the taxes of the Union Committee. He was to receive as remuneration 10 per cent. of the collections, and was to hand over the collections, less his remuneration, to his master or to pay the money into the treasury, no period being fixed for the latter purpose. It was alleged that while in charge of the collections he failed to account for a certain sum of money collected by him. He was accordingly convicted of criminal breach of trust under section 406 of the Penal Code:

Held, that in such cases the nature of the trust should be established; that as the accused was entitled to deduct his remuneration from the collections, and as no period was fixed for payment into the treasury, a charge of criminal breach of trust could only be maintained after an adjustment of accounts, the mere fact that he retained the sums collected not being conclusive proof of criminal breach of trust, and that the conviction was, therefore, not maintainable. [p. 670, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order, dated 21st February 1920, of the District Magistrate, Bhagalpur, against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, 2nd class, Madhepura, dated 8th January 1920.

Mr. Khurshed Hasnain, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—This is an application on behalf of one Shaikh Nurul Hassan against his conviction and sentence under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code. The case for the Crown is that he between the 18th August 1918 and the 27th March 1919, being entrusted with the collection of taxes of the Madhepura UnionCommittee, committed breach of trust in respect of Rs. 53-2. The facts in the case are not very much disputed. It appears that the accused was employed as agent by Rameshar Marwari to collect on his behalf the taxes of the Union Committee. The remuneration of the accused was fixed by Rameshar Marwari to be 10 per cent of the collection. It appears that before the 12th October 1919 one Sudama Prasad was employed by Rameshar for this purpose. His services having been dispensed with on that date Nurul Hassan, the present accused, was appointed as Rameshar's agent, and the case for the Crown is that during the time that he had been in charge of the collection of the taxes he committed criminal breach of trust with respect to Rs. 53 2. On these facts the accused was convicted under section 406, as stated above, and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment. An appeal having been preferred, the conviction and sentence were upheld. This application has now been filed in this Court, and a Divisional Bench of this Court issued a Rule to show cause why the conviction and sentence of the petitioner should not be set aside. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the petitioner mainly contends that the petitioner could not be convicted under section 406, Indian Penal Code, unless it was found that he dishonestly misappropriated or disposed of the money in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust was to be discharged or of any legal contract, express or implied, that touched on the discharge of such trust. Rameshwar Marwari who was cross-examined in the case stated as follows:—"I had instructed Nurul Hassan to bring the collection amount to me or deposit that in the treasury. I had not fixed any period for depositing the collection money into the treasury". It is obvious that the accused was a servant of Rameshar Marwari and had nothing to do with the Union Committee, and if he deposited the sums collected by him into the treasury he did so on behalf of his principal Rameshar and, therefore, it is absolutely clear that if there was any trust that trust was created by Rameshar, and before the conviction under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code can be maintained, it is necessary to know the terms under which that trust was created. On the evidence of Rameshar Marwari, which I have quoted above, it is obvious that Rameshar had not fixed any period for the deposit of the collection money into the treasury. Then secondly on the facts found the accused had to receive 10 per cent. of the collections as his remuneration, and it appears from the prosecution evidence that the previous agent Sudhama Prasad used as a matter of fact sometimes to deduct his remuneration of 5 per cent. from the collection that he used to make. Unfortunately no reference has been made to this evidence either in the judgment of the trial Court or the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. If this evidence is accepted, then the accused would be entitled to a deduction of 10 per cent. of the collection as his remuneration. On the evidence of Rameshar quoted above and also on the evidence that Sudhama Prasad used to retain 5 per cent. as his remuneration, in my opinion no charge of criminal breach of trust can be maintained without an adjustment of accounts between Rameshar and the petitioner. The conviction and sentence of the petitioner must, therefore, be set aside.

It was held in the case of Mathura Prasad v. Emperor (1) that "the retention of money by a servant or clerk for fifteen months after its receipt raises a very serious doubt of bona fides against him, but the mere retention is not conclusive proof of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust". If there had been evidence on the record that Rameshar had fixed any period for depositing the collection money into the treasury, surely the conviction of the accused would have been upheld, but in the absence of that evidence the conviction must be set aside. The result is that the conviction of the accused under section 406 is set aside. He will now be discharged from his bail.

Conviction set aside.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Ambala, dated the 10th December 1919, affirming that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Ambala, dated the 25th November 1919.

Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Abdul Karim for revision of an order of a First Class Magistrate, which has been confirmed by the District Magistrate, placing him on security under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner himself made an application against Abdullah and others, saying that they bore him enmity and asking that they might be bound over under section 107. Upon this the Magistrate took his statement and at the conclusion thereof recorded an order that he was himself a quarrelsome fellow, and called upon him to show cause why he should not be bound over under the aforesaid section. Evidence was subsequently recorded against him and the order complained of was made. The Magistrate in his order says that the petitioner fights and quarrels with everybody and that the facts show that there is a fear of a breach of the peace from him. The District Magistrate in his order merely finds that the petitioner is a quarrelsome person, not that there is any fear of his committing a breach of the peace.

In revision it is urged that it was illegal for the Magistrate to issue notice to Abdul Karim, when no information had been given against him and merely because the Magistrate thought after taking his statement that he himself was a person who should be bound over. Section 107 (1) shows that a Magistrate can only act against a person upon receiving information that he is likely to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity and so on. Sub-section 2 lays down that proceedings shall not be taken under this section unless either the person informed against or the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended, is within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction and so on. These two sub sections make it quite clear that prior to the initiation of proceedings information must be given against a person from whom it is sought to take security. In the present case no information was given against the petitioner to the effect that he was likely to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity, and it was quite illegal for the Magistrate to issue notice to him merely because he considered from his own statement that he was a quarrelsome person. In Jaiprakash Lal, In the matter of the petition of (1) it was held that "information" of the kind mentioned in section 107 must be clear and definite, directly affecting the person against whom process was issued, and should disclose tangible facts and details so that it might afford notice to such person of what he was to come prepared to meet. Here there was obviously no information such as is required by the section before the Magistrate, and, therefore, I hold that the initiation of the proceedings was ultra vires.

I accordingly allow the revision and set aside the order calling upon the petitioner to execute a bond under section 107.

Revision allowed.

Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), s. 13—Place exposed to public view, whether public place.

Where the accused were found gambling at a place near a public street and exposed to public view, but which was not part of the public street:

Held, that they could not be convicted of gambling in a public place.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, with his No. 294 of the 6th April 1920.

FACTS.—The petitioners have been convicted under section 13, Act III of 1867, of gambling and have been sentenced to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment by Khan Bahadur Seth Adamji, Honorary Magistrate, 1st Class.

GROUNDS.—The evidence is to the effect that the gambling was at the side of the road, and from the plan it appears that the petitioners were not on the road though no doubt in sight of it. Kashi Ram v. Emperor (1) is in point. I forward the proceedings with a recommendation that if the Hon'ble Judges think fit, the conviction may be set aside. The petitioners are at present on bail.

ORDER.—It appears that the place where the petitioners were gambling is near a public street and exposed to public view. But it is not a part of the public street. Accordingly I hold that the conviction under section 13 of the Gaming Act III of 1867 cannot be sustained and accepting the recommendation made by the Sessions Judge, I quash the conviction and direct that the petitioners be discharged from their obligations under the bail bonds.

Conviction quashed.

Grant—Sanad—Proprietary interest—Grantee, dispossession of—Suit for re-possession, maintainability of.

A person holding a full proprietary interest under a grant of a sanad from the Government who is dispossessed of that property is entitled to maintain a suit for re-possession into that property. [p. 675, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Mitra, A. J. C. and Mr. Prideaux, A. J. C. Central Provinces, Berar Jurisdiction, in First Appeal No. 20 B of 1916, dated the 5th September 1917.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of Mittra, A. J. C. and Prideaux, A. J. C.

"The material facts of this case may be very briefly stated. The village in dispute was granted in izara under the Waste Land Rules of 1865. In 1888 the defendant No. 1 held an eight-annas share, the other eight-annas being held by Kondba and Ganaji, sons of Sadoba. In execution of a money decree against the latter their half share in the village was attached and the C form sent to the Collector under the provisions of section 320 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. For the satisfaction of the decree the Collector granted a lease for ten years on 1st July 1893. The term of the lease expired in 1903. The lessee was to pay annually an instalment towards the decree, and this amount was payable on the 15th of March at the end of each year. In 1897 Kondba and Ganaji sold their share in the izara village to one Mundley, who in his turn in 1902 sold it to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' case is that they were in possessions for two years till 1904, when the defendants dispossessed them. During the pendency of the suit the plaintiff No. 4 sold his rights to Sulamsa who was eventually made a defendant. This sale, according to the plaintiffs, was benami for the defendant Bapu. The plaintiffs, therefore, claim possession of a six-annas share of the village, one of the original plaintiffs having retired from the case. The main defence is that the sales in favour of the plaintiffs and their predecessor were effected during the pendency of the Collector's management in execution of the decree above referred to, and were, therefore, void under section 325 (A) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 which governs the case. The lower Court has decreed the plaintiffs' claim, and this appeal has been filed by the defendant Bapu and his sons.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs have no valid title by reason of the provision of section 325 (A), and in support of this contention a recent Full Bench ruling of this Court has been relied upon [Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (1)]. A majority of the Judges in that case held that section 325 (A) creates a personal incompetency in the judgment-debtor, and a transfer without the written permission of the Collector during the pendency of the execution proceedings is absolutely void. One of us who was a dissenting member of the Court was of opinion that the disability was created in order to give an unrestricted power of management to the Collector, and that such transfers could be enforced after the Collector's management comes to an end, so as not to affect any title created by the Collector. The decision of the majority is, however, binding upon this Court, and we have to see whether that decision helps the appellant in the circumstances of the case.

The lower Court has found that the plaintiffs were in possession for sometime prior to 1904. We agree with this finding which receives additional support from a statement made by the defendant as a witness in a previous suit (Exhibit P-14).

The contest in the Full Bench case was between the parties to the transfer or their representatives. The defendants do not claim title under Kondba and Ganaji. Upon the finding that the plaintiffs had prior possession they are entitled to be restored to that possession. The Full Bench decision was not meant to lay down that any person after the search of the revenue records is at liberty to oust all existing occupiers of land transferred to them, without the written permission of the Collector, and thereafter to claim a decree confirming the ouster as a reward of this discovery.

It is admitted before us that in 1893 a sanad conferring proprietary rights after the expiry of the thirty years' lease was granted to Mundley and the defendant Bapu jointly. We have also before us the revenue records showing that such a sanad was issued. It is argued on behalf of the respondents that the legal title to the property was vested in their predecessor Mundley by reason of the grant and that that title is now free from the infirmity which attached to the original title by the sale-deed of 1897. It is argued that there may be equities, subject to the law of limitation, between the original lessees and Mundley and his successors, but to all intents and purposes, the plaintiffs have the legal estate vested in them to borrow the language of English law. On behalf of the appellants it is argued that the grant of proprietary right was part of the bargain entered into between the Government and the original izaradars, and that it lay upon the izaradars, upon compliance with the terms of the izara, to elect whether they would be proprietors or patels. Upon the view which we have taken it is not necessary to express any opinion on the questions raised.

We agree with the appellants that Exhibits P-4 and P-5 refer to sanction obtained under the rules governing the izara which prohibit a transfer of rights without the permission of the Deputy Commissioner. The heading as given to the proceedings 'revenue case, class 2', supports this contention.

There is some force in the argument advanced on behalf of the respondents that every presumption should be made in their favour on the ground that their title remained undisputed, and was in fact admitted by the defendant Bapu on the occasion when the sanad was granted. It is also pointed out that in 1908 the present defendant No. 1 brought a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell against the present plaintiffs, and in this suit the title of the present plaintiffs as a subsisting title was admitted. It is also pointed out that the records of the revenue case in execution of the decree have been eliminated, and it is impossible to say definitely whether the judgment-debtors Kondba and Ganaji, on whom lay the duty to apply for sanction, did or did not obtain written permission from the Collector. The respondents also say that, as they were not original parties to the transfer, they have no personal knowledge of the matter.

We agree with the appellants' contention that there was no estoppel by reason of the defendant's pleadings in the previous suit for specific performance.

The defendant Bapu then believed that the plaintiffs had a good title. He has since discovered the flaw in the title. His representation in the previous suit has not altered the plaintiffs' position for the worse, and hence there is no estoppel against the defendant.

It is unnecessary in this litigation to decide between the two defendants whether the sale made during the pendency of the suit was benami or not. We, therefore, leave this question open for future adjudication.

As regards the claim for the gadhi and the houses, they are within the ambit of the village, and although they are not specifically mentioned in the plaintiffs' sale-deeds, they would pass to them, as the whole of the half share of Kondba and Ganaji was sold without any reservation in favour of the vendors. The principle embodied in section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act would apply to such a case. We see, therefore, no force in this ground of appeal.

As regards the calculation of mesne profits it is admitted that there is an arithmetical mistake in the judgment of the lower Court. Nothing has been said before us which would induce us to differ from the actual findings of the lower Court upon which the calculation has been made. The respondents' contention that they are entitled to mesne profits for six years is wrong. Their suit is based upon the allegation of an ouster. The defendant on that view is a trespasser. Therefore, the limitation applicable to such a suit is governed by Article 109 of the Limitation Act. The case relied upon by the respondents was a case where a co-owner brought a suit against another co-owner as agent of the proprietary body. There is no analogy between the cases, and we think the decision of the lower Court is correct.

The decree of the lower Court will be modified by substituting Rs. 3,791-15-3 for Rs. 8,333-14-8. Costs in proportion to success and failure. We further direct that the words 'defendants Nos. 1 to 4' be substituted for 'defendants' in clauses 1 and 2 of the lower Court's decree".

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—Their Lordships have not heard any sound reason for recalling the decree of the Court below.

In the judgment of the Appellate Court, dated the 5th September 1917, there occurs this passage:—"It is admitted before us that in 1898 a sanad conferring proprietary rights after the expiry of the thirty years' lease was granted to Mundley and the defendant Bapu jointly." The expiry of the thirty years occurred in the year 1895. Their Lordships further add this sentence:—"We have also before us the revenue records showing that such a sanad was issued." In these circumstances it follows that the right of property vested in Mundley and the defendant Bapu rests for its origin of title upon the sanad granted in 1898.

It has been stoutly argued before their Lordships that the sanad was not produced, and a certain citation was made of Order XLI, rule 27, applicable to the introduction of fresh documentary evidence in an appeal Court. In the opinion of their Lordships such an argument cannot have any application to the procedure which took place in the present case. There was no application made for the introduction of new evidence. What the learned Judges very properly did in the Appellate Court was to take stock of an admission made before them which was cardinal to the matter under discussion. No suggestion or attempt has been made in the candid argument before the Board to recall that admission. It stands.

In the result accordingly, the situation simply is this:—That a person holding a full proprietary interest under a grant of a sanad from the Government has been dispossessed of that property, and the present suit is for the purpose simply of repossession into that property so granted. There is nothing more in the case, in the view of their Lordships, than that simple point, and their Lordships see no occasion to enter into any of the other matters discussed in the careful judgments before them.

They affirm the judgment of the Court below, and will humbly advise His Majesty in that sense; the judgment to be affirmed with costs of the appeal.

Order accordingly.

The suit contemplated in Article 47 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is one for possession by a party against whom an order is passed by a Magistrate The principle underlying Article 47 is that as possession is outstanding, the party who is out of it should sue within three years to recover it. If he fails to sue within that period then under section 28 of the Limitation Act his right to possession is extinguished.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and S. Doraiswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Ethiraja Madaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal can be disposed of on a short point. The 1st defendant and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had disputes concerning the possession of certain property whose income is the subject-matter of this litigation. The Magistrate was appealed to. He held that the evidence as to possession on both sides was unsatisfactory and directed under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that a Receiver should be in charge of it. This was on the 30th January 1909. Subsequently a suit was brought by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 against the 1st defendant in December 1911, partly for a declaration and partly for possession, the declaration relating to the property now in question and possession to property which the 1st defendant was alleged to have trespassed on. The suit was eventually withdrawn without obtaining permission to sue again. After the date of this withdrawal, the Receiver appointed by the Magistrate delivered possession of the properties to the 1st defendant in March 1913. The present plaintiff obtained a money-decree against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and attached the suit property which represents the income which was in the hands of the Receiver and which he handed over to the 1st defendant in April 1913. The 1st defendant intervened with a claim petition which was allowed. The suit is for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to attach the income as belonging to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The lower Appellate Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. We are unable to agree with it.

We are not, as at present advised, prepared to agree with the contention of Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar that the withdrawal of the suit operates as a bar against the plaintiff agitating the right of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Having regard to the frame of that suit and to the observations in Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (1) it is doubtful whether anything more than the remedy was barred by the withdrawal of the suit. However that may be, in our opinion, the claim of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was extinguished by the combined operation of Article 47 of the Limitation Act and of section 28. In Article 47, the suit contemplated is one for possession by a party against whom an order was passed by the Magistrate. It may be that to such a suit it is not necessary that the Receiver should be a party. The principle underlying the article is that, as possession is outstanding, the party who is out of it should sue within 3 years to recover it. If he fails to sue within that period then under section 28 the right to possession is extinguished. This is substantially the view that was taken in Palidugu Parasuramayya v. Valli Ramachandradu (2) and we think that the decision in Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (1) does not affect this rule.

As defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had no subsisting right on the date of the attachment, there was nothing for the plaintiff to attach and the suit should have been thrown out on this short point. We reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the suit. Plaintiff will pay the costs of the 1st defendant in the Court of the first instance alone. As the lengthy trial was necessitated by the failure of the 1st defendant to raise the proper issue in time, we do not think he is entitled to any costs either in the lower Appellate Court or in this Court.

Landlord and Tenant—Merger, doctrine of, applicability of—Rent, right to recover.

The doctrine of merger can only be applied when the interest in the superior right definitely covers the subordinate right.

Where the plaintiff has the right to collect the entire rent of a fixed-rate holding while the defendant has only a mortgagee interest in the holding and an entirely separate interest in the proprietary right the doctrine of merger does not apply and the plaintiff is entitled to collect the entire rent.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—This reference is made by the Commissioner with reference to an appellate decree of the Collector in a suit for arrears of rent. The suit related to a fixed-rate holding in Pargana Kaswar Raja most of which is mortgaged to various persons. Among the mortgagees are the co-sharers in the village, but the proprietary right of one of those co-sharers is mortgaged to the other, Arjun Prasad Singh. The Assistant Collector held that the two mortgagees, being also co-sharers in the proprietary right could not be sued as tenants. The Collector on appeal held that the doctrine of merger which had been tacitly though not expressly applied to the two mortgagees of the tenancy by the Assistant Collector could only be applied to Arjun Prasad Singh the only one of the two in actual possession of the proprietary right by virtue of the mortgage from Mahabir Singh. He, therefore, gave a decree against Mahabir Singh but not against Arjun Prasad Singh. The Commissioner is of opinion that Arjun Prasad Singh also should have had judgment given against him and I agree with him. The doctrine of merger can only be applied when the interest in the superior right definitely covers the subordinate right. Here the plaintiff is found to have the right to collect the whole rent of this fixed rate holding, while Arjun Prasad Singh has only a mortgagee interest in the holding and an entirely separate interest in the proprietary right. The finding is contested by a separate petition in this Court but without any force in my opinion.

I think the circumstances stated by the Commissioner warrant interference in revision and I would modify the decrees of the lower Courts by giving a decree against Arjun Prasad Singh on the same terms as against the other defendants.

The plaintiff should get his costs of this reference from Arjun Prasad Singh and proportionate costs against him in the Collector and Assistant Collector's Courts.

FERARD, S. M.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 16—Award—Parties dissatisfied—Remedy proper—Suit to set aside award, whether maintainable.

Where an arbitrator is appointed under the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code a suit to set aside the award is not maintainable as being contrary to the plain intention of the law. The proper remedy in such a case is an application submitted to the Court to set aside the award.

Mr. M. C. Naidu, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants were parties to two awards made by an arbitrator appointed by the District Court, Moulmein. Being dissatisfied with the awards they applied under paragraph 16 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the awards, but their application was refused and the Court pronounced judgment and passed decree in accordance with the awards. Under paragraph 16 (2) no appeal lies against the decrees. But the appellants sought to re open the matters in dispute by suing to set aside the awards. The District Court held that such a suit will not lie.

BRAJA SUNDAR DAS v. JAGANNATH DHAL.

No case has been cited in which such a suit has been entertained, and such a suit appears to be contrary to the plain intention of the law. Article 158, First Schedule, Limitation Act, allows a period of ten days for an application to set aside an award submitted to the Court. No further appeal is allowed except in so far as the decree passed by the Court may be in excess of or not in accordance with the award, which is not the case here. As Lord Macnaghten observes in Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hussan (1), large powers are given to the Court with the view of making the awards in such cases as this complete, operative and final and it would render these provisions of the law nugatory to permit a party to go behind the decree of the Court and bring a suit to set aside the award on which the decree is based and which is merged in the decree. The appeal is, therefore, dimissed under Order XLI, rule 11.

Where in a suit to recover khas possession or in the alternative for the assessment of fair and equitable rent, the Court finds that the plaintiff is not entitled to khas possession, it ought to determine fair and equitable rent payable in respect of the lands in suit. [p. 680, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decision of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 8th February 1919, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Cuttack dated the 22nd May 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. S. Das and Mr. Bichitranand Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Biswanath Sinha and Rai Janaki Nath Bose Bahadur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These four appeals arise out of four suits in ejectment tried analogously in the Court of first instance. The plaintiff and the pro forma defendants purchased the entire 16 annas of the estate called Taluqa Minpur Zemindary, bearing Touzi No. 423 in Pargana Tisania, District Cuttack. The lands in suit appertain to Mouza Injanpur, one of the Mouzas comprised within the said Taluqa. By an award of Panchayet, dated the 26th March 1873, the plaintiff's ancestor got by partition with the ancestors of the pro forma defendants the Mouza Injanpur allotted to them, and since then they are in possession of the entire 16 annas of the said Mouza. The Zemindar, to whom the Mouza originally belonged previous to the purchase by the plaintiff and his co sharers, had granted the Mouza as Khore poshak for maintenance to a relation of his, called Jodhi Mangraj. The Mouza thus became a sikmi tenure of Jodhi Mangraj. In the family of Jodhi Mangraj, the law of lineal primogeniture prevailed, whereby the senior branch of the family held the entire Mouza as sikmi tenure-holder and the lands in suit were given to the ancestors of the principal defendants, the junior members of the family, by way of maintenance at a nominal rental of Re. 1 per man.

In 1903 the plaintiff obtained a rent decree against the then tenure-holder, Bishambhar Dayal, for arrears of rent then due, and in execution of the said decree, the tenure was brought to sale under Bengal Act VIII of 1865 and purchased by the plaintiff on 18th March 1905.

The case of the plaintiff is that he purchased the tenure free from all incumbrances and the lands in suit held by the principal defendants are an incumbrance on the tenure, which under section 16 of Act VIII of 1865 the plaintiff is entitled to avoid. Consequently the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of possession with mesne profits. In the alternative the plaintiff prayed that if it be held that he is not entitled to recover khas possession of the land, then a fair and equitable rent according to the prevailing rate be assessed on the lands in suit.

The principal defendants in their written statement pleaded that the sale of the tenure under Act VIII of 1865 was invalid and illegal and the plaintiff did not acquire any title thereby, inasmuch as Jodhi Mangraj and his descendants, to whom the Mauza was granted as khore-poshak, were the sikmi Zemindars of the Mauza paying revenue thereof due to Government through the Zemindar of the Mahal and that no relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them and the Zemindar of the Mahal. They also pleaded that they paid rent for the lands in suit to the plaintiff at a rate which remained uniform for over 50 years, and hence they are not liable to any assessment of fair and equitable rent, and thirdly, they contended that even if it be conceded that the plaintiff purchased the sikmi Zemindary right, he himself being a Mahal Zemindar, the sikmi right ceased to exist and the defendants having become intermediate tenure-holders or parja (tenants) under the plaintiff, the latter cannot get any other relief except rent.

The contentions of the defendants gave rise to several issues, the principal ones being "Is the plaintiff's alleged purchase of the shikmi Zemindary legal and valid, and could the property be sold under Act VIII of 1865? (Issue No. 4).

"Is the disputed property an incumbrance under the law? Is the plaintiff entitled to avoid it by virtue of his auction-purchase? (Issue No. 5).

"Is the plaintiff entitled to recover khas possession of the property in suit? (Issue No. 6).

"To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?" (Issue No. 7).

Issues Nos. 1, 2 and 3 relating to limitation, estoppel and maintainability of the suit need not be mentioned, for they do not now arise.

The Subordinate Judge decided all the issues in favour of the plaintiff. With regard to the status of the defendants, he held that they were under-tenure-holders and not raiyats or hereditary and resident cultivators and that their interest in the lands was an incumbrance under section 16 of the Act, which the plaintiff was entitled to avoid. The Subordinate Judge accordingly decreed the claim of the plaintiff.

On appeal, the District Judge disagreed with the Subordinate Judge on his finding as to the status of the defendants, and held that the defendants were resident and hereditary cultivators and belonged to a class for the protection of which the clause in section 16 of Act VIII of 1865 was expressly designed, and dismissed the suits of the plaintiff. The plaintiff has, therefore, come to us in second appeal.

In the settlement record, which was finally published on the 13th August 1897, the defendants in the several suits were recorded in respect of the lands held by them to have the status of "biratharan khud-kasht." In the last revisional settlement khatian, which was finally published on 18th November 1911, the status of the defendants was recorded to be that of madhya sattadhikari babat bradarana khud-kasht that is, intermediate tenure-holders in respect of biratharana khudkasht.

The District Judge has shown that in Second Appeal No. 25 the defendants have 13·68 acres, out of which 11·47 acres are in their khas cultivation; in Second Appeal No. 26, the defendants hold 17·66 acres, out of which 9·66 are in their khas possession and the rest is held by tenants, who pay half produce rents; in Second Appeal No. 27, the defendants hold 8·45 acres out of which 6 acres are in their khas possession, and in Second Appeal No. 28 the defendants hold 30·18 acres, out of which 12·10 acres are in their khas possession and the remaining are held by tenants paying cash and bhaoli rents. The purpose of the tenancy, for which the land was given originally to the defendants, is not known. The small areas held by the defendants, greater portions of which are in their khas possession, as well as the fact that the defendants have their dwelling houses also on the portions of the holding, go to show that the land must have been originally let out to them for purposes of cultivation. The Subordinate Judge has also held that the "defendants have their dwelling houses on some portions and cultivate some other portions and realise dhooli [illegible] rent from sub tenants in occupation of yet other portions."

The District Judge was hence justified in holding that the defendants were resident and hereditary holders in respect of the disputed lands and that the entry of their status in the last revisional Survey Record of Rights as intermediate tenure holders is incorrect and has been sufficiently rebutted by the evidence in the case. This is a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal.

It is noteworthy that in both the Settlement Records of 1897 and 1911, the entry is "khudkasht" in the former as "biratharan khudkasht" and in the latter as "intermediate tenure-holders in respect of biratharan khudkasht." The word 'khudkasht' in the Regulation relating to the permanent settlement applied to raiyats. The permanent tenants settled in village were called khudkasht raiyats, that is, raiyats cultivating the land of their own village or the village in which they resided. They were distinguished from the Paikasht tenants, that is, the temporary tenants, residents of another or neighbouring villages. The former were protected from eviction and the latter were treated as tenants-at will: vide Field's Introduction to Regulations, pages 24, 25 and 40. Regulation VIII of 1793 clearly prohibited the proprietors of lands or farmers or persons acting under their authority to cancel pattas of khudkasht raiyats except upon proof that they were obtained by collusion. The rights of the khudkasht raiyats were accordingly protected on sales of patni talugas by clause 3 of section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819, and on sales of under-tenures sold for arrears of rent by section 16 of Act VIII of 1865. In sales under both these Acts the purchaser acquires the property free from incumbrance but he is not entitled "to eject khudkasht raiyats or resident and hereditary cultivators." In the case of Kowntee Debee v. Hirdoy Nath Durreepa (1) as well as in the case of Jogeshwar Mazumdar v. Abed Mohomed Sirkar (2) relied upon by the appellant, the finding of fact was that the persons claiming the benefit of the Patni Regulation and the Rent Recovery Act respectively were not proved to be khudkasht raiyats that is resident and hereditary cultivators of the lands in suit and, therefore, those authorities do not apply to the present case, where the finding of fact of the District Judge is that the defendants were khudkasht or resident hereditary cultivators. The direct authority applicable to the present case is that of Sheikh Mahomed Assanoollah Chowdhry v. Shamshir Ali (3) where it was held that the defendants having for more than 12 years cleared and cultivated the land and built houses thereon were hereditary and resident cultivators and their interest was protected from the operation of section 16 of Act VIII of 1865. The finding of the Courts below that the defendants are resident and hereditary cultivators and have dwelling houses on portions of the land and the description of the lands in suit as khudkasht in the Survey Record of Rights expressly bring the defendants within the meaning of the words "khudkasht or resident and hereditary cultivators" in section 16 of the Act. The plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to recover khas possession and the decision of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be upheld.

It is, however, contended on behalf of the appellant that in case the plaintiff was not entitled to recover khas possession, the Court below ought to have determined fair and equitable rents payable by the defendants to the plaintiff in respect of the lands in suit, as contained in relief ga of the plaint. This contention must prevail. The Subordinate Judge in deciding issue No. 1 held that the plaintiff was entitled to make the alternative prayer for determination of fair and equitable rent in the present suits. In the lower Appellate Court the defendants did not contest the finding of the Subordinate Judge on that point and the only contention urged by them was with respect to Issue No. 5 as to the right of the plaintiff to recover khas possession. The finding of the Subordinate Judge, therefore, became final. The point has been raised by the plaintiff in the grounds of appeal before us. The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents does not seriously dispute the plaintiff's right to an assessment of fair and equitable rent. The case must, therefore, go back to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for determination of fair and equitable rent payable by the defendants to the plaintiff.

(2) 3 C. W. N. 13.
(3) 4 C. L. R. 165.

On the principal question these appeals have failed and hence the respondents are entitled to their costs.

Order accordingly.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Inheritance—Daughter taken away by divorced mother, right of, to inherit as member of natural father's family.

It is a well-established rule of Buddhist Law in both Upper and Lower Burma that a daughter taken away by her mother on divorce loses her right of inheritance as a member of her natural father's family. [p. 682, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. May Oung, for the Appellant.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, C. J.—The appellant defendant Maung Le Maung was twice married, first to Ma E Nyun who died four or five years before this suit was filed leaving a son, Maung Ba Wan. After Ma E Nyun's death, Maung Le Maung married Ma Me Pu and by her had a daughter, Ma Kwe, born in January 1913. In July 1915 Le Maung and Ma Me Pu effected a divorce by mutual consent before the village elders and Ma Me Pu received property worth Rs. 1,000 on leaving Le Maung's house. She took with her her infant daughter, Ma Kwe, and she has since married another husband. Le Maung did not marry again. Ba Wan continued living with his father, Le Maung, until he died of plague in January 1918. About three years before his death he had inherited a sum of Rs. 9,400 as his share of the estate of his mother Ma E Nyun's father, U Sin, and he had also received certain jewellery from U Sin in the letter's lifetime.

The minor Ma Kwe, through her mother Ma Me Pu as next friend, sued her father Le Maung for the property left by her step-brother Ba Wan claiming to be Ba Wan's sole heir under the Buddhist Law of inheritance. Le Maung in defence pleaded that he was the sole heir of his son.

The District Court held that the case was governed by the decision of the Privy Council in Ma Hnin Bwin v. U. Shwe Gone (1) and that Ma Kwe should succeed to her step brother's estate in preference to his father, the defendant. The learned District Judge considered that although Ma Kwe is only a step-sister she is entitled to succeed to the whole estate in the absence of a brother or sister of the whole blood. He also considered that as Ma Kwe was an infant at the time of her mother's divorce, the fact that she was taken away by her mother at that time does not debar her from inheriting her brother Ba Wan's estate, and he cited Ma Thet v. Ma San On (2), in support of this view. The suit was, therefore, decreed in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant Le Maung appeals.

The learned District Judge is probably right in holding that the ruling in Ma Hnin Bwin's case (1) may properly be applied in favour of brothers and sisters of the half blood when there are no full brothers or sisters. This would be in accordance with "the fundamental principle that inheritance should not ascend if it can be helped." Ma Gun Eon v. Maung Po Kywe (3).

The District Judge has, however, not considered the limitations which their Lordships put upon their decision in Ma Hnin Bwin's case (1). The balance of authority in the Dhammathats was found to be upon the side of sisters and brothers of the deceased being preferred to the parents (according to the general rule laid down in the extract from Manugye in section 311 of the Digest). But while adopting this general rule and applying it to the case before them, their Lordships pointed out as a salient feature in that case that the deceased and her sister Ma Hnin Bwin had for years lived a life separate from and independent of their father, and their Lordships desired that Ma Hnin Bwin's case (1) should not be held as dealing with or affecting parental rights in cases where the family continues to live together. They referred to the traditional patriarchal powers of Burmese parents over their households and suggested that a consideration of these powers "may lead to conclusions which hold no place in rules of succession to the estate of children who have left the father's establishment and become separately settled in life." It is clear that their Lordships meant to leave us unfettered in disposing of such a case as the present where the estate in dispute is that of a boy who lived with and was controlled and supported by his father up to the time of his death at the early age of 13. The texts indicating the wide extent of parental authority are cited in the judgments of the Appellate Bench of this Court in U Shwe Gon v. Ma Hnin Bwin (4). But the principle that inheritance, if possible, should not ascend is of general application and the rule of succession deduced by their Lordships from the Dhammathats is wide enough to cover all cases. No actual textual authority has been cited to us which would warrant special differentiation in favour of parents with whom the deceased child has lived, and I doubt if we can differentiate merely by inference from the texts showing the power of parents over their children in former times. These texts appear to be more in the nature of moral precepts than positive rules and none of them touch the question of inheritance.

It is, however, unnecessary for us to pronounce definitely in the present case on the point discussed above, for the plaintiff respondent Ma Kwe's suit must fail on another ground, namely,—because she ceased to be a member of her father the appellant's family at the time of her mother's divorce. Here we are on surer ground. It is a well established rule of Buddhist Law in both Upper and Lower Burma that a daughter taken away by her mother on divorce loses her rights of inheritance as a member of her natural father's family. Mi Thaik v. Mi Tu (5), Ma Gywe v. Ma Thi Da (6), Ma Sein Nyo v. Ma Kywe (7), Ma Pon v. Po Chan (8). The rule was relaxed in Ma Thet v. Ma San On (2) (the case cited by the District Judge) because in that case there had been no division of property at the time of the divorce and it was shown, moreover, that filial relations between father and daughter had been resumed and contained for many years after the separation. In the case of Maung Pe v. Ma Myitta (9) the learned Judicial Commissioner (Sir Herbert White) was loth to press the rule against a child of tender years who had no opportunity of exercising a reasonable choice at the time of her mother's divorce. (But can we assume that the choice of continuing or resuming filial relations would rest with the daughter rather than the father, if the girl were of mature understanding?) There also, though the parents were divorced, there was evidence that the deceased was on very affectionate terms with his daughter, that she had been to stay with him, and that she had never been regarded as cut off from his family. In another Upper Burma case, Mi Nyo v. Mi Nyein Tha (10), it was pointed out that notwithstanding the general rule, children taken away by a divorced wife would succeed to their father's estate in the absence of all other heirs, (i. e., on the principle that descendants who would otherwise be disqualified are allowed to share in inheritance in default of a better heir, vide, Maunkye, Richardson's Edition, page 316). And so in the present case, if it were a question of inheriting from Maung Le Maung, we might properly consider the claims of Ma Kwe if she were the only surviving descendant by blood. But this is not the question. Ma Kwe is a possible heir to Maung Le Maung if she survives him and especially if filial relations are in the meantime resumed between them. But her present position is that she is a member of her mother's new family and not a member of her father's family at all. The severance of the tie binding her to her father necessarily involves severance also of the tie connecting her with her father's son by his earlier marriage. It is clear that she could not supplant her father in the succession to his son Ba Wan's estate even if we were to regard the Privy Council ruling in Ma Hnin Bwin's case (1) as of universal application.

On these grounds I would set aside the District Court decree and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

TESTAMENTARY CASE No. 16 OF 1917.

November 11, 1918.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, KT.

In the Goods of D. MACINTYRE.

Will—Scotch Law—Holograph writing without witnesses, whether Will.

A holograph writing proved to be in the handwriting of a person who at the time of his death was a domiciled Scotchman, constitutes a valid Will according to Scotch Law, even though there are no witnesses to such writing.

FACTS.—David MacIntyre, Agent at Meerut of the Allahabad Bank, died at Meerut, and the Administrator General of the United Provinces obtained from the High Court Letters of Administration to his estate as in the case of an intestate. Subsequently, a document was discovered among the papers of the deceased, to the following effect:—

"Allahabad Bank, Meerut, 21st January 1913. Any property which I possess to be divided equally between my three sisters Jessie Percy MacIntyre, Helen Anne MacIntyre and Mary MacIntyre, the survivor or survivors. D. MacIntyre."

The document was entirely in the handwriting of the deceased and as he was a domiciled Scotchman, the Administrator-General was of opinion that, according to Scotch Law, the document was a valid testamentary instrument. He accordingly applied to the Court for amendment of the Letters of Administration granted to him by annexing thereto, the Will propounded. The Administrator-General proved the document to be in the handwriting of the deceased, and that the domicile of the deceased was Scotland. In support of the legal point as to whether, according to Scotch Law, the document was or was not a Will, he placed before the Court the opinion of the writer to the Signet of Edinburgh, from which the following is an extract, viz:—

"By the Common Law of Scotland a holograph Will is valid wherever made and needs no witnesses. The person founding on the deed as holograph must prove that it is so either by the evidence of persons who saw it written or by evidence as to handwriting which satisfies the Court."

JUDGMENT.—Upon reading the papers before us including the affidavit of James W. Moncrieff writer to the Signet, we are of opinion that the paper-writing, dated the 21st of January 1913, is in the handwriting of the deceased D. MacIntyer, and that according to Scotch Law it constitutes a valid Will and that the said David MacIntyre was a domiciled Scotchman at the time of his death. We accordingly cancel the grant of Letters of Administration previously directed to be issued to the Administrator General and in lieu thereof direct that Letters of Administration with the aforesaid document of the 21st of January 1913, as the last Will of David MacIntyre annexed do issue to the Administrator-General.

Order accordingly.

Second appeal against the decision of the Joint Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Futehchand Asudomal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—(April 17, 1918).—The plaintiffs claimed in this suit to be the owners of the Yajman Vrithi of the Chabria caste. They alleged that the defendant had wrongfully performed the religious ceremonies of one of their Yajmans and sued to recover Rs. 35 11-0, the fees payable for the ceremonies, and for an injunction restraining him from performing such ceremonies in future. The defendant replied that he was a Sarswat Brahmin and that the Sarswats were the original owners of the Vriti; that the plaintiffs who were Pushkarana Brahmins had been admitted to an equal share in the Vriti; that a Yajman might employ either a Pushkarana or a Sarswat as he pleased; that the Bhat caste had resolved not to employ Pushkaranas but to have all the ceremonies performed by Sarswats and to give them their half fees and give the Pushkarana half fees to charity. He admitted that he had received half fees for ceremonies and asserted that he was entitled to do so under the resolution of the Punchayet.

The Sub-Judge found that the Vriti originally belonged exclusively to the plaintiffs' family but that the defendant's family had subsequently been admitted to a share in the Vriti; that the ceremonies were performed by either family and that the fees were divided equally except the Goudan fee which was divided in the proportion of Rs. 5-0-0 to the plaintiffs' and Re. 1-0-0 to the defendant's family. Nevertheless he held that the plaintiffs could not make the defendant responsible for the action of the Chabria Puncha and that as the half fees had been paid to the defendant personally for his benefit and for services personally rendered, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover them.

This decision was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

The plaintiffs come to this Court in second appeal, and it seems obvious that the decision of the lower Courts is not a logical deduction from the findings on which it is based.

Both the Courts have found that there is a religious office to which fees are attached and that this office is held by the Pushkaranas, the plaintiffs, and the Sarswats of whom the defendant is one and that these two families share the fees or emoluments of the office. They have also found that the Sarswats have performed the services of the office for less than the customary or official fee.

How can this be justified on the ground that the fee was paid to the Sarswats for their personal benefit? If the Sarswats have received a personal fee, then they have performed the ceremonies in their personal capacity and not as holders of the office. This act of the Sarswats is a trespass on the office; and the fact that they might have performed the ceremonies as holders of the office and for the official fee does not mitigate or alter the character of the trespass. Plaintiffs seem to me to be clearly entitled to damages for the intrusion on their rights.

The defendant-respondent seeks to support the decision of the lower Courts on various grounds.

It is suggested that the suit is barred from the cognizance of the Courts by Regulation II of 1827. But this plea cannot be sustained for no interference in caste questions is involved in the suit which is merely a dispute between two priestly families as to their fees.

It is next urged that religious offices such as the one in suit are invalid not being supported either by Hindu Law or custom. This objection was not raised in the lower Courts and both parties contested the suit on the footing that the religious office which they each claimed was valid.

The plea that the office is invalid is suggested by the case of Gour Mani Debi v. Chairman of the Panihati Municipality (1). That case, so far as it is based on custom, must be limited to the office then set up, the right to read Mantras at the particular burning Ghat. And so far as it is based on Hindu Law it proceeds on texts which have not in Western India the authority of the texts cited in Colebrook's Digest, Volume I, page 377, on which the Bombay decisions proceed. I think we must treat it as settled law that religious offices such as the one in suit have their origin in custom and are recognised both by Hindu Law, Krishnabhat v. Kapabhat (2), Ghelabhai v. Hargovan (3), and by the Legislature (Regulation V of 1827, section 1) as fixed property or immoveable property. Offices which involve the performance of religious duties are recognized as the subject-matter of civil litigation by section 7 of the Civil Prosedure Code and by decisions of all the High Courts. There is a conflict of decisions in cases in which the emoluments of the office are voluntary gratuities, and the tendency of the Courts is to recognise only such of those as are attached to a particular shrine or place, Tholappala Charlu v. Venkata Charlu (4) and Channu Dut Vyas v. Babu Nandan (5). But in regard to offices such as the one in suit to which fees are attached, and by which services are rendered, there is no conflict and they are recognised by all the Courts: See Muhammad Yussub v. Sayid Ahmed (6), Vithal Krishna Joshi v. Annat Ramchandra (7), Dinanath Abaji v. Sadhashiv Hari Madhave (8), Limba v. Rama (9), Waman Jagannath Joshi v. Balaji Kusaji Patil (10), Ghelabhai v. Hargovan (3), Krishnama v. Krishnasami (11), Kali Kanta v. Gouri Prosad Surma (12).

It is next suggested that no fees are attached to the office and that the payments are voluntary, but this is a question of fact concluded by the judgments of the lower Courts. Both the Courts have found that the fees are fixed and attached to the office, and this was even recognised by the resolution of the Chabria Punchayet that half fees were to be paid to the Sarswats.

Lastly it is contended that the resolution of the Punchayet was equivalent to a dismissal of the plaintiffs who are, therefore, no longer holders of the office. If the holder of the office were liable to be dismissed at the caprice of the Yajman, it is difficult to understand how the office could be (as it admittedly is) hereditary. The plaintiffs have not been charged with any disqualifying offence. In the case reported as Manghirmal v. Vithalram (13) a majority of the Judges of this Court, differing from me, held that the Vritti was not partible and refused to recognise any alientation of a share. The Punchayet wished the plaintiffs to effect the alienation inspite of the judgment of this Court, and on their refusing to do so passed a resolution excluding them. The resolution is in truth an attempt to evade a judgment of this Court and is not the result of any misconduct of the plaintiffs. The Calcutta High Court has held that it is contrary to public policy for the Court to interfere to prevent th dismissal of a priest, Rama Kant v. Gobind Chunder (14) followed in Gour Mani Debi v. Chairman of the Panihati Municipality (1). But the Bombay High Court has held that it is contrary to the custom of the country for a Brahmin to dismiss his Upadhya, Ramchunder Bapooje v. Ramchunder Lakshmun (15) and that an hereditary priest cannot be dismissed unless he is Patita The objection of the public policy raised by the Calcutta High Court is met in Bombay by refusing to grant an injunction in such cases following the judgment of Melvill, J. in Raja v. Krishnabhat (16). In this way the holder of the office is by the award of the damages secured from pecuniary loss and at the same time the Court declines to foist upon any Yajman the services of a particular priest.

The fees which the plaintiffs were deprived of by the defendant's intrusion are admittedly Rs. 23-8-0.

I would, therefore, refuse an injunction but grant the plaintiffs a decree for the sum.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—(April 17, 1918).—In the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 25-11-0, alleging that they were solely entitled to the 'Vriti' or fees paid to Brahmins for performing certain ceremonies, paid by (inter alia) one Ramdas Lalchand, that the amount claimed had been wrongfully received from Ramdas by the defendant, and should be handed over to the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also pray for an injunction prohibiting defendants from interfering with their Vriti. The suit was obviously one for the recovery of money wrongfully received by the defendants on plaintiffs' behalf.

Plaintiffs are Pushkarana Brahmins, and defendants are Sarswat Brahmins. The defendant in his written statement contends that with the consent of the Yajmans of the Chabria caste—to which Ramdas Lalchand belongs—ceremonies were performed by Pushkarnas or Sarswats indifferently, that the Yajmans were at full liberty to summon whom they chose to perform any particular ceremony, that there had been an agreement or understanding to which the Yajmans were parties that half of the Vriti should be enjoyed by Pushkarnas and half by Sarswats, that in Assu 1968 the whole Bradri of the Chabrias declared that Pushkaranas should not be called for ceremonies, but that only Sarswats should be summoned and that the half to which the Pushkarnas have been entitled was to be devoted to the feeding of cows and other charitable objects. Defendants denied that they had received any money on behalf of the plaintiff.

In their rejoinder, plaintiffs asserted that they were the Gur Brahmins of the Chabrias while the Sarswats were only the "Thani" or local Brahmins, that plaintiffs had the legal right to officiate at all Chabria ceremonies, and to receive the dues, though they admitted that a portion of them were payable to the Thanis.

The simple issue of fact in the case was:—Did defendant receive the amount claimed or any part of it, on behalf of the plaintiffs? But for the plaintiff it is contended that a large and a far more difficult question is involved: Are the Pushkarna Brahmins legally entitled to receive all Vriti paid by the Chabrias for Brahmin ceremonies, they giving a portion to the Sarswats?

The first issue drawn by the original Court was—is the plaintiffs' right to the plaint Vriti ancestral and ancient? and the finding was in the affirmative. But this finding is of little value, for the Court confused two quite different matters, (1) the nature and extent of the rights of the several members of a Brahmin joint family with regard to the dues which they are able to collect, and (2) the rights which the Brahmins have as against their Yajmans to enforce payment of Vriti. As between the several members of a Brahmin family their Vriti, the dues actually collected and the chance of collecting such dues in future, constitutes an element of property, but as against any particular Yajman, no Brahmin, in my opinion, has any right which can correctly be termed "property," that is, he has no right in them. In Ghelabhai v. Hargovan (3) the learned Judge Chandavarkar accepting the position laid down by Couch, C. J., that if the office of a priest be hereditary, the dues pertaining to it must be shared as immoveable property, goes on to hold that the hereditary office is, therefore, immoveable property. But it by no means follows that because for certain purposes 'Vrit' may be conveniently compared to immoveable property, it must, therefore, be termed as immoveable property.

The original Court found that plaintiffs were the Gurs, and the defendant was Thani, and that both Gurs and Thanis have been called in by the Chabrias to perform ceremonies, the plaintiffs having no exclusive right to do so, that prior to Asau 1968 the Gurs and Thanis shared all dues but 'Gaudan,' equally, the Gurs taking Rs. 5-0-0 and the Thanis Re. 1-0-0 of the 'Gaudan' which amounted to Rs. 6-0-0; that the Chabria Punchayet had passed a resolution not to employ the plaintiffs and to pay to the defendant only such portion of the Vriti as he would have been entitled to under the old practice; that defendant had not received more than he was personally entitled to; that Ramdas was under no obligation to call in the plaintiffs to perform ceremonies, for even under the system set up by the plaintiffs, he had the right to call in either a 'Gur' or a 'Thani'; that defendant had received in dues Rs. 18-8-0, being half of Rs 37-0-0 the total amount due under the old system; and that under the old system of distribution Rs. 5-0-0 of this would have been handed over to the Gurs, but that defendant was under no liability to hand it over because it had been paid to him in his individual capacity; that it was a condition of the Thanis' employment that they should acquiesce in the Gurs' share of the Vriti being devoted to the feeding of cows, etc. The injunction was refused on the ground that no exclusive right in the plaintiffs had been established and the suit was dismissed with costs.

The lower Court drew no issues, and it is not clear from the judgment what were the grounds of appeal. But the argument put before the Court was that the Thanis were merely the local agents of the Gurs, and were bound to hand over to the principals all dues received for distribution. This was quite a new case: but the Court went into the question and found that no agency was established. It held that no money had been received by defendant for the plaintiff. The appeal was dismissed.

In this Court, Mr. Fatehchand for the appellants frankly admits that he can make out no case for money received by defendant on behalf of the plaintiffs. He has concentrated his efforts on endeavouring to persuade the Court that if plaintiffs were the hereditary priests of the family of Ramdas Lalchand, they had a legal right to collect such dues as would have been paid to them in the ordinary course had they been called in to perform the ceremonies actually performed by defendants. And in the last resort he asserts that the defendant was partner of plaintiffs and bound to account for all receipts.

But it has been found, and is not now disputed, that defendant was as much entitled as plaintiffs to officiate as priest to the family of Ramdas, and equally entitled to receive dues, though in one special instance a less amount. He has no right to have defendant prohibited from attending the household of Ramdas or any other Chabria, or from receiving dues. The only question is whether defendant can be compelled to hand over any portion of the fees which he has already received or may hereafter receive. Plaintiffs have failed to make out their original allegation that all the money received by defendant was their property, that defendant was tortiously in possession of Rs. 35-11-0 belonging to them. They were equally unsuccessful in their attempt to prove receipt as agent; this is a question of fact on which both the lower Courts have held against them. The entirely new suggestion that there was a partnership is inconsistent with the pleadings, and with the memo. of appeal to this Court. No attempt has been made to show that a partnership was alleged before the original Court and that there is any evidence whatever to establish it. The mere fact that separate suits have been filed in respect of each Yajman from whom dues were received not only contradicts the theory of a partnership, but makes it impossible for the Court to take accounts as in a partnership.

We cannot cast defendant in damages as a trespasser, for both the lower Courts have held that he rightfully performed the ceremonies. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—(June 6, 1918).—The difference of opinion which has led to this case being referred to me is on the question whether the plaintiffs have any right to recover damages from the defendant as a trespasser. The facts found have been sufficiently stated in the two judgments which differ on this point. It is quite clear that (as stated by Crouch, A. J. C.) the plaintiffs cannot sue for the fees actually received by the defendant, or any part thereof, as if it were money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use, since he only received his proper fees (plus a gratuity of Rs. 4 in respect of the Gaudan ceremony) for ceremonies rightfully performed by him. But the plaint does not base the claim to relief on any specific allegation that the defendant received the fees to the plaintiff's use. It asserts generally that the defendant was not entitled to the fees and was bound to return them to the plaintiffs according to law. It is, therefore, wide enough to be treated as a suit against the defendant as a trespasser in the Vrit office, which plaintiffs claim to belong to them and to entitle them to certain payments as fees appertaining to the office. As such it is a suit of a similar kind to the one relating to the office of Kazi of Bombay, Muhammad Yussub v. Sayed Ahmed (6). Such a suit, as pointed out in that case at page xx is one for disturbance to an office, or (as it would now be classed) for trespass. And as shown in that case at pages xxxv—xxxvi, such an action cannot be maintained unless the sums claimed as fees are certain fixed payments annexed to the discharge of official duties and not mere gratuities of uncertain amount and of no legal obligation. In this particular case there can be no doubt that the fees received in respect of the ceremonies performed are fixed fees attached to the office, and I agree with the Judicial Commissioner on this point.

The exclusive right to officiate set up by the plaintiffs has been disproved, but the fact of their having claimed too much should not be held to preclude them from any relief to which they may be entitled on the proved facts, when the pleadings are wide enough to cover the latter claim, see Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam (17). The mere failure to prove the case set up does not, therefore, necessarily deprive the plaintiffs of any right to relief they otherwise may have against the defendant. On the facts found I can see no reasonable alternative to the view that the relationship between the Gurs (plaintiffs) and the Thanis (of which defendant is one) was that of co owners of the Vrit, the dues attached to the office being shared by them (equally except in two particular cases), and the actual officiator who receives the fees being a trustee for the payment of their share in such fees to the other co owners. If plaintiffs are entitled to relief on this basis, the pleadings are clearly wide enough to cover their claim to it; for the issues Nos. 2, 6 and 7 in the trial Court raise the essential points in a general form and there is no question of defendant being taken by surprise.

The main question, therefore, is whether defendant, though being a co-owner, is liable to plaintiffs for damages as a trespasser. The cases of Muhammad Yussub v. Sayad Ahmed (6), Sitarambhat v. Sitaram Ganesh (18) and Vithal Krishna Joshi v. Anant Ramchandra (7) are all cases of strangers in an office without any right; and such cases do not, therefore, exactly cover this question of defendant's liability. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in his judgment says that the defendant rightly performed the ceremonies and cannot, therefore, be treated as a trespasser. But it seems to me that this is not a necessary conclusion. The law allows a co owner to sue another co-owner for trespass, if the latter has ousted him and such ouster covers an act inconsistent with the enjoyment of the property by both: See Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVII, page 866, Article 1525, and Underhill's Law of Torts, 7th Edition, Article 111 at page 360. In this particular case the defendant in his written statement seeks to justify his action by the resolution of the Punchayet, and there is no doubt that the joint effect of that resolution and defendant's conduct in acting upon it and taking only the fees due to him instead of all the fees due for the ceremonies is to oust the plaintiffs from the office in regard to the particular fees that would otherwise have come to them. If then, this resolution of the Punchayet was not justified, the defendant has on the admitted facts clearly so conducted himself as to be liable to be sued by the plaintiffs as joint tort-feasor; and that being so, judgment can be recovered from him alone for the whole amount of the damages (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXVII, Articles 955, 957 at pages 487-498; Underhill's Law of Torts, 7th Edition, Article 35, page 112; and Pollock's Law of Torts, 7th Edition, page 194).

It has next to be decided whether the resolution of the Panchayet was a valid one or not, because if the caste had the power to exclude the plaintiffs from employment and so virtually dismiss them from the office, then no question of tort or trespass arises. The Joint Judge appears to have held that the Panchayet had such power. The learned Judicial Commissioner has given reasons to the contrary in his judgment while Crouch, A. J. C. does not discuss the point. Mr. Rupchand for respondent has asked me to hold that the case of Ghelabhai v. Hargovan (3), which is against him, was wrongly decided and that the right view is the one adopted by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, viz, that under Hindu Law the exclusive right claimed by a priest to officiate at ceremonies of a family, because his ancestors had before him performed similar ceremonies, is not enforceable at law, Gour Mani Debi v. Chairman of the Panihati Municipality (1) and Ramakrishna v. Ranga (19).

In one sense it is not necessary for me to decide whether such a claim is or is not enforceable by law, because this is not a suit for declaration that plaintiffs have an exclusive right to officiate, and even the injunction sought is not one to restrain defendant from officiating, but from receiving fees to which he is not entitled. As pointed out in the learned Judicial Commissioner's judgment, preventive relief which would have the result of forcing a particular priest on a Yajman is generally refused by the Bombay Courts, though the hereditary priest is saved from a pecuniary loss by being allowed to recover from the usurper of his office the fees wrongfully received for officiating. The decision in Ghelabhai's case (3) goes further than this and says a Hindu is legally bound to accept the ministrations of a hereditary family priest, unless the latter has become Patita (outcaste) or has declined to officiate. Whether the Yajman is so bound or not, is not a point directly arising in this case. But the plaintiff's right to recover damages depends on their being rightful co-owners of the Vrit, and if they have been lawfully dismissed by the Panchayet, so as to be no longer rightful holders of the office, their case falls to the ground. Mr. Rupchand's contention that the view taken in Ghelabhai's case (3) is erroneous, must, therefore, be gone into.

The question turns upon whether there is adequate authority for holding that an hereditary family priest has by custom certain rights against the family which neither the family nor the caste has power to annul except on the specific grounds already mentioned. The Bombay view is based mainly on the Smriti of Narada and the dissertation thereon of Jaggannanatha, which are contained in Colebrook's Digest, Volume I, pages 375, 377. The Smriti plainly forbids a Yajman from forsaking an hereditary priest, who is ready to officiate and is guilty of no grievous offence. The dissertation among other things lays down that the uninterrupted performance of sacrifice by father and son as family priests succeeds to make them hereditary priests whithin the meaning of the Smriti without proof of any specific appointment of the father and his descendants as family priests for ever. The above seems to me to justify the Bombay view which is based on it. Nothing in Mr. Rupchand's arguments meets the fact that the Smriti does contain a direct prohibition which logically invests an hereditary family priest with certain rights against the family; and I can see no sufficient reason for venturing to differ from Mr. Justice Chandavarkar's reasoning and conclusions. The main point on which a difference of opinion has arisen is whether it is politic and in accordance with Hindu Law that, a Yajman should be bound to employ a particular priest, though he is an hereditary family priest. Mr. Justice Chandavarkar says the rights given to an hereditary family priest are quite in consonance with Hindu Law and notions. Mr. Justice Mookerji in Gour Mani Debi's case (1) thinks otherwise and cites texts against forcing a priest on a Yajman. Where such high authorities on Hindu Law differ on a point like this it is difficult for an European Judge to say which view should be accepted as correct. But I think the difficulty is sufficiently solved by applying the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (20). It is there said: "The duty, therefore, of an European Judge, who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law, is not so much to enquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has there been sanctioned by usage. For under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law." The Smriti of Narada as an authority of antiquity is of greatweight (cf. Mayne's Hindu Law, 5th Edition, page 31) and the doctrine based on it by the Bombay High Court Judges is fairly deducible from it. But from the meagre and general nature of its contents it is necessarily open to attack, and the main question is whether the interpretation put on it in Bombay has been sanctioned by usage. This must, I think, clearly be answered in the affirmative, so far as the Bombay Presidency is concerned, for such rights have been asserted and recognized by the Courts from very early days. Thus in the case of Ramchunder Bapooji v. Ramchunder Lakshmun (15) cited in Vithal Krishna Joshi v. Anant Ramchandra (7) it was said that the view "that a Brahmin may employ whom he likes as his Upadhya, (i e, family priest) is opposed to the custom of the country" and other cases to the same effect are mentioned at page 8. On the other hand the Bengal Full Bench decision of 1852, referred to in Gour Mani Debi v. Chairman of the Panihati Municipality (1) and the texts referred to in the same case at page 1064* (which have not the same force in Western India as they have in Bengal) may have prevented a similar usage from there growing up or at any rate the question of usage does not appear to have been given any weight. And the Madras decision in Ramakristna v. Ranga (19) is mainly based on the ground that no usage had been alleged or proved, entitling the plaintiff to the right claimed by him. So far as Sind is concerned, there is no reason to think that the usage in this Province differs from that in the rest of Bombay Presidency. In Gur Sukhraj v. Gur Chandiram (21) the Bombay decisions in the Kazi's similar cases were cited and approved; and that case and the one of 1870 cited in Manghirmal v. Vithalram (13) show that there is nothing new in the Vrit rights set up by plaintiffs but (strangely enough) disputed by the defendant, who benefits by them. For these reasons, I concur with the view of the learned Judicial Commissioner.

It follows that the Panchayet could not legally dismiss the plaintiffs merely because the latter refused to effect an alienation which this Court has refused to recognise. The dismissal was not due to any misconduct of the plaintiffs but was a patent form of "boycotting" and the evidence adduced by defendant with a view to showing plaintiffs' unfitness to officiate has been rightly disbelieved by the Sub-Judge.

The justification set up by the defendant on the basis of the Panchayet resolution, therefore, fails. The Sub-Judge, however, has expressed the opinion that "When the Yajmans refuse to give anything for the Guru now, the Thanis are helpless and have to submit to the terms imposed by the Yajmans." This is relevant to the question of defendant's liability as a joint tort feasor, but it is based on the evidence of only one witness (Gidan) and it is doubtful if the real facts are before the Court. It has also to be considered whether this plea would in any case legally justify the commission of tort under the principles of Common Law summarised in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXVII, Articles 913-916, 967 and 977 at pages 469, 470, 492, 498. I think the answer is clearly in the negative. Even assuming that, if the Thanis had refused to act on the resolution of the Panchayet, there would have been imminent risk of injury to themselves yet their acting upon the resolution was clearly not bona fide and reasonably done with the sole intention and in pursuance of the duty of obviating such risk, (Halsbury's Laws of England Volume, XXVII, page 499). This is clear from the defendant's pleadings that the plaintiffs became interested in the Vrit only about 30 years ago, that no Brahmin has any legal right over the Vrit and that the resolution was a valid one. In the face of these assertions it would not be open to defendants to set up the inconsistent plea that the resolution was acted on by the Thanis, merely because their rights were threatened with risk of injury if they did not do so.

(20) 12 M. I. A. 397 at p. 436; 1 B. L. R. P. C. 1; 10 W. R P.C 17: 2 Sar. P. C. J. 361; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 135; 20 E. R. 389.

(21) 1 Selected Decision of Sind Sadar Courts 353 at p. 357.

Concurring, therefore, with the Judicial Commissioner, I reverse the Sub-Judge's decree in dismissing the suit and grant the plaintiffs a decree for recovery of Rs. 23 8 0 from the defendant with half their costs throughout. I do not allow them full costs as the plaint overstated their legal rights, and their Pleaders have not, even in this Court, put the defendant's liability on its real basis.

Pre-emption suit—Pre-emptor indebted—Good faith.

The facts that a pre-emptor is indebted, is a minor and is not possessed of any means to enable him to purchase any new property are no justification for the inference that a suit brought on his behalf is not brought in good faith.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordidate Judge, Gonda, dated the 29th November 1919, confirming that of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 15th November 1918.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Chandra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The only question for consideration is whether the suit was brought in good faith. The Courts below found against the plaintiff. The sole ground on which that view is based is that the plaintiff was indebted and was a minor, that the suit had been brought under the guardianship of a woman named Musammat Idan, who was in the keeping of Haider Husain, his uncle, and that the plaintiff was not possessed of any means to enable him to purchase any new property.

The inference raised from the above premises is, however, not justified. A man may be indebted and yet may be anxious to get new property by further borrowing or obtaining financial assistance from his relations, if he considers the bargain sufficiently profitable. The Courts below rely on the decision in Maharani v. Ram Adhar (1). But as pointed out in Ram Sahay v. Jagdamba Singh (2) the circumstances of that case were entirely different. There the pre-emptor was found to have parted with her own interest and to have had no possible personal object in pre-empting the share which was sold by her husband's nephew. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant states that it would be possible for the plaintiff to pay the money required for pre-emption without transferring any portion of his property, for which the permission of the District Judge would be necessary. Haider Husain is the certificated guardian of the plaintiff, and it makes no difference to the defendant vendee whether the plaintiff is supplied the purchase money for pre-emption by Haider Husain or gets it otherwise. In Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (3) the mere fact that the suit was instituted at the expense of another person and that the person claiming pre-emption was merely a nominal plaintiff acting on his behalf was held to be immaterial.

The plaintiff is admittedly a co-sharer in the sub division and mahal in which the property sold is situated. The defendant vendee is a stranger. The real consideration settled and paid has been found to have been Rs. 600.

Mortgage—Interest, rate of, fixed and certain—Mortgagee, right of, to receive profits in excess—Construction of document.

Where under a mortgege-deed the rate of interest which the mortgagee is to receive is fixed and certain he is not entitled to any portion of the usufruct which might be in excess of that rate, and the mortgagor is entitled to maintain a suit for accounts to be taken of the profits realized by the mortgagee from the mortgaged property. [p. 693, col. 1]

It would require very clear words to induce a Court to put upon a mortgage-deed such a construction as would entitle the mortgagee to claim interest and such portion of the usufruct as might be in excess of it. [p. 693, col. 1.]

Where a mortgage-deed provided that the net profits of the mortgaged property, which were estimated at a certain fixed amount, would go towards the payment of interest at the stipulated rate due to the mortgagee, that if the gross rental then fetched by the mortgaged property became deficient afterwards the mortgagor would pay the deficit, that if the revenue assessed on the property was enhanced the mortgagor would pay the extra revenue, that if by any efforts of the mortgagee the profits derived from the mortgaged property increased the advantage of that increase would go to the mortgagee, that the mortgagor would have no right to claim surplus profits on that account and that the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem the property after the lapse of the fixed period on payment of the principal money secured by the mortgage and such deficient profits or extra revenue as might be recoverable under the above conditions:

Held, that in a suit for redemption of the above mortgage the mortgagor was entitled to claim an account of the profits, derived by the mortgagee from the mortgaged property although no provision was made in the deed to cover a case where the profits might increase without any special efforts on the part of the mortgagee. [p. 694, col. 1.]

Mr. Mumtaz Husain and Babu Daya Kishan Seth, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, Syed Ali Mohammad and Syed Mohammad Sibtain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiff for the redemption of a mortgage effected by his father, Gayadin Lal, in favour of Parsotam Das, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants, on the 1st May 1880. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 895 and among other conditions the mortgage-deed provided that the net profits of the mortgaged property which were then estimated at Rs. 134-1-0 per year shall go towards the payment of interest due to the mortgagee at Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem, that if the gross rental then fetched by the mortgaged property became deficient afterwards the mortgagor would pay the deficit, that if the revenue assessed on the property was enhanced, the mortgagor would pay the extra revenue, and that the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem the property after the lapse of ten years in the month of Jeth on payment of the principal money secured by the mortgage and such deficient profits or extra revenue as might be recoverable under the above conditions. The mortgage deed also contained a covenant that if by any efforts of the mortgagee, such as the construction of wells, ponds and the like, the profits derivable from the mortgaged property increased, the advantage of that increase would go to the mortgagee and that the mortgagor would have no right to claim surplus profits on that account.

The first point for consideration in this appeal is whether in viw of the terms above specified the mortgagor is entitled to claim an account of the profits derived by the mortgagee from the mortgaged property. If the net profits estimated at the time of the mortgage be taken into consideration, it would seem that the mortgagee was entitled on redemption to the principal money secured by the mortgage and to keep any extra profits which he might have derived by virtue of improvements made by him or efforts made to enhance the rental. But if the rate of interest provided for by the deed of mortgage be taken into consideration it is obvious that the mortgagor had limited the extent of the benefit which he was to receive. The interest stipulated was the measure of the recompense which he was to receive for the advancement of the loan and if any profits were derived in excess of the interest stipulated for, the mortgagee could not claim the same. The view taken by the Court of first instance was that the mortgagee was entitled to the principal money secured by the mortgage and that the plaintiff could not claim an account of the profits from the mortgagee; but the lower Appellate Court adopted a different view. The latter construction appears to be more equitable and consistent with the intention of the parties so far as it can be gathered from the document in question. The language is far from clear; but it seems that if the rate of interest which the mortgagee was to receive was fixed and certain, any extra profits which the mortgagee might receive after paying the interest stipulated for would not be his except in the circumstances specified in the deed. As pointed out in Rajah Amir Hasan Khan v. Mukhdoom Singh (1), it would require very clear words to induce a Court to put upon a document such construction as would entitle the mortgagee to claim the interest and such portion of the usufruct as might be in excess of it. The mortgagor did not then anticipate that in the natural course of things the profits of the mortgaged property would exceed the estimate he had then arrived at. He made a provision for such increase as might take place in consequence of any efforts made by the mortgagee to improve the property and allowed the mortgagee to appropriate the benefits resulting from those improvements. No provision was, however, made to cover a case where the profits might increase without any special efforts on the part of the mortgagee. The lower Appellate Court was, therefore, justified in allowing accounts to be taken of the profits realised by the mortgagee from the mortgaged property.

The mortgagee claimed a certain amount due on a deed of further charge executed by Gayadin Lal on the 4th June 1889. The Courts below disallowed the amount on the ground that no legal necessity therefor was established. The deed of further charge purports to have been executed to pay two prior deeds of a similar nature; but it is not necessary to consider whether the debts, for the payment of which that deed was in the main executed, were antecedent debts, because the accounts accepted by the lower Appellate Court show that the profits derived from the mortgaged property were such as to satisfy the money due on the deed of further charge also. The amount claimed by the defendants in this appeal on account of the deed of further charge is only Rs. 3,524 exclusive of the principal money claimed on account of the previous possessory mortgage. The profits derived from the mortgaged property amount, according to the above account, to Rs. 6,198-0-3 up to 1320 Fasli.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for breach of a contract.

The plaintiff who is a dealer in flour and other goods at Rungpur used to get his goods from the defendant's firm at Allahabad.

The questions which arise in this case are first whether there was a complete contract between the parties; and secondly, if so what is the principle on which the plaintiff should be entitled to damages.

The Courts below are of opinion that there was no complete contract.

Now, the question whether there was such a contract or not, is to be decided upon a construction of certain letters which passed between the parties.

The first letter is dated the 21st July 1914 written by the plaintiff to the defendant. In this letter the plaintiff stated as follows:—'Within 5 or 7 days in July I shall send an order for one wagon of goods. Please write swoda in respect thereof." It was further stated that the plaintiff would send for 2 wagons for delivery in August, 2 wagons in September, 2 wagons in October and 2 in November and that these wagons would be sent for (one at a time) at an interval of 15 days. The plaintiff asked the defendants to quote rates. On the 24th July the defendants sent a reply in which they gave the present rates i.e., for July and they stated that in August and September the rate would be increased by 2 annas in the maund and in October and November the increase would be at the rate of 4 annas per maund over the July rate.

It appears that on the 24th July the plaintiff had sent a telegram ordering delivery of one wagon of goods on a former contract and that was despatched by the defendants. On the 26th July 1914 the plaintiff wrote as follows:—"The goods ordered for might have been sent by you; please write swoda for one wagon for the month of July in respect of flour etc." Then followed the rates of the goods as quoted in the defendant's letter dated the 24th July. Then the letter proceeds as follows:—"Please write swoda for four wagons in respect thereof. On arrial of the goods ordered, I shall send for one wagon of July swoda. Further I shall make the swoda for the months of October and November pucca hereafter. Please send a reply to this letter." This is the document upon which the suit is based, as completing the contract for delivery of one more wagon in July and two wagons in August and September.

The translation given of the letters which were in Hindi or Mahajani character is taken from the translation supplied to us on behalf of the appellant and which is different from the translation made by the Court translator of the appellate side. The translation made by a senior translator on the original side of this Court agrees with the translation made by the appellant. We have also been supplied with copies of the original letters in the Bengali character.

The main point to be considered in connection with the construction of the letters is whether the words * * (sowda likhengeii) refer to the writer of the letter or to the addressee, i.e., do they men "I will write sowda" or "you will please write sowda."

ing that the contract was not yet complete. But it appears from Exhibit 2 that in the last line of the letter, namely chithika jabab likhengeji the words "likhenge ;i" cannot possibly refer to the writer of the letter: they must have reference to the person addressed namely the defendant : and if that is so, the same meaning should be attached to the words appearing in the earlier part of the document viz., gari and sowda likhengeji. We think that the words sowda likhengeji must mean that the defendant was to enter up the sowda (contract).

Then the learned District Judge lays much stress on the fact that the words used in the document are used in the future tense and that is also relied upon by the learned Pleader for the respondent. But the future tense used is in connection with the contract for October and November for which, it is expressly stated in the letter, contract would be made hereafter : and that is distinguished from the sowda (contract) for July and August with respect to which the plaintiff wrote to the defendant to "write sowda or contract." That this is the correct construction of the document, also appears from the fact that the plaintiff made a remittance of Rs. 850 to the defendant firm at Allahabad on the 1st August and also sent Rs. 1,000 on the 5th August and orders were sent along with the remittance giving details of the goods to be supplied under the terms of the contract.

It appears that on the 29th July the defendants sent a telegram to the plaintiff in which they gave different rates from what were quoted in their letter dated 24th July. On the next day, 30th July, the plaintiff wrote a letter to the defendants expressing surprise at the different rates given in their telegram. It was further stated in that letter that the plaintiff had accepted the proposal of the defendants and sent orders for 6 wagons of goods of which the defendants had despatched only one. The letter went on to say, "The rest i. e., 1 for July and four for August and September still remain undespatched. After entering into contract with you, I have sold the goods here to my customers in advance at the old rate mentioned in your letter. So you see I will be put in a very false position and incur severe loss if I be driven to accept the rate mentioned in your telegram. I hope you will be pleased to rectify your mistake and despatch the goods at the former rate mentioned in your letter of 1st Sravan Sudi Sambat 1971."

Now, before the telegram of the 29th July was sent from Allahabad, a letter dated 28th July had been despatched on the 29th by the defendants to the plaintiff in which the same rates as were quoted on the 24th July, were given : and up to that time there was no repudiation of the original contract. It was only in the telegram so despatched that the defendants appear to have resiled from the original contract.

The defendants did not return the money until after the institution of the suit which was instituted on the 14th September 1914, Even if there was no complete contract contained in Exhibit 2, it seems to us that after the defendant had sent in his quotation and the plaintiff made the remittance and gave the order, there was acceptance of the offer which constituted a complete contract.

The plaintiff asked the Court to call upon the defendants to produce the letters and the Court made an order to that effect. But the defendants did not produce the letters. It does not appear whether the defendants were actually served with notice to produce them. However, that may be, the fact remains that in accordance with what was written in Exhibit 2, the plaintiff made the remittance and gave orders for the goods to be supplied.

We are accordingly of opinion that there was a complete contract upon these documents.

The next question is as to the damages.

The plaintiff has stated his claim for damages in two schedules attached to the plaint. In the first, he gave the difference between the market rate at Allahabad and the contract rate at Allahabad and in the second schedule he gave the market rate at Allahabad and the market rate at Rungpur and claimed the balance after allowing for costs of freight and bags. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the principle on which the damages were claimed was erroneous because in his opinion the damage in the second schedule was too remote and should not be allowed. The learned District Judge was also of opinion that the plaintiff in claiming damages at the rate prevailing at Allahabad had claimed on an erroneous principle. He apparently overlooked the fact that in the second schedule the plaintiff had also claimed the difference between the contract rate and the prevailing rate on the day of delivery at Rungpur.

Our attention has been drawn to a passage in the judgment of the learned Judge where he says "There is no reliable evidence to show at what rates the goods were available at Rungpur the place of delivery," Before taking up the question of damages, the learned Judge in another portion of his judgment says "In view of the finding recorded above, it is hardly necessary to decide whether the plaintiff suffered any loss on account of his not having received the goods from the defendants."

It is clear, therefore, that he did not properly apply his mind to the question of damages and in the next place it appears from his judgment that he entirely overlooked the fact that the plaintiff had claimed damages at the Rungpur rate. We do not think that he meant to arrive at any definite finding on the evidence on the record which we unde stand is entirely one-sided.

We think that the rate of damages should be the difference between the price prevailing at Rungpur on the day of delivery and the contract rate plus the cost of freight and bags.

It these circumstances we think that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question of damages may be gone into and the appeal disposed of according to law.

Costs will abide the result.

Custom—Inheritance—Jadubansi Ahirs of village Dharam Khera, District Kheri—Collaterals preferred to daughters—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of.

By virtue of a tribal and family custom among the Jadubansi Ahirs of village Dharam Khera, in the District of Kheri, collaterals are, in matters of inheritance, entitled to preference over daughters and their issue. [p. 697, col. 1.]

Where a wajib-ul-arz, purporting to have been dictated or agreed to by the ancestor of the family under consideration, recorded that the custom observed by the family relating to inheritance was that, if a person died without leaving a son, his widow was entitled to remain in possession of his estate for life without any power of transfer, and that, if there was no widow the collaterals would succeed and in their default daughters and their sons would succeed to the inheritance:

Held, that the wajib-ul-arz established that there was a custom in the family by virtue of which daughters and their issue were postponed in favour of collaterals where they existed. [p. 697, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated 30th January 1919, upholding that of the Munsif, Kheri, dated the 5th April 1918.

Babu Basudeo Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to certain property which belonged to Kesri, who died leaving a widow, Musammat Ram Kuar, a daughter Musammat Kailasa, and a grand-son by a predeceased daughter named Balakram. He also left two brothers, Tika and Kallu, who are the plaintiffs.

On the 19th July 1917 Musammat Ram Kuar made a gift of certain plots of land situated in the village Dharam Khera, which formed part of the estate inherited by her from her husband, in favour of Balakram. On the same day she executed another deed of gift by which she gave a 21/2 biswansis share in the village Dharam Khera, Patti Mahanand, to her daughter Musammat Kailasa It is not now disputed that the plaintiffs lived separately from Kesri. Their sole contention is that by virtue of a tribal and family custom daughters and their issues were excluded from inheritance in the presence of collaterals and the deeds of gift aforesaid could not, therefore, affect their reversionary rights. The Courts below found against them and dismissed the claim.

The plaintiffs produced in support of the custom set up by them a copy of the wajib-ul-arz of the village Dharam Khera in which Kesri resided and in which the disputed properties are situated.

That wajib-ul-arz records that the custom observed by the families of the Zamindars of the village relating to inheritance was that if a co-sharer died without leaving a son his widow was entitled to remain in possession of his estate for life without any power of transfer; if there was no widow, the collaterals would succeed and in their default daughters and their sons would succeed to the inheritance. The wajib-ul-arz purports to have been dictated or agreed to by the co-sharers of the village, one of whom was Khusal, the father of Kesri, and the present plaintiffs. It purports to have been signed by Hulas Rai, the Patwari, and Bihari, the Lamberdar. The village belonged entirely to Jadubansi Ahirs; and considering the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, there can be no doubt that there was a custom among them by virtue of which daughters and their issue were postponed in favour of collaterals where they existed. Some oral evidence has been produced to show that on certain occasions the custom had been observed. The Court of first instance adversely criticised that evidence; but the lower Appellate Court does not refer to it. The fact, however, remains that the wajib-ul-arz, which was dictated by Jadubansi Ahirs, including the father of Kesri and the plaintiffs, recorded what was the tribal custom observed by the families of Jadubansi Ahirs, who were Zamindars. By virtue of that custom the collaterals were entitled to preference over daughters and their issue. As observed in Suraj Bakhsh v. Thakurain Chhab Kuar (1) a wajib ul-arz is properly admissible to prove a custom set out therein and the entries made therein where it appears that those entries indicate the existence of a well-established custom rather than connote the views of individuals as to the practice which they wish to see prevailing in the village or tribe. Where the custom is startlingly at variance with the law, a Court is entitled to look for substantial corroborations, but a custom excluding daughters and their issue from inheritance or postponing them in favour of collaterals is by no means uncommon. The decision in Bandi Bibi v. Musharraf (2) dose not apply because what was set up therein was purely a family custom and there was nothing to show that the persons who dictated the wajib ul arz were persons of the same family.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed for a declaration that the deeds of gift executed by Musammat Ram Kuar in favour of Musammat Kailasa and Balakram on the 19th July 1917 would not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs will in the circumstances get their costs here and hitherto from the contesting defendants respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—This appeal arises out of two suits which were instituted by the plaintiffs-appellants for declaration of their title and confirmation or in the alternative recovery of possession of certain plots of land. It appears that similar suits had been instituted in 1914 by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants, for a similar declaration and consequential relief with respect to the same subject-matter. These suits were dismissed by the Munsif after contest but on appeal the Subordinate Judge gave permission to the plaintiffs to withdraw the suits with liberty to bring fresh suits on the same cause of action. Accordingly, the plaintiffs instituted the suits out of which this appeal arises. The Munsif held that the order of the Subordinate Judge in the previous suits was passed without jurisdiction and, therefore, the decision of the Munsif in the previous suits was res judicata. An appeal having been preferred against the decision of the Munsif the learned District Judge also held that the decision of the Munsif in the previous suits was res judicata. The learned District Judge came to this conclusion, relying on the case of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (1). This second appeal has been filed against the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge.

The first question that arises for decision is what is the effect of the order of the Subordinate Judge granting permission in the previous suits to bring fresh suits on the same cause of action? It is contended by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants that though the order of the Subordinate Judge giving permission to the plaintiffs to withdraw the suits with liberty to bring fresh suits was not strictly in compliance with the provisions of Order XXIII, rules 1, Civil Procedure Code, yet it was not an order without jurisdiction. The learned Subordinate Judge, it is urged, had jurisdiction to hear the appeal and while hearing the appeal, passed an erroneous order under Order XXIII, rule 1. On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the respondent that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was void and a mere nullity. We have, therefore, to decide whether that order was without jurisdiction or whether simply an error of law had been committed by the Subordinate Judge in the exercise of jurisdiction. In my opinion this is clearly a case where the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order. In the case of Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Meer Mynooddeen Khan (2) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council laid down as follows:—"The present question turns upon this principle, that wherever jurisdiction is given to a Court by an Act of Parliament, or by a Regulation in India (which has the same effect as an Act of Parliament), and such jurisdiction is only given upon certain specified terms contained in the Regulation itself, it is a universal principle that these terms must be complied with, in order to create and raise the jurisdiction, for if they be not complied with the jurisdiction does not arise." In the case of Hira Lal Mitra v. Uday Chandra Dey (3) it was laid down following the case of Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (4) that "Courts in India have no general power of dismissing a suit with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on the same matter. The only power they have in this respect is that given by Order XXIII, rule 1, sub rule (2), Civil Procedure Code." Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to grant the order could only arise if the conditions laid down in Order XXIII, rule 1, were fulfilled. It is conceded that the terms of Order XXIII, rule 1, were not complied with in this case. The result is that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was absolutely without jurisdiction and was, therefore, void and a nullity. The decision in the case of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (1) which is on all fours with the present case is based upon the view that I have laid down above, and, as I have shown, correctly lays down the law. In the case of Satyabadi Gountia v. Bediadhar Bar Panda (5) which is also on all fours with the present case, it was laid down that: "The order of the Appellate Court granting leave to withdraw amounted to a decision that the evidence on the record was not sufficient to support the plaintiff's case, and, therefore, a subsequent suit between the same parties, in which the same matters were substantially in issue, was barred by the rule of res judicata." So, whatever view may be taken, whether the decision of the Subordinate Judge was without jurisdiction or amounted to a decision that the evidence on the record was not sufficient to support the plaintiff's case, it must be held that the present suits would be barred by the doctrine of res judicata. The difficulty suggested, that the Munsif could not treat a decision in the same case between the same parties of another Court of co ordinate or superior jurisdiction as a decision without jurisdiction and then proceed to ignore it, is not in my opinion real or substantial. If, as I have held, the order of the Subordinate Judge was without jurisdiction, and not erroneous in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and so was void and a nullity, it is quite competent for any Court, whether exercising higher or lower or co-ordinate jurisdiction to treat that order as void and a mere nullity. There is no warrant for suggesting that a Court when determining the plea of res judicata is not entitled to consider the question of the competency of the Court which passed the previous decree, as "in order that a judgment may be conclusive between the parties, the essential pre requisite is that it should be the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure", see Krishna Kishore De v. Amar Nath Khettry (6). The result is that in my view this case is concluded not only by the decision in the case of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (1) but is also fully covered by the decision of this Court in the case of Satyabadi Gountia v. Bediadhar Bar Panda (5). This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

COUTTS, J.—I agree. I accept the view of the law as laid down in Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (1).

Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Custom—Widow, childless—Estate taken by widow, nature of.

A wajib-ul-arz purporting to record a custom prevailing in the family of the proprietors of a particular village contained an express direction that a childless widow can hold the property of her husband for her life to the exclusion of the heirs of her husband who get it after her death. On a question arising as to whether the widow had powers of alienation:

Held, that the widow took a life-estate merely and consequently had no power of alienation. [p. 700, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 9th June 1919, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 30th January 1919.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan and Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the property of Mansur Ali, who died about 20 years ago, leaving a widow, Musammat Shauran. On the 3rd June 1918 Musammat Shauran mortgaged the said property with possession in favour of the defendant-appellant. The plaintiff-respondent is the brother of Mansur Ali and his allegation is that according to the custom obtaining in the family to which Mansur Ali belonged the widow of a childless person succeeded to the estate of her husband for life without any power of alienation and that on her death the estate reverted to the heirs of her husband. The Courts below found in favour of the plaintiff respondent and decreed the claim They held that the plaintiff respondent would be entitled to succeed to the property of Mansur Ali on the death of Musammat Shauran and that the mortgage effected by the latter in favour of the defendant-appellant was not binding on the plaintiff-respondent.

The only question which has been pressed for consideration in this appeal is whether the wajib-ul-arz has been correctly construed and bears out the custom set up by the plaintiff respondent. The wajib-ul-arz purports to record a custom prevailing in the family of the proprietors of the village Hunhuna, in which Mansur Ali owned the disputed share. It was verified among other persons by Imam Bakhsh, the father of Mansur Ali and the plaintiff-respondent. It states:—"The custom with regard to the distribution of inheritance in the family is that if a co sharer has two wives by marriage belonging to his caste and one of the wives has a son and the other wife has many sons the division of shares takes place by halves. If one wife has issue and the other is childless, the wife who has issue will get the share in preference to the wife who has no issue. If joint, the latter will get maintenance. But if she separates herself, so much sir land will be set apart for her with power of alienation as may be sufficient for her maintenance, regard being had to the extent of the share (left by the deceased). If any co sharer, who has no issue, adopts to himself any male relation of his, other than from among the relations of his wife, the person adopted shall be in possession of his share in his place after his death. A widow who has no issue remains in possession over the share of her husband after his death for her life. The heirs belonging to the family of her husband cannot get possession over his share. After her death that share passes of course to the heirs belonging to the family of her husband."

The only condition in which a childless widow is allowed an alienable interest is thus where her husband lived jointly with the other members of his family and the widow decides to separate herself after the death of her husband and accepts some sir land with alienable rights in full settlement of her claim to maintenance. After describing how the division should take place where a person leaves some children by a wife of a respectable caste and others by another wife of a low caste, the wajib-ul-arz goes on to say: "If there are three co-sharers, who are own brothers, born of the same mother, owning equal shares, and out of them one brother separates and the other two remain joint and out of those two one dies without issue and without leaving any widow, that share would be divided among the remaining two brothers in equal shares regardless of the fact that any of them was joint or separate. If the deceased brother leaves a widow surviving him, then that widow will remain in possession without power of alienation for her life. After her that share will be divided in the manner aforesaid." Relying on the latter clause, the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant urges that the power of alienation is taken away only where a person who was living jointly with his brother leaves a widow behind him. The wajib ul-arz, however, contains an express direction that a childless widow can hold the property of her husband for her life to the exclusion of the heirs of her husband, who get it after her death. It does not expressly say that she shall have no power of alienation. But reading the wajib ul-arz as a whole there can be no room for doubt that the only circumstance in which she can get an absolute estate is where she is entitled solely to maintenance and accepts a composition in lieu of it.

The Court below was not much impressed with the oral evidence adduced in support of the custom, but it observed that though the evidence was of a flimsy nature so much was clear beyond all doubt from that evidence that in none of the instances cited, the properties which the widows inherited from their husbands passed to the heirs of those widows after their deaths. The estate reverted in each instance to the heirs of their husbands. It pointed out that if the widows had actually taken the entire estate left by their husbands as full owners, the estate on their deaths would have passed to their heirs and not to the heirs of their husbands and treated that fact as affording a strong piece of evidence corroborating the custom set up and recorded in the wajib-ul arz giving childless widows only a life estate.

No question of adverse possession arises. The question of legal necessity was found against the defendant-appellant by the Court of first instance and the propriety of that finding was not challenged in the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, conditions of applicability of—Identity of causes of action—Plaintiff, whether bound, to sue for relief—Joint property—Partition, right to sue for, nature of.

The cardinal condition of the applicability of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, is that the cause of action in both cases shall be identical. Moreover, it is essential that the plaintiff should have been bound to sue in the earlier case for the relief for which he prays in the subsequent suit. [p. 703, col. 1.]

The right of an owner in joint property to sue for partition at any time so long as the property shall remain undivided is a continually recurring right and once the immoveable property in suit has been declared to be common property the plaintiff has a right to come in at any time and ask for partition. [p. 703, col. 2.]

On the 17th February 1912 plaintiff sued defendant for rendition of account and dissolution of partnership alleging a partnership of long standing and purchase of certain immoveable property out of the profits of the partnership The suit was valued at Rs 130 only and on the defendant's objection as to valuation the plaintiff's Pleader stated that the suit was not in respect of immoveable property but only in respect of the profits arising out of it. The matter was referred to arbitration and the award declared the property to be partnership property and the plaintiff to be entitled to one-half share in it. A decree was eventually passed in accordance with this award.

On the 11th June 1914 the plaintiff instituted the present suit for rendition of accounts of the property decreed in the former suit and for its partition The Court gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of one-half of the property in suit and directed that accounts be taken of the mesne profits The defendant appealed to the High Court and contended that the suit was barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that though in the first case the plaintiff was bound to sue for partition of the immoveable property, he was not bound to sue for its partition by metes and bounds: [p. 703, col. 1.]

(2) that the award and the decree passed in accordance therewith did in fact deal with the right of the parties in the immoveable property by declaring it as their property in common tenancy in equal shares; [p. 703, col. 1.]

(3) that the present suit was not one between partners for dissolution of partnership and for rendition of partnership accounts, but was one between tenants-in-common for mesne profits and partition of the common property; [p. 703, col. 2.]

(4) that under the circumstances the first suit was no bar to the present suit because there was no identity of causes of action in the two suits. [p. 703, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, dated the 23rd December 1915.

This appeal first came on for hearing before Chevis, Acting Chief Justice, and LeRossignol, J., on 1st March 1920.

ORDER.

CHEVIS, ACTING, C. J. AND LEROSSIGNOL, J.—On the 17th of February 1912 the plaintiff in this case brought a suit against the defendant in this case for rendition of account and dissolution of partnership. In that plaint he recited a partnership of long standing, the opening of a shop dealing in various articles of merchandise and its closure some fifteen days before the suit. He asserted that there had been no rendition of account or dissolution of partnership and that immoveable property had been purchased out of the profits of the partnership and he sued as well for an account of the income from that immoveable property and for its division. The reliefs for which he prayed in detail were that the partnership should be dissolved, that the account should be adjusted of the partnership business including the income from the immoveable property belonging to the partnership, and finally that a Receiver should be appointed. The suit was valued at only Rs. 130 and the defendant's first objection was that as the immoveable property alleged by the plaintiff to belong to the partnership was worth something between Rs. 25,000 and Rs, 45,000 the suit was undervalued. This objection elicited from the plaintiff's Pleader the clear statement that the suit was not in respect of that immoveable property but solely in respect of the profits derived from it and Court-fee was consequently not payable on the capital value. To this the defendant's Pleader retorted that the suit did not lie for a partial rendition of account but must include the whole of the property of the partnership of which partition should be demanded. Upon these statements certain preliminary and technical issues were framed including one whether the plaintiff had sued for only a part of the partnership property. But before parties went to proof upon these issues the matter was referred by them to arbitration and the arbitrator, whose award is printed at page 39 of the paper-book, gave the following award :— That the parties were partners in equal shares; that the property entered in a list filed by the plaintiff had been purchased out of the profits of the shops and, therefore, was partnership property ; that as he had been entrusted to decide only the dispute regarding the account and had not been authorised to make a partition, he made no award regarding partition but advised the plaintiff to sue formally therefor ; and finally he found that plaintiff should be given a decree declaratory of his ownership in one-half share of the immoveable property and that he should pay Rs. 327 to the defendant. Upon that award, after objections raised and decided, a decree issued declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to half the property in the list filed by him and is to pay Rs. 327 to the defendant. This decree is dated 28th February 1913.

On the 11th of June 1914 the present suit was instituted by plaintiff and contained the following recitals :—

That a previous suit for rendition of account and dissolution of partnership had been referred to arbitration and that the District Judge had passed a decree in accordance with the award; that the immoveable property now in suit was owned by the plaintiff and the defendant in equal shares but the defendant alone was in possession and refused to render to the plaintiff any account of the income thereof; and he, therefore, prayed for rendition of account of the said property from 17th February 1912 up to date and a decree be passed for any sum found due by the defendant to the plaintiff ; also that the property should be partitioned. The first Court has given the plaintiff a decree for possession of one half of the property in suit and has directed that the accounts be taken of mesne profits from the 17th of February 1912 to the date of partition.

Against that decree the defendant has instituted this appeal and the first objection raised by him is that the present suit by the plaintiff is barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as, though urged by the defendant in the earlier suit to include in that claim a prayer for partition of the immoveable property alleged to be the partnership property, he persistently refused to do so and clearly asserted through his Pleader that the suit was merely for account of the income and expenditure of the immoveable property and of the shop but did not include a prayer for partition of the corpus.

Counsel for the appellant has contended that a suit contemplating a dissolution of partnership with the retention of the partnership property as joint property did not lie and he has cited several cases, e g, Phula v. Shibdayal (1), Nawab Khan v. Sheikh Ghulam Ahmed (2) and Umar Baksh v. Faizulla (3), which lay down that a suit between partners for a specific sum out of the partnership property without a prayer for dissolution of the partnership and rendition of account does not lie, but these decisions have little bearing on this case, for admittedly and clearly the first suit did include a prayer for dissolution of partnership. For the respondent it has been contended that the present suit is based on the decree issued in the former case, that the plaintiff was declared the owner of the property now sued for by that decree and that the first Court was not bound to partition the partnership property by metes and bounds. He also contended that the plaint in the former suit asked for dissolution of partnership, for rendition of accounts, and for the appointment of a Receiver; in other words, it prayed for the full relief that the Court could give. He contended that the Court which tried the former suit did in fact distribute the partnership property by declaring it to be the property of the parties in equal shares and that the decree really granted the plaintiff and the defendant a new status in respect of the quondam partnership property. So that it was res judicata that the property now belonged to the parties jointly in equal shares.

(2) 7 P. R. 1875.

In our opinion, the appellant's contention that the earlier suit is in bar of the present suit cannot succeed. The cardinal condition of the applicability of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, is that the cause of action in both cases shall be identical. Moreover it is essential that the plaintiff should have been bound to sue in the earlier case for the relief for which he prays in the subsequent case. Now though we have no doubt that in the first case the plaintiff was bound to sue for the partition of the immoveable property, we see no reason to hold that he was bound to sue for its partition by metes and bounds and though through his Counsel he refused to bring the partition of the immoveable property within his suit, the arbitrator's award did in fact deal with the right of the parties in the immoveable property by declaring that it should be in future regarded as their property in common tenancy in equal shares and the decree issued by the first Court was in accordance with that award. From that decree which of course renders the matters of which it disposes res judicata between the parties it follows that the immoveable property, which up to the date of that decree was partnership property in which, it could not be predicated until accounts had been rendered, what shares would fall to either party, became the common property of the parties in equal shares, and the present suit is based upon the position that at the time of the suit the immoveable property had ceased to be partnership property in which the rights of the parties severally were still unascertained and was the common property of the parties in equal shares. The suit indeed is not one between partners for dissolution of the partnership and for rendition of the partnership accounts but is one between tenants-in-common for mesne profits and partition of the common property.

Now, the right of an owner in joint property to sue for partition at any time so long as the property shall remain undivided is well established. Such a right is a continually recurring right, cf., Bisheshar Das v. Ram Prasad (4) and Mansaram Chakravarti v. Ganesh Chakravarti (5) and once the immoveable property in suit had been declared to be common property, the plaintiff had a right to come in at any time and ask for partition. We are not concerned with the question whether the decree in the first suit was in excess of the prayer in the plaint, for we are not competent to go behind that decree nor, inasmuch as the decree so far as the plaintiff's rights were concerned was purely declaratory, can we see any force in the present appellant's contention that the plaintiff could have executed it.

For the foregoing reasons we hold that the first suit is no bar to the present suit because there is no identity of causes of action in the two suits.

As we have had time to hear parties' Counsel only on this plea of bar and as this Bench will not be sitting next week, we direct that another date be given for the disposal of the remaining grounds of appeal.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The order of this Court, dated the 1st of March 1920 should be read as part of this judgment. The facts of the case are stated in the above order and need not be repeated. By the the above order it has been decided that the present suit is not barred under the provisions of Order II, rule 2. Counsel for the appellant has now addressed us upon the merits of the case.

(5) 16 Ind. Cas. 383 17 C. W. N. 521.

His arguments have been confined to three points only :—

(1) That list P. W. 1 or list A, is not a true copy of the list which was filed by the plaintiff before the arbitrator in the previous case;

(2) That ten shops and house in the Saddar Bazar which plaintiff claims as his sole property are also part of the joint property of the parties and should be brought into hotchpot;

(3) That the plaintiff having based his claim upon a false list of the property, (i. e., the list filed with the plaint), the suit should be dismissed in toto.

The first question for consideration is, what is the property of which a list was given to the arbitrator in the former case. The decree in the former case followed the award and declared the plaintiff the owner of one-half of that property. The previous case was decided on the 28th of February 1913. It is admitted on both sides that a list was given by the plaintiff to the arbitrator and formed part of the record of the suit. It is also admitted by both sides that soon afterwards this list was abstracted from the file and a substituted list P.-1 was put in its place. List P-1 is printed on page 6 of the paper-book. Neither side contends that this list is genuine. Maulvi Abdur Rahman, Pleader for the plaintiff, somehow obtained information that a document had been substituted for the genuine one and made a complaint to Mr. Gordon, Assistant Commissioner, who made an enquiry into the case. This enquiry led to nothing and the Additional District Magistrate ordered the papers to be filed, saying that there seemed to be no possibility of getting at the bottom of the matter. The plaintiff then lodged a criminal complaint against the defendant accusing him of having substituted a forged list. That complaint was enquired into by Mr. Connolly, the Additional District Magistrate, but was finally dismissed without process issuing to the defendant. In the enquiry before Mr. Gordon, Moulvi Abdur Rahman filed a list as a draft from which the list put in before the arbitrator was said to have been drawn up. This list is called list A and is to be found on page 8 of the paper-book. During the trial of the present suit a list P. W. 1 was put into Court by Fazl-i-Azim who had been called as a witness for the plaintiff. Fazal i-Azim, however, has not given evidence in this case. So we have not got his version of how the list came into his possession, but on behalf of the plaintiff it is alleged that the defendant applied for a copy and afterwards made it over to Fazl-i-Azim as he wanted to raise money on the property. List P. W. 1 and list A agree and the plaintiff relies on them and throws over the list filed with the plaint which covers one or two houses not mentioned in the other lists.

On behalf of the defendant-appellant, it is urged that list A and list P. W. 1 are both forgeries, that the original list was abstracted from the record of the former case by the plaintiff and further that the plaintiff has caused the Bahis of the defendant, which would have disproved the plaintiff's claim, to be stolen. These are grave accusations and there must be good grounds forthcoming before we can hold that there is any truth in them. The principal witness as regards the list A is Maulvi Abdur Rahman, Pleader, whose evidence is to be found on page 89. He deposes that as far as he remembers the list put in before the arbitrator was copied from the draft list A. The words "as far as I remember" are not to be found on the vernacular record, but we have no doubt that the witness said these words. Then there is the evidence of Asaf Ali, Mr. Abdur Rahman's moharrir, who says that he made a fair copy of the draft. As regards the other list P. W. 1 we have the evidence of Syed Jaffar Hussain, copying agent (page 89) that Zia-ul-Haq, the defendant, applied for a copy on the 3rd of January 1913 and that P. W. 1 is the copy which was delivered to him; also the evidence of Abdul Shakur (pages 85-86) who swears that the copy P. W. 1 is in his handwriting. There is as far as we can see no particular reason to distrust the evidence of any of these witnesses. There is plenty of evidence including the evidence of Mr. Khushi Diyal, who was the Pleader for the defendant in the former case, to prove that the list of the property given to the arbitrator was a list of properties regarding which the defendant produced sale-deeds before the arbitrator, all the sale deeds being in favour of the defendant except one which was in favour of himself and his brothers jointly. On this point the evidence of the arbitrator Mian Abdul Samad

The next point for consideration is the shops standing on Nazul land which the defendant claims are part of the joint property and should be included in the partition. These shops were originally Kacha but were rebuilt in Pucca form a few years ago. The defendant's contention is that they were re-built out of the income of the joint shop and are joint property. The defendant has produced various witnesses, masons, labourers and carpenters, etc., who profess to have been concerned in the rebuilding of the shops and who say that the plaintiff superintended the building and that wages were paid by the defendant at the cloth shop. Several of these men are common labourers earning only a few annas a day. The evidence is purely oral and we can regard it of no value. Ranjit Singh, collector of rents of Nazul land, deposes that the plots of Nazul land in question are in the name of the plaintiff or his relations as tenants and that the rent is still shown as realised from the plaintiff though he says he has sometimes realised rent from the shop of the parties in the Chandni Chauk. He may no doubt have received rent from the plaintiff at the shop, but if the defendant had been a joint owner in the shops, the best proof would have been some documentary evidence, such as receipts for rent paid granted in the name of both the parties. It is to be noted that in various mortgage deeds the plaintiff has described these shops as his own property, though other properties have been described by him in the deeds as belonging to himself and the defendant in equal half shares. Our attention has been called to the statement of the plaintiff recorded on page 98 of the paper-book. There he speaks of the shops as belonging to his brother and his nephews and not to himself, and says that he mortgaged the shops with their permission and with their signature. There the plaintiff clearly seems to have been lying, for the shops undoubtedly belonged to his father and were re-built by the plaintiff and were mortgaged by him as his own. In cross examination on the same page there is a peculiar statement which runs thus:—

"Property was purchased jointly but separately from the joint shops."

What this means it is hard to say. But though it follows examination-in chief relating to the shops in the Saddar Bazar, it can scarcely relate to these shops, as that property was certainly not purchased from any one but was merely re built. We hold that the shops in the Saddar Bazar belong to plaintiff and not to the parties jointly.

In the list filed with the plaint the plaintiff has certainly included certain properties which are not to be found in list A or list P. W. 1, and holding as we have held that list A and list P. W. 1 are correct lists of the property covered by the award in the former case, it follows that the list filed with the plaint goes beyond the award. On behalf of the defendant it is urged that the plaint was drawn up by Mr. Abdur Rahman who must have remembered that he had filed list A in Mr. Gordon's Court; but it seems probable enough that Mr. Abdur Rahman when drawing up the plaint was content to refer to mortgage-deeds produced by his client and copied down in the list properties mentioned in the various deeds without the thought occurring to him that it would be better first to refer to the list which he had filed in Mr. Gordon's Court for purposes of comparison and verification.

Lastly it is urged that the plaintiff having put in a forged list with his plaint the whole suit should be dismissed. We are unable to accede to this contention. In the first place it was not clearly proved that the plaintiff deliberately put in a false list although it certainly does appear that that list contains certain properties not mentioned before the arbitrator, for at the time of filing the plaint the plaintiff had not a copy of that list with him. Unless it is proved that the plaintiff deliberately put in a false list, we certainly cannot hold that the suit should be dismissed in toto. We consider that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for his share in so much of the property now in suit as is proved to have been covered by the declaratory decree in the former suit.

In conclusion we note that the sale-deed relating to one of the houses decreed stands in the name not of defendant only but in the names of defendant and his brothers. His brothers are not parties to the present suit and the present decree is not binding on them, and we can only remark that as between the plaintiff and the defendant we cannot go behind the declaratory decree in the former suit which declared plaintiff to be the half owner.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st January 1918.

Syed Ali Mohammad holding brief of The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow dismissing the suit of the plaintiff.

The suit was one for a declaration that certain property, namely, an 8-annas share in a village called Faiz-ullah-Ganj, which had been mortgaged to the first and second defendants by the third defendant under two deeds of mortgage, dated respectively the 23rd of August 1913 and the 5th of March 1915, was Wakf property and, therefore, not capable of being mortgaged. Further it was asked that a declaration should be made that a decree dated the 14th of April 1917, which had been passed in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in a suit brought by them to enforce their mortgage should be declared to be ineffectual as against the property on the ground that the third defendant, who made the mortgage, was merely a trustee and manager of the property which, as already said, was alleged to be Wakf property.

The Court below has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain it; and the question which I have to decide here is whether or not this decision of the Court below is correct.

In order to ascertain the nature of the suit I shall refer to the allegations contained in the plaint setting out certain facts upon which the plaintiff bases his right to sue. It is said that in the year 1292 Hijri a lady named Haidri Khanam executed a Will by which she appointed one Rehan-ud-daula as executor and trustee to take her property for the purpose of applying it to certain trusts specified in the Will. This lady died in the year 1875 and according to the plaint Rehan-ud daula otherwise known as Shuja Husain, got possession of the lady's property. It may be mentioned here that Rehan-ud-daula was the father of the third defendant Safdar Husain and the grandfather of the plaintiff Tahawwar Husain. After the lady's death it is alleged that certain money was received by Rehan-ud daula on account of the redemption of a mortgage affecting two villages Itwa and Bazidpur which had been mortgaged to Haidri Khanam. In the fourth paragraph of the plaint it was stated that the money so received in the course of redemption was applied by Rehan-ud daula in the purchase of a village called Faiz ullah Ganj. It is said that during his lifetime Rehan-ud-daula applied the income arising from this village to the discharge of the trust purposes indicated in the Will of the lady.

Rehan-ud-daula died on the 28th of October 1897. He left a Will executed on the 25th of January 1897. The Will of Rehan-ud daula is on the record and begins with a recital concerning the property which had been left by the lady Haidri Khanam including the mortgagee rights over the villages of Itwa and Bazidpur. The testator went on to describe how the mortgage affecting these two villages had come to be redeemed and how a sum of Rs. 8,000 had been left in his hands which he had applied in the purchase of the village Faiz ullah Ganj. He declared that the income of this property was in future to be applied as it hitherto had been applied, for the purpose of discharging the trusts created by the Will of Musammat Haidri Khanam. In the Will it is recited that his two sons Dilar Husain and Safdar Husain were still minors and for this reason Rehan-ud-daula appointed two persons Mehdi Ali Khan and Saiyed Asad uz zaman as his executors to carry out all the trusts referred to in the Will of Haidri Khanam. He further declared in this document that the property was not susceptible of sale or mortgage. He then went on to provide that the two executors named by him should have power to hand over their office as trustees or Mutwallis of the property to his two minor sons after they had attained full age. A further power was given to the executors to appoint as trustee some person other than the sons, should a case of necessity arise. The executors were directed to apply the income of the property for the purposes of the trusts above mentioned. It is proved that after the death of Rehan-ud-daula Mehdi Ali Khan, one of the executors named in the Will, obtained Probate of the Will on the 4th March 1898. In the 7th paragraph of the plaint it was stated that after Saiyed Diler Husain, the father of the present plaintiff, reached the age of majority Mehdi Ali Khan, in accordance with the provisions of the Will, made over the trust property to him as one of the executors and it is said that Diler Husain remained the manager of the property and continued to administer it up till the time of his death. In the eighth paragraph of the plaint it is stated that on the death of Diler Husain on the 13th of May 1913 the plaintiff was left as his heir and representative and that by reason of his minority at the time the third defendant Safdar Husain "remained" manager and in possession of the property. In the ninth paragragh of the plaint it was alleged that Safdar Husain was a person of immoral and extravagant character and that the debts incurred by him under the mortgages referred to in the plaint had been incurred for immoral purposes. The tenth paragraph of the plaint recites that Safdar Husain was merely a trustee or executor of the property and in that capacity had no power to make any alienation of it. Consequently it was pleaded that the mortgages in favour of the first and second defendants were made without any legal necessity.

The question that at once arises for consideration after a perusal of these statements in the plaint is what interest does the plaintiff claim in the property in dispute which enables him to maintain a suit for the declarations which he asks for. The allegations in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the plaint seem to suggest that the present plaintiff stands in the position of a trustee. That suggestion, however, is clearly untenable in view of the provisions of the Will executed by Rehan ud-daula. It is clear that the intention of Rehan ud-daula was that as soon as his minor sons attained full age the trusteeship of the property was to be handed over to them by the executors whom he appointed. There is nothing in the Will of Rehan ud-daula to indicate that on the death of one of his sons the legal representatives of the deceased son were to be joined as co-trustees with the surviving son. In short all that we find is a provision that the trusteeship of this property alleged to be Wakf property was to descend upon Rehan-ud-daula's two sons. That being the case and there being no provison to the contrary in the Will it necessarily follows that the trusteeship devolved upon Diler Hussain and his brother Safdar Hussain as joint tenants and that when Diler Hussain died his brother Safdar Hussain became the sole trustee. It is not possible for the plaintiff to argue that because he is the heir of his father Diler Husain he is a co trustee of the property now in dispute. It is impossible, therefore, for the plaintiff to maintain this suit in the character of a co-trustee. What other position then is open to the plaintiff or what other interest can he allege in the property with which we are concerned? The only possible interest he could allege in this property is a personal interest but that position is not open to him in view of his own admission that the property is Wakf property and was not the personal property of his grandfather Rehan-ud daula. Indeed that fact is sufficiently indicated in the recitals contained in Rehan-ud-daula's Will. The plaintiff, therefore, has no personal interest in the property.

It is further to be observed that the Wakf alleged in this case constitutes a private and not a public trust. That is perfectly clear from the language of the Will left by Haidri Khanam and also by the language of the Will of Rehan-ud-daula. In the case of a public trust indeed any person who is interested in seeing that the purposes of the trust are carried out may bring a suit in the form provided for that purpose by the Code of Civil Procedure. That course, however, is not open to the plaintiff here for the reason already given, namely, that the trust is a private and not a public trust. In these circumstances I must hold that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. I can find no interest of the plaintiff relating to the property in dispute which would enable him to maintain this suit for a declaration. I hold that the decision of the Court below must be affirmed and the appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE PROPRIETOR OF THE BUSINESS OF UBEROI AND COMPANY KASHMIRI GATE, DELHI, BELIEVED TO BE KIRPAL SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Trade mark—General rule of law—Defendant, whether can be restrained from carrying on business in his own name—Injunction.

No one may use a name in such a way as to be calculated to lead the public to believe that the business carried on by him is the business of some other person with whom the name has come to be associated. [p. 711, col. 1.]

The Court ought not to restrain a man from carrying on business in his own name simply because there are other people who are doing the same and who will be injured by what he is doing. It must appear that the person who is carrying on the business in his own name is doing it in such a way as to pass off his goods as the goods of some body else. [p. 712, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, the defendant was carrying on business in his own name which also happened to be the name of the plaintiff:

Held, that the defendant could not be restrained from using his own name. [p. 712, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, dated the 30th May 1917, decreeing the claim in part.

Messrs. Bevan-Petman, Carden Noad and Ram Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nanak Chand Pandit, Gokal Chand Narang and Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the use of certain trade names and trade marks. The suit was brought by "Uberoi, Limited" and Ganda Singh, against Jhanda Singh and his sons Ikbal Singh and Kirpal Singh, as being the proprietors of the firm Uberoi and Company, but at the time of arguments the plaintiffs withdrew their case against Jhanda Singh and Ikbal Singh, and proceeded only against Kirpal Singh.

The plaintiffs carry on the business of manufacturing and selling sporting goods. The business was originally started by Ganda Singh at Sialkot in 1888 under the name of "Ganda Singh, Uberoi and Sons," Uberoi being the name of his caste or sub-caste. In 1892 he took into partnership his younger brother Jhanda Singh, and they carried on business together under the name of 'Ganda Singh, Uberoi and Company," till 1899 when they dissolved partnership.

After the dissolution Ganda Singh carried on business under the name of "Ganda Singh, Uberoi and Company", also known as the Punjab Sports Works, till 1913, when the name was changed to "Uberoi" and the business was converted in the same or the following year into a limited liability company under the name of "Uberoi Limited". In December 1916 the plaintiffs opened a branch in Delhi.

Jhanda Singh after the dissolution in 1899 carried on a separate business in Sialkot under the name of "Jhanda Singh Uberoi and Sons," calling his works "The Victoria Works" and later "The Victoria Steam Works." In 1913 he started a business in Delhi, first under the name of "Jhanda Singh, Uberoi and Sons" and then under that of "Uberoi and Sons." He carried on the Delhi branch till the 23rd March 1916, when the goods of the shop were purchased for Rs. 3,000 by his younger son Kirpal Singh, who has from that time been carrying on business in Delhi under the name of "Uberoi and Company". Jhanda Singh sold the building at Sialkot in which he had his workshop in 1916 but he rented another building there, as stated by the plaintiff's secretary Beli Ram, and he says his business has never stopped. On the 6th February 1917, he executed an agreement (page 264 of the paper-book) as proprietor of Uberoi and Sons, Sialkot, appointing Uberoi and Company his agents to sell Uberoi and Sons' goods at Delhi.

Jhanda Singh's elder son Ikbal Singh went to England for a few years, and on his return in 1915 started a business in Madras under the name of "Uberoi and Company." In a suit brought against him by the plaintiffs in the High Court of Madras for an injunction a consent decree was passed on the 11th of January 1917, which provided that Ikbal Singh should not trade except under the style of "Ikbal Singh, Uberoi and Company," and should not use the word "Uberoi" in connection with his trade or goods, except in the collocation "Ikbal Singh, Uberoi and Company".

In their plaint in the present case, which was instituted on the 20th March 1917, the plaintiffs asked for a permament injunction restraining the defendants from carrying on business under the name and style of "Uberoi and Company," "Uberoi," "Uberoi and Sons", and "Uberoi" in conjunction with any other word or words, and from stamping or marking their goods, or selling goods stamped or marked, with the word "Uberoi" as illustrated in the document A attached to the plaint or in any way. They also complained that the defendants had applied to certain goods which they had for sale the word "Goto" in order to deceive the public into the belief that they were purchasing plaintiff's goods marked "Togo". They asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from so marking their goods or from selling goods so marked. They asked further for an account of the sales and profits of the business carried on in Delhi under any of the names mentioned above and for damages and also for an injunction restraining the defendants from receiving any letters, money orders, parcels, and cheques addressed to, or in the name of or for the benefit of "Uberoi and Company," "Uberoi and Sons," "Uberoi" or "Uberoi" with any other word or words appended thereto.

The Subordinate Judge has granted an injunction only to restrain the defendant Kirpal Singh from stamping or marking his goods, or selling any goods stamped or marked with the word "Goto"; in other respects he has dismissed the suit, finding that the defendant Kirpal Singh was entitled to use the name "Uberoi" as much as the plaintiffs. The latter have appealed to this Court.

The plaintiffs stated in their plaint that they believed that the businesses at Madras and Delhi really belonged to Jhanda Singh and were being carried on by his sons under the name of "Uberoi and Company" for his benefit and that of the family. If this were so, Jhanda Singh would be breaking the terms of the agreement (page 17 of the paper book) that he made with Ganda Singh on the 5th August 1899, when they dissolved partnership in which he undertook that he would have no concern with correspondence and orders for goods addressed to "Uberoi and Company" and would not sell goods bearing that name. But as the plaintiffs have chosen to withdraw the case against Jhanda Singh, the agreement between Jhanda Singh and Ganda Singh becomes immaterial, and the case must proceed on the assumption that the Delhi business belongs to Kirpal Singh alone.

Mr. Petman who appears on behalf of the plaintiffs admits that it is too late for them to object to Kirpal Singh's using the name "Uberoi and Sons", as that name had been used by Jhanda Singh for some years before Kirpal Singh started business, but he contends that Kirpal Singh is not entitled to trade under the name "Uberoi and Company" or under the name "Uberoi" alone unaccompanied by other words which would serve to distinguish Kirpal Singh's firm from that of the plaintiffs.

We have been referred to a number of authorities which are discussed in Sebastian's and Kerly's Works on the Law of Trade marks, and also to Volume XXVII of Halsbury's Laws of England at pages 751 and 777, Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Oriental Assurance Co. Ltd. (1), Mahomed Esuf v. Rajaratnam Pillai (2) and a case of the Gurkha Association Simla v. Muhammad Umar (3) decided by this Court and reported in Volume I of the Lahore Law Journal.

The law on the subject is clear, and it is this, that no one may use a name in such a way as to be calculated to lead the public to believe that the business carried on by him is the business of some other person with whom the name has come to be associated.

It is unnecessary to mention the various cases decided by the Courts in England which have been cited before us, but we may quote the following passage from the judgment of Lord Herschell in the case of Reddaway v. Banham (4) which is given at page 565 of Kerly's Law of Trade-marks, Fourth Edition:—

"The name of a person, or words forming part of the common stock of language, may become so far associated with the goods of a particular maker that it is capable of proof that the use of them by themselves without explanation or qualification by another manufacturer would deceive a purchaser into the belief that he was getting the goods of A. when he was really getting the goods of B. In a case of this description the mere proof by the plaintiff that the defendant was using a name, word, or device which he had adopted to distinguish his goods would not entitle him to any relief. He could only obtain it by proving further that the defendant was using it under such circumstances or in such manner as to put off his goods as the goods of the plaintiff." The questions put to the Jury in the same case, which are quoted in the foot-note on page 569 of Kerly's book, are also instructive.

The main question in the present case is whether the names "Uberoi and Company", and "Uberoi" have become so identified with the plaintiffs' firm that the use of those names by the defendant Kirpal Singh would mislead the public.

It is not denied that the term "Uberoi" has been used by the plaintiffs and there also appears to be no doubt that they used frequently to be addressed as "Uberoi and Company" notwithstanding that they did not adopt this as a trade name. They have produced a number of letters addressed to "Uberoi and Company" dating from 1899 to 1905 and from 1913 to 1916, and the lower Court is wrong in thinking that it is not shown for which of the parties the letters were intended, for many of the letters are shown to have been intended for the plaintiffs, either by the fact that they related to orders for certain goods of which the plaintiffs alone were the manufacturers or by mention being made of the Punjab Sports Works in the address. But there are also a large number of letters produced by the other side showing that Jhanda Singh used to be similarly addressed. Exhibits D-129 to D-163 are letters and post cards addressed to "Uberoi and Company" and Exhibits D 83 to D-128 are letters, post cards and telegrams addressed to "Uberoi". They bear dates from the beginning of 1914 to the end of 1915 and were addressed to Delhi so that they were evidently intended for Jhanda Singh as it was not till December 1916 that the plaintiffs opened their branch in Delhi. It is also not denied that Jhanda Singh gave the name "Uberoi" to many of his goods in his catalogues. It is true that the envelopes of the letters in which the firm was styled "Uberoi" or "Messrs. Uberoi" are not produced, and it may be said that a customer may have addressed the firm briefly as "Messrs. Uberoi" in his letter, but may have given the fuller name, "Uberoi and Sons" or "Uberoi and Company" on the envelope. There are, however, as has been mentioned, some post-cards also in which the firm is addressed as "Uberoi", or "Messrs. Uberoi" and the probability is that customers in addressing the firm would not be particular whether or not they added the words "Uberoi and Sons" or "Uberoi and Company." It is only the word "Uberoi" which would have attracted attention.

It appears to us, therefore, that it was not exclusively the plaintiffs' firm that was known to the public as "Uberoi" and "Uberoi and Company" but that Jhanda Singh was also known under those names. It is no doubt stated at page 544 of Kerly's Law of Trade-marks that the name taken or copied by the defendant need not be that under which the plaintiff alone and no other person is properly trading, a statement which appears to be based on the case of Dent v. Turpin (5) in which it was held that each of two firms carrying on business separately as watchmakers under the name Dent might sue a third person, who had set up a similar business under the same name, for an injunction. But when it is conceded that the plaintiffs are not entitled to restrain Kirpal Singh from using the name "Uberoi and Sons" on account of that name having been in use by Jhanda Singh, their claim to restrain him from using the names "Uberoi and Company" and "Uberoi" must be similarly defeated by proof that Jhanda Singh also has been known to the public under those names.

Furthermore, as "Uberoi" is Kirpal Singh's own caste name just as much as it is the plaintiffs', the latter must make out a strong case before they can be given an injunction to restrain Kirpal Singh from using that name either alone or in conjunction with "and Co." In Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson (6) referred to on page 597 of Kerly's Law of Trade-marks, Lord Lindley, M. R. said:—

"When we are asked to restrain a man from carrying on business in his own name we must take very great care what we are about. The principle applicable to the case, I take, is this: the Court ought not to restrain a man from carrying on business in his own name simply because there are other people who are doing the same and who will be injured by what he is doing. It would be intolerable if the Court were to interfere, and to prevent people from carrying on business in their own names in rivalry to others of the same name. There must be something far more than that, viz., (there must be), that the person who is carrying on business in his own name is doing it in such a way as to pass off his goods as the goods of somebody else."

Confusion has no doubt arisen in consequence of the plaintiffs and Jhanda Singh having both been addressed by customers as "Uberoi and Company" and "Uberoi" and it has increased since Kirpal Singh set up his business in Delhi under the style of "Uberoi and Company." The correspondence on the record shows that persons have sent orders to the firm of 'Uberoi and Company" at Delhi under the impression that it was a branch of the plaintiff's firm at Sialkot (see the letters on pages 113, 114, 123-126, 129 131, 133 136 and 154 of the paper book), and on the other hand it appears that some of the letters meant for Jhanda Singh's firm were received by the plaintiffs (see Exhibit P 75 on page 51 of the paper-book and Beli Ram's statement on page 234). But the mere existence of such confusion, which was inevitable, is no reason for granting an injunction, and it must be remembered that the plaintiffs are in great measure to blame for it by having dropped the distinctive name "Ganda Singh" in 1913.

Turton v. Turton (7) which is mentioned at pages 603 and 604 of Kerly's work, was a case in which the plaintiffs, Thomas Turton and Sons, Limited, complained of the use of the name John Turton and Sons by the defendants, who had previously styled themselves John Turton and Company. It was decided by the Court of Appeal that, notwithstanding the possibility of mistakes between the two firms being made by careless people, the defendants were justified in adopting the name complained of, and in continuing its use after the possibility of mistake had been brought to their knowledge. Also in the case of Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson (6), referred to above, it was decided that the defendant was not bound to use extra precautions to avoid confusion between his goods and those of other persons in the trade, if such confusion arose solely from the similarity of his own name with theirs, and from the use of features common to the trade.

No fraud is, in our opinion, shown to have been intended by Kirpal Singh in adopting the name "Uberoi and Company", and we think he cannot be restrained from using that name, taking into consideration that "Uberoi" is his own caste name, that the plaintiffs have never traded under the name "Uberoi and Company," and that that name was applied by the public to Kirpal Singh's father Jhanda Singh just as much as to the plaintiffs.

But although Kirpal Singh was entitled to use the name "Uberoi and Company" he has been guilty of certain misrepreeentations which require to be noticed He wrote on the 3rd July 1916, to the Post Master, Delhi, describing himself as a limited liability concern and asking that "Uberoi and Company Limited," "Uberoi and Sons Limited," "Uberoi Limited," etc., might be added to his addresses already registered (page 2 of the supplementary paper-book). That letter, however, was written before the plaintiffs opened their branch in Delhi, and there has been no attempt by Kirpal Singh to trade under the name of "Uberoi Limited." He has advertised his firm as being the founders of the sports industry in India and as being large manufacturers with extensive experience (pages 137 and 143 of the paper-book), a description which certainly did not apply to himself, though it might have been applicable to Jhanda Singh. We do not attach much importance to this, but a more serious matter is his using the word "Sialkot" in conjunction with "Uberoi and Company." He has put the name "Uberoi and Company Sialkot" on his signboard, the word "Delhi" being added in small letters (see photograph, Exhibit P.262). He has described himself as "Uberoi and Company Sialkot" in a letter written to a customer on the 4th January 1917 (page 131 of the paper-book). Besides this, at the foot of the cover of his catalogue (Exhibit P.202), which is nothing but the catalogue of the Madras firm "Uberoi and Company" with the address Kashmiri Gate Delhi pasted on the cover and hiding the Madras address, there is a note in which reference is made to "our works at Sialkot." Admittedly Kirpal Singh has no shop or works at Sialkot, and the object of these acts of deception can hardly have been any other than that of causing people to believe that his firm is a branch of the plaintiff's firm. At any rate such misrepresentations were calculated to induce that belief. While he cannot be prevented from styling himself "Uberoi and Company" he has no right to use that name in connection with the word "Sialkot" so as to mislead the public.

Further he has gone to the length of using the plaintiffs' trade-mark shown in Exhibit A attached to the plaint, which consists of the word "Uberoi" written in a distinctive manner, and which was registered on the 27th April 1915, (page 93 of the paper book). He has used this mark, for instance, on the Uberoi Special Tennis Racket which is sold by him, and also on his shop, as seen in the photograph page 261. The plaintiffs are certainly entitled to restrain him from using their trade mark, which is nothing less than a fraud.

Mr Petman also lays stress on the fact that Kirpal Singh has been applying the name "Orient" to certain of his goods in the same way in which the plaintiffs have applied the name "Oriental" to theirs, but as to this it is sufficient to note that the plaintiffs have not asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from using the name "Orient."

We hold that the claim to restrain Kirpal Singh from using the names "Uberoi" and "Uberoi and Company" must fail, but we accept the appeal and modify the decree of the lower Court so far as to direct that in addition to the injunction granted with regard to the use of the word "Goto" a further injunction be issued restraining Kirpal Singh, (1) from using the word "Sialkot" in conjunction with the name "Uberoi and Company" on his shop or elsewhere, to signify that he carries on business or manufactures goods at Sialkot, or from giving out that he carries on business or manufactures goods at Sialkot, so long as he does not in fact carry on business or manufacture goods at that place; and (2) from using the plaintiff's trade mark "Uberoi" as shown in Exhibit A attached to the plaint on his shop, or stamping or in any way marking his goods, or selling any goods stamped and marked, with the word "Uberoi" as illustrated in Exhibit A.

We direct that the plaintiffs and Kirpal Singh shall bear their own costs in both Courts.

Appeal accepted;
Decree modified.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. AFZAL HUSAIN.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 278 OF 1919.

February 5, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA FOR OUDH AND ROHILKHAND RAILWAY AND GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY THROUGH MANSUR ALI KHAN SPECIAL AGENT—DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 AND 1—APPELLANTS

versus

Saiyed AFZAL HUSAIN—PLAINTIFF —RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 151, 152, 161—Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 72, 80—Bailee, liability of, extent of—Burden of proof—Goods consigned to two Railways—One Railway responsible for loss—Damages, whether can be recovered from both Railways.

The duty of a Railway Administration to which goods are delivered for carriage is that of a bailee as defined in sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Contract Act, and when a thing is injured or lost while in the charge of a Railway the question of the burden of proof must be dealt with on the footing that the Railway is a bailee and not an insurer, and the burden of proving that the Railway has exercised ordinary care must generally in the first instance be upon the Railway and it is for them to establish positively that they had discharged the statutory duty which is defined in section 72 of the Railways Act, read with sections 151 and 152 of the Contract Act. [p. 715, col. 2; p. 716, col 1.]

Although section 80 of the Railways Act gives a plaintiff an option to sue one of two Railway Administrations in cases where goods have been booked through, yet where the plaintiff sues both of them he is not entitled to a decree against that one of them which has satisfied the Court that it has taken all the care of his goods that was required of it by law. [p. 717, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 16th June 1919, upholding that of the Munsif, Ram Sanehighat, dated the 19th October 1918.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, for O. & R Railway.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Syed Ali Muhammad, for G. I. P. Railway.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent, Saiyed Afzal Husain, against the Secretary of State for India through the Agent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and against the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. The claim was for recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,649-10 0 on account of loss to the plaintiff's goods alleged to have taken place while they were in transit over the railway systems of the two defendants.

The claim has been decreed in both the Courts below against the defendants who now appeal. The defendants have been separately represented here in appeal and their cases must be dealt with separately.

The case being one of second appeal it will be expedient to set out at once the facts as found by the lower Appellate Court. It has been held to be proved that the plaintiff Saiyed Afzal Husain on the 12th of March 1917 delivered two boxes containing dyes to the G. I. P. Railway at Burhanpur for carriage to Safdarganj a station on the Oudh & Rohilkhand Railway. At the time the delivery was made a railway receipt was granted to the plaintiff in which the weight of the two boxes was described as being 3 maunds. These boxes arrived at Safdarganj between 11 and 12 on the night of the 13th of March 1917. It has been held to be proved that some time after the arrival of the goods at Safdarganj the larger of the two boxes was found to be in a damaged condition. It has also been found that when the two boxes came to be weighed at Safdarganj Station the same night or early the next morning there was a shortage in weight of 28½ seers. The plaintiff refused to take delivery of the goods. A report was made to the O. & R. Railway authorities and after an examination of the goods by one of the Railway Inspectors it was discovered that 47 tins of dye had been abstracted from the larger of the two boxes. It is the value of these 47 tins which the plaintiff has sought to recover in this suit. Both the Courts below have found that this larger box was not tampered with on the G. I. P. Railway system. They have held that the box was delivered on the O. & R. Railway at Lucknow in good condition. It has been further found that the damage to this box was done at Safdarganj Station after the arrival of the goods there. Both the Courts below have, therefore, found that there was no negligence on the part of the G. I. P. Railway. They have found that O. & R. Railway was guilty of negligence. Relying upon the language of section 80 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), the claim has been decreed by both Courts against both the Railways notwithstanding the finding in favour of the G. I. P. Railway.

These findings of fact have been criticized here in second appeal but after a careful examination of the evidence I hold that there is no ground upon which they can be attacked. There is on the record evidence upon which it was possible for both the Courts below to arrive at the findings they did. Ths case, therefore, must be discussed on the assumption that the findings of fact are correct.

For the O. & R. Railway the main argument has been that the Courts below have proceeded on wrong lines in dealing with the plaintiff's claim. It has been argued that it was the duty of the plaintiff to allege and prove affirmatively that the O. & R. Railway had been guilty of negligence. It is said that the Courts below wrongly threw the burden of proof upon the Railway Company and have wrongly decided that the Company was liable because it failed to prove want of negligence on its part.

As regards the question of pleading negligence there does not appear to me to be much substance in this argument. In the eighth paragraph of the plaint it was alleged that the plaintiff's property had been lost at some place between the Burhanpur and Safdarganj Stations and it was further alleged that in consequence of this loss both Railway Companies were liable in damages to the plaintiff. The plaintiff certainly did not in express terms allege that the loss of his property was due to negligence on the part of either Railway system but there can be no doubt that he asserted that by reason of the loss which had occurred both systems were liable to him. Further from the pleas which were set out in the written statements of defence of the two Railways it is plain that they both understood that a charge of negligence was being made. It was pleaded in both statements that the Railway Companies had taken all possible care of the goods bailed to them, such care as a man of ordinary prudence would in similar circumstances take of his own goods. These pleas are clearly answers to a definite charge of negligence on the part of the Railways.

As regards the question of the burden of proving the negligence a great deal of case-law has been cited to me at the time of the argument and the case upon which the lower Courts relied in particular, namely, Hirji Khetsey and Company v. Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company (1), has been criticized by the learned Counsel who appears to support the appeal of the O. & R. Railway.

It does not appear to me to be necessary to enter into any minute or detailed discussion of the authorities which have been cited at the Bar. The question of the incidence of the burden of proof can, in my opinion, be settled upon plain principles of law. In the first place I refer to section 72 of the Indian Railways Act which defines the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway. It is laid down definitely that the responsibility is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. It must be taken, therefore, that the duty of a Railway Administration to which goods have been delivered for carriage is that of a bailee as defined in the sections just referred to. Section 151 of the Contract Act lays down that in all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take such care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed. Then section 152 lays down that in the absence of any special contract the bailee is not responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the thing bailed if he has taken the amount of care of it described in section 151. Section 161 is a special section which I need not refer to as it has no bearing on the facts of this case.

I next refer to the provisions of section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act which lays down that when any fact is specially within the knowledge of any person the burden of proving that fact is upon him.

In the present case it has been proved that the plaintiff delivered the goods to the G. I. P. Railway at Burhanpur on the 12th of March 1917. From the time of the delivery till the time the goods were deposited on the Railway platform at Safdarganj on the O. & R. Railway the plaintiff had admittedly no opportunity of seeing the goods. It is proved that at the time the two boxes were handed over at Burhanpur they were in good condition. It is further found that after their arrival at Safdargarj the larger of the two boxes was found to be damaged. These being the facts it is difficult to see how the plaintiff is in a position to allege and prove more than he did. The law does not compel parties to attempt the impossible and section 103 of the Indian Evidence Act is an illustration of this principle. Moreover, the rule embodied in this latter section has been incorporated in section 76 of the Indian Railways Act. That section provides that in a suit against the Railway Administration for compensation for loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to a Railway Administration for carriage by railway it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove how the loss, destruction or deterioration was caused. It may, therefore, be deduced from these principles of law that when a thing is injured or lost while in the charge of a bailee the burden of proving that he has exercised ordinary care must generally in the first instance be upon the bailee, the reason being that he has special knowledge of facts. I have no doubt, therefore, that the plaintiff having alleged and proved loss of his goods the burden of proof shifted on to the defendant Railways, and it was for them to establish positively that they had discharged the statutory duty which is defined in section 72 of the Railways Act read with sections 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act. I am satisfied, therefore, that the law relating to the burden of proof was not misapplied in the Courts below Both the Courts below have held that the O. & R. Railway failed to prove that it had taken such care of the plaintiff's goods as is demanded from a bailee. It has indeed been argued here that this finding is not justified by the evidence, but I cannot accept this contention. The principal evidence relating to what took place at the Safdarganj Railway Station where the goods were deposited in the statement of an Assistant Station Master, Lachhmi Narain. It would not, I think, be possible to argue successfully that the evidence of this man by any means established that all due care had been taken of the goods by the Railway authorities. According to what the Courts below have found the goods were left on the platform for some little time after they had been put out of the train. The Assistant Station Master went to collect the tickets and there is no definite evidence as to what took place between the time he was relieved of this latter duty and the time he saw the goods again. He makes a general statement that a watchman was on duty on the platform at the time the train arrived. The Courts below have drawn attention to the fact that the Khallasis who were said to have conveyed the two boxes from the spot where they had been deposited on the platform to the godown where they were afterwards examined have not been produced to give evidence. That is certainly a matter for severe comment; nor again was the watchman produced, the man who is said to have been on duty at the time and who in particular was responsible for looking after goods which had been unloaded from the train. There certainly is no direct and positive proof that the O. & R. Railway exercised the care which is demanded by the terms of section 151 of the Indian Contract Act and this being so, the Railway was certainly liable in damages to the plaintiff.

A plea is taken in the third ground of the memorandum of appeal to the effect that the Railway Company is neither a common carrier of goods nor of passengers and it is pleaded that the Courts below were wrong in taking the view that because there was a loss there must necessarily have been negligence.

It was nobody's case that the Railway Companies were common carriers, that is to say, insurers of goods delivered to them. The question of the burden of proof is undoubtedly to be dealt with on the footing that the railways are only bailees and not insurers. That matter, however, I have fully discussed and I have no doubt whatever that the burden of proof was properly laid. The appeal so far as the O. & R. Railway is concerned must fail.

I have next to deal with the case as argued for the G. I. P. Railway. In my opinion the Courts below were wrong in decreeing the claim against this Company. As I have already mentioned they have relied upon the terms of section 80 of the Indian Railways Act. Now that section merely lays down that when goods have been booked over the Railways of two or more Railway Administrations a suit for compensation for loss to the goods may be brought either against the Railway Administration to which the goods were delivered or against the administration on whose railway the loss occurred. But that section, while it gives an option to a plaintiff to sue one or other of two Railway Administrations in cases where goods have been booked through, cannot surely mean that in a case like the present, where the plaintiff has brought the suit against both Raliway Administrations he is entitled to a decree against that one of them which has satisfied the Court that it was in no way to blame for the loss accruing to the plaintiff. If one of the two Railways sued discharges the burden of proving that it has exercised all the care and caution which is demanded of a bailee it has established the complete performance of the statutory duty it owed to the plaintiff and the plaintiff is certainly not entitled to any relief. I was referred in the course of argument to a judgment of the Allahabad High Court reported in Bengal and North Western Railway Company v. Haji Mutsaddi (2). It would appear from the judgment in that case that the learned Judges were of opinion that under the terms of section 80 a decree could, in a suit framed like the present, be passed against two administrations even if one of them had succeeded in showing that it was not guilty of negligence. All I can say is that if that was a rule intended to be laid down by this judgment I am unable to follow it. I cannot see that there is either good sense or justice in saying that a plaintiff is entitled to hold a Railway Company liable to him for loss if it is proved that the company has taken all the care of the plaintiff's goods that was required of it by law. In my opinion there should have been no decree against the G. I. P. Railway in this case and to that extent the appeal must be allowed.

The result is that the appeal is allowed in part. It is ordered that the claim of the plaintiff as against the G. I. P. Railway be dismissed. The claim as against the O. & R. Railway is decreed with costs in all three Courts. As between the plaintiff and the G. I. P. Railway the parties will bear their own costs in the Court of first instance. The G. I. P. Railway will be entitled, as against the plaintiff, to costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal partly allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 98—Mortgage, anomalous—Sale, mortgagee, whether entitled to—Puisne incumbrancer, right of, to pay off prior incumbrance.

In considering the nature of a mortgage and the true conclusion to be drawn from its terms, what has to be considered is the intention of the parties to be gathered from the terms of the instrument of mortgage. If these show that the parties never contemplated a sale, the mortgagee has no right to a judicial sale. [p. 719, col. 2.]

In the case of a prior incumbrance, it is always open to a puisne incumbrancer to pay off the prior incumbrancer and the mortgagor, who has created both, has no interest or right to object. [p. 719, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Batten, A. J. C. and Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C., Nagpur, in First Appeal No. 113 of 1914, dated the 19th July 1915, reversing the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 31st July 1914.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The suit to which this appeal relates was brought to enforce a mortgage, dated the 15th October, 1877. A village named Lonhara had just been purchased by the mortgagors and they desired to raise money to enable them to complete the purchase. They had bought one-half of the village free from incumbrances, but the other half was mortgaged to one Kewalram for Rs. 3,000, as was known to all parties. There was, moreover, a further incumbrance upon it in the shape of a second mortgage also to Kewalram for Rs. 900. This mortgage appears to have been concealed from the purchasers by their vendors.

The title to the village being in this state, the mortgage in suit took the following form. The arrangement made was that the mortgagee should receive, in addition to the sum advanced, a further sum equal to half the principal, which would take the place of interest, making Rs. 7,500 in all, and that this should be re-payable by six yearly instalments of Rs. 1,250, and that the mortgagee should enter at once into possession of the unincumbered half of the village; that as to the other half, on the expiry of the term of Kewalram's mortgage, the mortgagee might pay off the Rs. 3,000, add that sum to his security, and take possession of the other half of the village. In that event there were to be certain provisions as to the expenses of management and as to the allowance of a sum by way of maintenance to the mortgagors. These matters and certain other provisions as to interest were worked out in detail, but are not now material to be considered. Finally, there was a proviso that the mortgagors might at any time redeem the mortgage on payment of the principal sum due with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem.

Upon the execution of the mortgage the mortgagee entered into possession of half of the village and he has remained in possession ever since. He did not pay off Kewalram, but after many years the representatives of the mortgagors brought a suit against Kewalram's representatives and obtained a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 3,900. In order to raise this money and certain other sums which they required the mortgagors made a fresh mortgage for Rs. 5,000 to one Tukaram and others.

On the 6th August 1910 the successor of the original mortgagee under the mortgage of the 16th October 1877 brought this suit, making the representatives of the mortgagors, and Tukaram and his co-parceners defendants. His claim was primarily to have the whole village brought to a judicial sale, and secondarily and in the alternative that he might be let into possession of the second half of the village. To this claim various answers were made, the most important being that upon the true taking of the accounts the mortgagee had paid himself all the money due to him, that the mortgage being an usufructuary one there was no right to enforce it by sale of the property and that the mortgagee had lost his opportunity of redeeming Kewalram and with it his right to enter into possession of the half of the village mortgaged to him.

The Additional District Judge, before whom the suit was tried, decided all points in favour of the mortgagee, finding that there was due to him for principal Rs. 7,500, and for interest since the date when the agreed sum should have been paid Rs. 20,794, while he had received in respect of his possession only Rs. 4,392, and giving him a primary decree for sale upon his paying into Court for the benefit of Tukaram and his co-parceners Rs. 6,027 and thus redeeming them. This decree is dated the 31st July 1914. On the 28th January 1915, the plaintiff, having made the payment as ordered, got a final decree as against Tukaram and his co-parceners for redemption of his half share of the village.

From the decree of the Additional District Judge, in so far as it affected the successors to the original mortgagors, an appeal was preferred to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces and was heard by Additional Judicial Commissioners, Batten and Stanyon. They by their decree, dated the 19th July 1915 allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

When the case came before them they considered that the first point to be determined was whether the mortgage of 1877 was one which warranted an application for a judicial sale, and they came to the conclusion that it was not.

It is stated in their judgment that the case of the plaintiff was that the mortgage in question was a simple mortgage usufructuary—in other words, a combination of a simple and an usufructuary mortgage—while the contention on behalf of the defendants was that it was a mere usufructuary mortgage; that in the opinion of the Judicial Commissioners it was neither one nor the other, but an agreement of a special kind, such as might well be made before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, of the kind classed as an anomalous mortgage in section 98 of that Act; that this being so, what had to be considered was the intention of the parties as gathered from the terms of the instrument; that there had been no thought of sale and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to a judicial sale.

There are certain clauses in the mortgage which might be construed standing by themselves as importing a personal covenant by the mortgagors to pay the sum due, and it was upon these clauses that the Additional District Judge had placed reliance as indicating that the mortgage had the incidence of a simple mortgage; but in the opinion of the Court of Appeal these passages were not enough to warrant a decision that the parties contemplated a possible sale. On the other hand, as the Court of Appeal pointed out, the mortgage could not be an usufructuary one, or, at any rate, not an immediate usufructuary one in respect of the half village mortgaged to Kewalram, inasmuch as the mortgagee could not get possession of that half till his term had expired.

After giving every consideration to the argument urged by Counsel for the appellant plaintiff, their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which the Court of Appeal arrived as to this part of the case. They agree in their view of the nature of the mortgage, and that the true conclusion to draw from its terms is that the parties never contemplated a sale.

There remains, however, the subordinate question of the alternative relief claimed by the plaintiff in respect of the half village mortgaged to Kewalram. Under the terms of the mortgage of 1877 it was provided that the mortgagee might, at the expiry of Kewalram's term, pay Rs. 3,000 and then get possession of his half village. The plaintiff called evidence to show that Rs. 3,000 had been tendered in due course, and that they were refused because there was the additional but hitherto unknown second mortgage for Rs. 900. The Additional District Judge, who saw the witness believed this evidence. The Judicial Commissioners in the Court of Appeal disbelieved it, and disbelieving it they held in substance that the mortgagee had lost his opportunity of redeeming Kewalram, that, as they put it, he had abandoned that part of the transaction which offered him a further investment on the half share in possession of Kewalram, in consequence of which the intended usufructuary mortgage of that share and all the arrangements for management of the whole village and the payment of an annuity to the mortgagor failed to mature. Or it might be, they said, that though owing to the existence of the mortgage for Rs. 900 the mortgagee was justified in not completing the contract, still he could not drop his part of it and hold the mortgagors liable to fulfil their part. Accordingly they refused to the plaintiff his alternative relief.

It appears to their Lordships unnecessary to determine whether the alleged tender was or was not made. It is obvious that if it had been made it would have been refused, because Kewalram was entitled to the additional Rs. 900.

On the discovery of this additional charge of Rs. 900 the mortgagee might no doubt have paid it off, as well as Rs. 3,000, a payment which it is somewhat quaint to describe as a "further investment," and added this sum as well as the Rs. 3,000 to his security. But he was under no obligation to do so; and till Kewalram was paid off in respect of both claims the mortgagee could not get possession of his half of the village. But at any time he could pay off these claims. They formed a prior incumbrance, and a puisne incumbrancer can always pay off a prior incumbrance, while the mortgagor, who has created both, has neither interest nor right to object. The proceedings in this case are somewhat complicated; but the devolution of title when examined is clear, and now that the plaintiff has redeemed Tukaram he has cleared that half of the village of prior incumbrances, and is entitled, under the terms of the mortgage of 1877, to have possession of the second half of the village, as he already is in possession of the first.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that this part of the plaintiff's claim should not have been dismissed, and their Lordships would propose to make an immediate order for giving the mortgagee possession, but for a further consideration. Owing to the view taken by the Judicial Commissioners in the Court of Appeal, it became unnecessary to go into one of the important questions in the suit, i. e., whether the plaintiff and his predecessors in-title had not received enough while in possession of the half village to pay themselves off.

The Additional District Judge, as already stated, took the view that they had only received Rs. 4,392, but upon this the Judicial Commissioners observed that they did not believe for one moment that the ridiculous figure put forward by the plaintiffs from accounts never rendered or explained to the mortgagors represented anything like the income which they and their predecessors had actually realised in a possession of over 35 years; and, without putting it so strongly, their Lordships are of opinion that these accounts cannot be accepted without further investigation. They think that if the plaintiff desires the alternative relief he must submit to have the accounts properly taken in the Court of the Judicial Commiseioner. If upon the taking of these accounts it should appear that any money is still due to him then he ought to be given possession of the second half of the village. In taking these accounts he should be allowed the sum paid by him to redeem Tukaram with all proper costs appertaining thereto. In these circumstances there should be no costs of the appeal, or in the Courts below.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly recommend His Majesty that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be varied, and that the plaintiff on making application to that Court within three months should be allowed to have the accounts taken as between mortgagee in possession and mortgagor and that if, upon the taking of these accounts it appear that any sum remains due to him, he should have a decree putting him in possession of the second half of the village till the liquidation of the debt, and that otherwise the decree of the Court below should stand, and that the decree should be further varied in so far as it made the plaintiff pay the costs in the first Court and on appeal, and that any costs paid under this decree must be returned.

Decree varied.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaration, suit for—Persons interested to deny title—Defendants acting in concert, though all do not deny plaintiff's title, effect of—Title established—Possession, presumption as to.

In a suit brought for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that the defendants were the plaintiff's riaya and for an injunction against certain of them restraining them from interfering with any rights of the plaintiff for the services of these riaya, it was found that although some of the defendants had not made an overt denial of the plaintiff's rights, yet they were acting in concert and sympathy with those who had and that all the defendants were acting in collusion:

Held, that the whole body of defendants were persons interested to deny the plaintiff's title within the meaning of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 722, col. 1]

Where in a suit relating to land the plaintiff's title and possession within limitation is challenged, and he establishes his title by purchase, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that he was in possession up to the time of the suit. [p. 722, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 13th May 1918, modifying the decree of the Munsif, Fatehpur (Bara Banki), dated the 21st January 1918.

Messrs. H. C. Dutt and N. C. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a declaratory suit brought by the plaintiffs appellants against a large number of defendants. The case for the plaintiffs was that they are the owners of certain abadi plots some 40 in number in the town of Kantur. They say that they had acquired these plots by purchase from a former owner, named, Mohammad Ali. In these plots, it was alleged, reside a number of defendants, mostly Kahars, who, it was claimed, were the riaya of the plaintiffs. It was set out in the plaint that these riaya by reason of their occupying a portion of the abadi area owned by the plaintiffs were liable to render certain customary services to the plaintiffs. The suit was brought for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that these defendants were the plaintiffs' riaya and for an injunction against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 restraining them from interfering with any rights which the plaintiffs might have to the services of these riaya. It may be explained that the defendants Nos. 1,2 and 3 are co-sharers in the Mouza of Kantur and are also owners of a portion of the abadi land. It was alleged, however, that the Kahars and others, who were impleaded as the remaining defendants, were not settled on any lands belonging to these three defendants and consequently the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had no right to claim services from them.

The suit was contested practically by the first defendant only. Written statements were, indeed, filed on behalf of most of the defendants but with the exception of the first defendant they absented themselves at the time of the trial. One of the defendants, a Kayasth, named Mahesh Prasad, defendant No. 22 did not contest the suit at all. Defendants Nos. 23 and 24 were Kalwars. They filed a written statement but did not appear at the trial. The same was the case with defendant No. 25 a Behna. Defendants Nos. 26 and 27 were Muraos. They confessed judgment in favour of the plaintiffs and were discharged. They are no longer parties to the record.

The rest of the defendants, with the exception of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are Kahars as mentioned above. Various pleas were raised by way of defence, The title of the plaintiffs to the abadi plots was challenged. It was further pleaded that they had never been in possession within limitation and lastly it was pleaded that there was no cause of action for the suit. It had been alleged in the plaint, as amended, that certain of the Kahar defendants had executed agreements in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 denying that they were riaya of the plaintiffs. This fact was admitted for the defence and both the Courts below have found that so far as these persons are concerned, namely, those who executed written agreements in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, there certainly was a cause of action. That finding is no longer under discussion. It appears, however, that certain others of the Kahar defendants were not proved to have executed these documents. The Court of first instance nevertheless found that the plaintiffs had a cause of action against them inasmuch as it had been shown that these Kahars, as well as the other Kahars who had executed the agreements, were acting in collusion with the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The Munsif pointed out that the whole of the case was being run on behalf of all these Kahar defendants by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who were paying all the costs of the defendants' case. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court seems to have agreed with the Munsif's opinion that the Kahars were all acting in collusion with defendants Nos. 1 to 3, but with respect to those Kahars who had not been shown to have executed any written document in favour of the first three defendants he held that no cause of action had been made out.

The principal matter for discussion in this appeal is whether or not the lower Appellate Court was right in this respect. A considerable quantity of oral evidence was adduced by the parties. Indeed the case was very hotly contested in both the Courts below. Neither of the Courts seems to have been disposed to attach much value to the oral evidence on either side.

In the Munsif's Court the case went in the plaintiff's favour on the ground that their oral evidence was corroborated by reliable documentary evidence which rendered it more reliable than that offered by the defendants who produced no documentary evidence at all. One of the plaintiffs went into the witness-box and described how the quarrel arose which led to the institution of the present suit. He stated that on one occasion he had slapped a Kahar woman in the town and that as a result of this action the whole body of the Kahars residing in his portion of the abadi had refused to render him the usual services. He did not suggest that every one of this body of Kahars had executed an agreement in favour of the defendants denying that they were the plaintiffs' rioya, and asserting that they were the riaya of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. It is, however, apparent that these Kahar people all form one body and are generally related to each other and it was principally on this ground, I take it, that the Munsif held that the plaintiffs had a cause of action against all the Kahar defendants. He also relied upon the fact that they were all being supported in this case by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The learned Judge of the Court below, as I have said, seems to have agreed with the opinion of the Munsif that there was a collusion between all the Kahar defendants and the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. But he thought as there was no definite proof that those Kahars, who had not executed agreements, had denied the title of the plaintiffs there was no cause of action against them and so he dismissed the suit.

The learned Counsel for the appellants here has relied on the language of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. His case is that although it may not have been shown by evidence that a definite denial of the plaintiffs' title had been made by those Kahar defendants who had not gone the length of executing documents in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 nevertheless they were in the language of section 42, persons "interested to deny" the plaintiffs' title; and in this connection he relies upon the finding of both the Courts below to the effect that all the Kahar defendants, without exception, were acting in collusion with the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. I think this view is a correct one and ought to prevail. The evidence leaves no doubt that all these Kahars are acting together in a common cause, and that they have a common interest to deny the title of the plaintiffs. This is abundantly clear from the fact found by the lower Appellate Court in agreement with the first Court, namely, that the entire body of Kahars is working in collusion with the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The latter, as observed by the Court of first instance, are backing the Kahars in this litigation, although it is proved that the Kahars are in no sense their riaya and the legitimate inference is that although some of the Kahar defendants have not made an overt denial of the plaintiffs' rights by executing agreements in favour of the first three defendants they are nevertheless acting in concert and sympathy with those who have. They are, in the words of section 42, persons interested to deny the plaintiffs' title and as such the plaintiffs had, in my opinion, a right to sue them. The Court below has taken too narrow a view of the case and has ignored its own finding regarding collusion on the strength of which it ought to have been held that there was a cause of action against all the Kahar defendants. The view taken by the first Court was correct.

A cross-objection has been filed by the learned Counsel for the respondents challenging the findings of the Court below on the question of the plaintiffs' title and on their possession within limitation. I have examined the evidence which is of considerable bulk. I agree with the findings of the Courts below that the plaintiffs have established their title to the plots in suit. In particular they produced documentary evidence upon which it was open to the Courts below to hold that they had got a title to these lands by purchase. It is proved that their purchase was made between 30 and 40 years ago and the Courts below were, I think, quite right in assuming that having shown a title to the property the presumption was that the plaintiffs were in possession up to the time of the suit. Indeed there was definite documentary evidence on the record to show that the plaintiffs had been realising dues as Zemindars within a period of 12 years before the present suit was brought. The defendants were not able to adduce any evidence whatever to show that they had any title to these lands. It is quite true that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their own title and could not succeed merely on the ground that the defendants could not show any better title. But it was the case of the defendants that they had acquired a title to these lands by adverse possession and on this point they failed entirely. I agree with the findings of the Court below that the plaintiffs had established a title which justified the decree being made in their favour.

I allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the order of the Court of first instance. The appellants will get their costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court. The cross-objection is dismissed with costs to the plaintiffs-appellants.

Pre-emption—Sale - Vendor and purchaser, evidence of, value of—Representatives appointed to act on behalf of whole village - Minority of some villagers, effect of—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Practice of Privy Council—Point, fresh, whether can be raised.

In a suit for pre-emption the persons engaged in the transaction and notably the vendors and the vendees are necessarily essential witnesses, and, in the absence of contradiction, their testimony ought not to be disregarded merely because they are interested parties [p. 725, col. 2.]

It is not in consonance with the practice of the Privy Council upon the hearing of an appeal to entertain a point not raised in either of the Courts below nor presented upon the appeal. [p. 726, col 1.]

Where in the matter of effecting a purchase of land two or three trusted and responsible inhabitants of a village are appointed to act on behalf of the whole village, very strong and cogent reasons would be required to hold that the arrangement, which is extremely wise and reasonable and so much in the interests of all the villagers, was bad, merely because one or more of the villagers happened to be an infant. [p. 726, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab (Rattigan and Chevis, JJ.), in Civil Appeal No. 1905 of 1912, dated the 6th April 1915.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of

RATTIGAN AND CHEVIS, JJ.—(April 6, 1915).—Plaintiffs who are occupancy tenants of Mauza Rahanwala in the Hissar District, have brought this suit for pre-emption in respect of a sale-deed, dated the 26th of May 1911, whereby the late owner, Mrs. James Skinner, sold the whole of her proprietary rights in the said village, together with all appurtenant rights to defendants Nos. 2 to 6 for an alleged consideration of Rs. 22,000. In their plaint plaintiffs assert that the consideration actually paid was Rs. 15,000 only, and that the sum of Rs. 22,000 was entered in the sale-deed in order to prevent plaintiffs from claiming their right of pre-emption.

Defendants-vendees admitted plaintiffs' right of pre-emption, but pleaded that plaintiffs had by their conduct estopped themselves from asserting it, inasmuch as it was through them that the sale in question had been effected in defendants' favour. They also pleaded that the sum of Rs. 22,000 had in fact been paid by defendants to the vendor.

The District Judge, after disposing in plaintiffs' favour of the preliminary issues that arise under the Punjab Pre-emption Act, found (1) that plaintiffs had not relinquished their rights in the land in suit or estopped themselves from suing, and (2) that the sum of Rs. 22,000 had actually been paid by the vendees to the vendor and that it fairly represented the market value of the property. He accordingly granted plaintiffs a decree for possession of the land conditional on their paying into Court the sum of Rs. 22,000 within three months from the date of decree; in default the decree to be null and void. He further directed that defendants who had "caused the litigation by purchasing land to which they had no right," should pay the costs of the suit.

From this decree defendants have appealed to this Court and the two points urged before us are, firstly, that the second issue should have been decided against plaintiffs, and secondly, that in any event defendants ought not to have been saddled with costs, especially as plaintiffs had failed to establish their allegation as to the amount actually paid to the vendor.

IDRIS v. MRS. JANE SKINNER.

After hearing Mr. Oertel for appellants and Mr. Badr-ud-Din for respondents and considering the evidence on the record, we are satisfied that there is force in defendants vendees' contention that plaintiffs are not now at liberty to claim the right of pre emption to which they would under ordinary circumstances have been entitled. According to the vendees, the vendor being desirous of selling her proprietary rights in the village, offered to sell them in the first instance to plaintiffs who are the occupancy tenants; that plaintiffs being unable to find the money for the purchase, applied to defendants for assistance and that it was agreed between them that defendants should pay three fourths and plaintiffs one fourth of the purchase money (Rs. 22,000) to the vendor, and that three-fourths of the land should thereupon become the property of defendants and one fourth the property of the plaintiffs; but at the time of sale plaintiffs were unable to procure their share of the purchase money and as a result, the whole land was sold with the consent of plaintiffs, to defendants. This agreement according to defendants was made by Idris, Naushera and certain other plaintiffs who in these negotiations acted for, and represented, the occupancy tenants generally.

Plaintiffs, on the other hand, deny this story in toto and allege that the defendants surreptitiously and without the knowledge of plaintiffs had the sale effected in their favour.

The question we have to decide is whether defendants or plaintiffs are telling the truth and after due consideration we believe that the story told by the former is in the main true. It is, we think, impossible to hold that there is no truth whatever in the evidence given by the witnesses Bhagwan Das (the agent of Mrs. James Skinner who negotiated the sale); Fateh Din, the Nabha School Master; Rulya; Batu Raghunath Sahai (the general agent of Mrs. Skinner) and Hakim Abdul Hakim, a legal practitioner of Nabha. If these witnesses are telling the truth, and no good reason has been given for our finding otherwise, an agreement of the kind set up by the vendees was undoubtedly entered into between the parties, and the evidence of Mrs. Jane Skinner, though somewhat vague, is to the same effect.

On the other hand, the alternative story is that of the plaintiffs who assert that the allegation that they had an understanding with the defendants is an absolute myth. Clearly, if plaintiffs' denial is true, everyone of the witnesses above mentioned (including Mrs. Skinner) has been guilty of wilful perjury and has sworn to a story which is wholly without foundation, the sale in question having (according to plaintiffs) been effected secretly and without the knowledge of plaintiffs.

We cannot believe that such is the case. On the contrary we are satisfied that the original intention of the parties was that plaintiffs should provide one fourth of the purchase money, defendants providing the balance, and that the sale should be effected proportionately in their respective favours that plaintiffs subsequently found that they could not raise even the one-fourth part of the purchase-money and accordingly consented to the sale being made in favour of defendants, it being understood that if plaintiffs were later on in a position to pay their one-fourth share, they should be given one fourth of the property. At some subsequent date some third party in all probability instigated plaintiffs to repudiate the transaction and to claim pre-emption of the whole property, for it is obvious that there must be some one behind plaintiffs in this suit. They were unable in May 1911 to procure even Rs. 5,500 and it is scarcely likely that in December 1911 they would be in a position to pay Rs. 15,000 (or Rs. 22,000 if necessary) to secure the bargain.

We accordingly find that the sale to defendants Nos. 2 to 6 was brought about by some of the leading members of plaintiffs' party including Idris and Naushera, and that as these persons were acting not merely on their own behalf, but as the representatives of all their fellow occupancy tenants (just as they are admittedly conducting the present suit on behalf of all plaintiffs) the latter are estopped from now claiming to pre empt the property, and are not entitled to deprive the vendees of a bargain which the vendees succeeded in obtaining through the active instrumentality of Idris, Naushera and the others.

We accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The appellants in this case are occupancy tenants of the village of Rahanwala in the District of Hissar, and as such they claim to possess and to be entitled to exercise a right of pre-emption in respect of the said village. It is undisputed that they originally enjoyed this right; the question is whether, in the circumstances that have transpired, they enjoy it still.

The first respondent (Mrs. Jane Skinner) was the proprietor of the said village, and she having decided to sell her proprietary interest, placed the matter in the hands of her agent, Bhagwan Das, who notified the occupancy tenants of the proposed sale.

It appears from the evidence that the tenants had not the necessary funds for the purchase, and that certain of them known as Idris and Naushera, acting, as is alleged, on behalf of the whole village, introduced the other respondents to the said agent as prospective purchasers, at the same time informing him that an arrangement had been come to whereby these respondents should pay the money and acquire the property, which should then be held as three-quarters for them and one-quarter for the appellants. The sale-deed was accordingly written out in the presence of Idris and Naushera, and the purchase was completed in favour of the proposed vendees. It is this purchase which the appellants seek to set aside asserting that it constituted an unlawful defeasance of their rights.

If, in fact the transaction was effected in the circumstances and manner described, it is plain that their claim could not succeed unless Idris and Naushera were acting on their own responsibility and without the knowledge or authority of the other occupancy tenants. This, in fact, is the appellants' contention, which they established to the satisfaction of the District Judge of Hissar, who on the 12th August 1912 granted them the relief they sought. But the Chief Court of the Punjab, on the 6th April 1915, reversed this decree and made, in favour of the respondents, the decree against which the present appeal is brought.

Now the evidence as recorded is abundant to establish the respondent's case. Bhagwan Das, the agent, said that the village was under his supervision, and that when asked to procure a purchaser, he spoke to the villagers about it. They said they were anxious to purchase, but could not afford the whole of the money, and would try to procure partners, and that they then came to the arrangement to which reference has been made. He stated in plain terms that the plaintiffs, Naushera and Idris, represented the whole of the village in the matter. There were other witnesses who spoke to the same effect, but the learned District Judge regarded the whole of their evidence with suspicion, because they were connected with the vendees. This, of course, is inaccurate with regard to Bhagwan Das, but the learned District Judge thinks that his evidence cannot be trusted because he was the agent of the vendor, and cannot, therefore, be called an uninterested witness.

Whatever weight might be given to these considerations, if the plaintiffs—and notably Idris and Naushera—had been called to give evidence in answer, it appears to their Lordships to be but slender material upon which to base a judgment that consists in disbelieving the whole story, which, so far as evidence is concerned, is uncontradicted in a single particular.

In cases of this kind the persons engaged in the transaction—and notably the vendors and the vendees—are necessarily essential witnesses, and in the absence of contradiction, to disregard their testimony because they were interested parties is to carry the vigilance, with which the Court ought always to regard interested testimony, beyond all reasonable and trustworthy limits. There appears to be no reason in the recorded evidence to impute collusion or dishonesty to any of these witnesses, and as their evidence is wholly unanswered, it must in their Lordships' opinion prevail.

There remains the question as to the authority of Idris and Naushera to act on behalf of the remaining villagers, and it was urged before their Lordships that the authority was lacking because some of the villagers were infants, and could not properly confer authority except through the agency of guardians properly appointed through the Court.

This point was not raised in either of the Courts below nor in the case presented upon this appeal, and, in these circumstances it is not consonant with there Lordships' practice that it should be entertrined upon the hearing before them. They ought, however, to add that no authority has been placed before them in support of such a proposition, and it would require very strong and cogent reasons that would compel them to hold that an arrangement so extremely reasonable and wise, and so much in the interest of all the villagers as that effected by appointing, on behalf of the whole village, two or three trusted and responsible inhabitants to act on their behalf should in a matter like the present, be held to be bad, simply because one or more of the villagers happened to be an infant.

The point that was urged both in cross-examination and argument as to the lack of authority was, that Idris and Naushera had no powers of attorney from the other villagers, but, in their Lordships' opinion, no such power was needed, nor was any reason given why it should be required, apart from this contention their authority does not appear to have been seriously challenged at the trial.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal must fail, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that it should be dismissed with costs.

SWARNAMOYEE DASSI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Inherent power—Misapprehension as to result of suit—Substitution of parties—Appellate Court, power of.

A Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court, under a misapprehension as to the result of a suit, disallowed an application for substitution of parties. On appeal:

Held, that as under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court had inherent power to make such order as may be necessary for the ends of justice, the application for substitution should be allowed. [p. 728, col. 1.]

Appeal against the following order of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 23rd June 1919.

GREAVES, J.—This is an application by one Nilkanta Ghose, who has been appointed Receiver of the estate of Jadunath Sircar deceased in Title Suit No. 30 of 1918 of the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Alipore, for an order that the applicant, as such Receiver, may be substituted as plaintiff in the records of this suit and that the order dismissing the suit and the decree, dated 23rd May 1919, may be set aside except as relates to the direction as to payment of the costs of Babu Pannalal Dey and that the suit may be restored.

The facts are shortly as follows:—Srimati Swarnomoyi Dassi, as one of the legal personal representatives of Jadunath Sircar, commenced, with the representatives of the estate, a suit against the defendant J. C. Galstaun in the year 1916, being Suit No. 329 of that year. The suit came on for hearing before me on 23rd May last. The plaintiffs did not appear and I dismissed the suit and decreed in favour of the defendant a claim for a set-off which he had pleaded in his written statement against the plaintiffs. The legal personal representatives of Jadunath Sircar apparently, after the institution of the suit, fell out among themselves and it became necessary, for an application to be made for the appointment of a Receiver of the estate of Jadunath Sircar. An application was accordingly made to the Alipore Court and on 12th May 1919 Nilkanta Ghose was appointed Receiver of that estate. It is said that thereupon the plaintiffs' claim in this suit, which was a claim for rent, devolved upon and vested in the Receiver Nilkanta Ghose hence he applies for the order which I have already stated.

The Code of Civil Procedure provides, in Order XXII, for the devolution or survivorship of rights of suit upon the death, marriage or insolvency of parties, and for the procedure to be adopted. That is to say, in the case of death, the right of substitution, if it survives to the representatives of the plaintiff or the defendant, can be exercised within the period stated in the order. Order XXII, rule 10, provides that in other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may by leave of the Court be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved, that is to say, in a case like the present, assuming that the right to sue for rent devolved on the Receiver upon his appointment, he would be entitled, if he had come at the right time and the Court had thought fit, to be added as a party to the suit. It does not seem to me, however, upon the reading of Order XXII, rule 10, that any right of substitution devolved upon him as of right by reason of his appointment: and I have to consider whether in the circumstances I ought to interfere. I do not think that I ought. If the applicant is right and the right to sue for and recover rent accrued to him upon his appointment on the 12th May 1919, he is not precluded from bringing a fresh suit, and so far as the question of set-off is concerned, if he is right in saying that no valid or binding order could have been made against the plaintiffs after the date of his appointment, then he will be entitled to dispute that order if and when that comes to be executed. The suit has, however, already been dismissed and although I accept Nilkanta Ghose's statement that he did not know of the existence of the suit until after the decree, it seems to me that having regard to questions of limitation and so on which may have arisen in favour of the defendant I should not be justified in the circumstances in making the order I am asked to make. I must, therefore, refuse the application and the defendant will be entitled to the costs of the application.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves. I think, I may say at once that the judgment, judging from the terms of it, must have been given under some misapprehension, because the learned Judge seems to have been under the impression that there was an order dismissing the plaintiff's suit. He says in the first paragraph of his judgment: "This is an application that the Receiver may be substituted as plaintiff in the records of the suit and that the order dismissing the suit and the decree dated the 23rd May 1919 may be set aside except as relates to the direction as to payment of the costs of Babu Pannalal Dey and that the suit may be restored." Later on, towards the end of his judgment he says again: "The suit has, however, already been dismissed and although I accept Nilkanta Ghose's statement that he did not know of the existence of the suit until after the decree" and so on. I do not think it is the learned Judge's fault. He evidently based his judgment upon the form of the application which was, that the order of dismissal, and the decree, dated the 23rd of May 1919, may be set aside except as it relates to the direction as to payment of the costs, and so on. We have the decree now before us and it appears that there was no order of dismissal. It appears therefrom that there was a declaration that there was due to the defendant in respect of his advance of Rs. 15,000 after debiting the rents, (which were the subject-matter of the plaintiff's claim) and crediting the interest a sum of Rs. 7,190. Therefore, it appears that, far from dismissing the plaintiff's suit, the learned Judge [illegible]

the plaintiff's claim as having been admitted by the defendant, and apparently he deducted from the amount of the defendant's advance, that which was due to the plaintiff. The learned Judge thought that the matter was one for his discretion, and that inasmuch as the suit had been dismissed, questions of limitation might arise and that he ought, therefore, to exercise his discretion in refusing the application. Now, that we are made aware of the real facts of the case, and it appearing that the suit was not dismissed, I think we ought to exercise the power vested in us under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice.

It appears that the decree of the learned Judge was made on the 23rd of May 1919. Before that, the Receiver had been appointed by the Alipore Court on the 12th of May 1919. The learned Judge has found that the Receiver did not know of this suit, until after the decree and it is clear that the learned Judge himself did not know when he gave his judgment on the 23rd of May, of the appointment of the Receiver by the Alipore Court. Consequently, in my judgment, the matter should be set right, and the order which we propose to make is as follows: The decree of the 23rd of May 1919 will be set aside. We direct that the Receiver should be added as a plaintiff to the suit and in case the present plaintiffs may desire to raise any point, of which we are at present not aware, we direct that the present plaintiffs, instead of remaining as plaintiffs in the suit, should be added as defendants: that will involve striking out their names as plaintiffs and adding them as defendants.

As regards the costs of the application before Mr. Justice Greaves and of this appeal, we think that each party should bear his own costs. We bear in mind that Mr. James' client was not responsible for the Receiver not being aware of the suit, nor was he responsible for the Court not being aware of the appointment of the Receiver, on the other hand, when those facts were made known, his client did oppose the application of the Receiver for proceeding with the suit. We think that the justice of the case will be met if we order that each party shall bear his own costs of the application in the Court below and of this appeal.

The costs of the Receiver are to be taxed as between Attorney and client.

The Costs of the suit will be in the discretion of the learned Judge who tries the suit.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 26—Easement—Right of way—Open user for 20 years—Presumption—Appeal, second—Failure to make presumption allowed by law—Error of law.

An open user of a right of way continued without interruption for a period of over 20 years and not shown to be attributable to permission or sufferance on the owner's part is prima facie evidence of enjoyment as of right within the meaning of section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act. [p. 730, col. 1.]

The failure by a Court to make a presumption allowed by law amounts to an error of law. [p. 730, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 18th February 1919, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Jiyan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs Diwan and Gulab instituted a suit against Jagta and others claiming that they had a right of way to a well, known as Jandwala, which the defendants had recently obstructed, and, therefore, they claim a perpetual injunction preventing the said defendants from obstructing the road. It has been held by the Courts below that the well known as Jandwala has been in existence for over 20 years.

DIWAN v. JAGTA.

The plaintiffs and the defendants are apparently co-sharers in this well. In order to gain access to this well from a road running between Muli and Birk it is necessary for the plaintiffs to go across certain fields belonging to some of the defendants. The Courts below have held that this road has been in existence for over 20 years, ever since the well came into being. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, however, on the ground that this road is not entered in the revenue papers, and in the absence of such an entry the Court found it impossible to hold that the existence of this road had been "entirely proved." The learned District Judge considered that the absence of an entry in the revenue record of this road was immaterial as it was not a public but a private one. From an examination of the plan on the record, Exhibit P-1, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that it was difficult, if not impossible, for the plaintiffs to take their cattle to this well without using the disputed roadway. He, however, held that the plaintiffs had not proved that they had been using this road without let or hindrance for more than 20 years as of right. From these findings it will appear that the Courts below have agreed in holding that this road is practically the only road by which the plaintiffs can gain access to the well in which they are co-sharers. They have also held that this road as well as the well have been in existence for more than 20 years and that the plaintiffs have been using the said road for the purpose of getting to their well. The learned District Judge has held, however, that this user was not as of right.

On behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants Mr. Jagan Nath has referred me to Gale on Easements, Kyinan v. Set Lal (1) and Rana Ganpat Singh v. Kangra Valley Slate Company (2) and has contended that the term "as of right" does not necessarily imply an original grant, but that when user of a roadway has been established for a period of over 20 years—user effected without force, secrecy or evasion and not dependent upon the consent of the defendants—the inference to be drawn according to law is that a user was a user as of right. On the other hand Mr. Ghulam Rasul for the respondents has referred me to Baroda Kant Karmakar v. Sreenath Sil (3), Shaikh Khoda Buksh v. Shaikh Tajuddin (4), Meser Mullick v. Hafieuddi Mullick (5) and Mahomed Ali v. Joogul Ram (6). His contention is that the law in England and the law in India are different and that the inferences contended for by Mr. Jagan Nath, though permissible under the English Law, are not so in this country. The authorities cited by him do not, however, appear to me to go quite as far as Mr. Ghulam Rasul would wish. In Baroda Kant Karmakar v. Sreenath Sil (3) the right claimed was to use a pathway which lay through the courtyard of the defendants' bari close by their dwelling house and kitchen and not far off from a tank used by the female members of their families. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court who decided that case held that when, on the facts of that case, the Court below had held that the inference to be drawn was that the user was permissive, they were unable to say that this finding was opposed to any principle of law.

In Shaikh Khoda Bahsh v. Shaikh Tajuddin (4), Banerji, J., held that in a suit to establish a right of way the propriety of the English rule that the presumption from user should be that it is of right must depend upon the circumstances not only of each particular case but also of each particular country, regard being had to the habits of the people of that country. With this decision I have no quarrel. It does not, however, seem to me to rule out the presumption that may be drawn under the law. Similarly Muhomed Ali v. Joogul Ram (6) may be distinguished. In Rana Ganpat Singh v. Kangra Valley Slate Company (2), Chatterji and Anderson, JJ., held that the principle of the English Law regarding the presumed dedication of a road to the public arising from user of such road by the public being founded on reason and common sense and conducive to public convenience is applicable to India. It seems to me that similarly the presumption arising out of user in a case like the present would be the same, having due regard to the habits of the people of this country. In Kyinan v. Set Lal (1) it was held that when a right of way has been used peaceably and openly without interruption for 20 years its user as of right might be legally inferred. [See also Sahib Ditta v. Daya Singh (7).] It seems to me that an open user continued without interruption for a period of over 20 years and not shown to be attributable to permission or sufferance on the owner's part is prima facie evidence of enjoyment as of right within the meaning of section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act. In the present case it has been found that the plaintiffs have got a right of easement as of necessity for the trial Judge after an inspection of the spot came to the conclusion that the road claimed by the plaintiffs was the only road that they could use to gain access to the well. As I read the judgment of the learned District Judge he holds that this road has been used without let or hindrance for a period of 20 years, but he has failed to draw the inference that the user was as of right. It seems to me that in failing to make this presumption or to draw this inference he has erred in law.

I, therefore, accept the appeal with costs and grant the plaintiffs a decree as prayed.

Appeal accepted.

Sri MEENAKSHI SUNDARESWARAL DEVASTANAM OF MADURA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Religious endowment—General and particular trusts—General trustee, claim by, for possession of property, subject to particular trust, whether maintainable—Idol, position of—Adverse possession—Limitation.

The property of an endowment may consist partly or wholly in the right to enjoy the revenues of property in the possession of persons who have the right and the duty to manage such property, collect the income and hand it over when collected to be used in the proper manner for the purposes of the endowment. Such persons may even have certain rights of apportionment of the revenue so handed over by them among the several purposes of the endowment. All this is compatible with there being a general trustee of the whole endowment including the revenues when so collected and handed over. But in such a case the general trustee is not entitled to the possession of the properties out of which that portion of the revenue comes. His rights do not commence until after the collection of the revenues by and under the management of those who hold possession. [p. 732, cols. 1 & 2.]

An idol may have not merely a general trustee but also other subordinate representatives having the right to manage certain special portions of his property, and pay over the income so collected to the endowment, and even to some degree control its use. Such rights are not inconsistent with the existence of a general trustee, but they are fatal to his claim to possession of the properties from which those revenues are derived. [p. 732, col. 2.]

When in such a case it is necessary to consider limitation, the possession of such subordinate representatives will be held to be adverse to that of the general trustee. [p. 732, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the High Court of Madras, (Wallis, Officiating Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.), dated the 10th November 1914, reported as 26 Ind. Cas. 841, affirming the decree of the District Judge, Madura.

FACTS.—The suit was brought by the plaintiff (appellant) claiming to be Hukdar or trustee of a religious and charitable endowment for the performance of certain ceremonies in a temple at Madura against the manager of the temple and the members of the temple committe for possession of four villages. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove that he was trustee of the endowment, and also that the suit was barred by limitation. On appeal the High Court (Wallis, Offg. C. J. and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.) agreed with the finding that the suit was barred, but differed in opinion as to whether plaintiff had established his claim to be trustee of the endowment.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., Messrs. Kenworthy Brown and Palat, for the Appellant.—Plaintiff and his predecessors have held the position of general trustee of the endowment, which included not only such villages as were in their possession, but also the villages claimed, whose revenues form part of the endowment, which must, as a matter of law, be his and which he was entitled to possess. The people who manage the villages and collect the revenues are local agents acting for him and cannot set up an adverse title; their possession has been his in law, and the rights of the Pandara Sannidhi as hereditary trustee have never been lost under any law.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. and Mr. Dube, for the Respondents.—Defendants and their predecessors have been in adverse possession for a known period of nearly sixty years, they have been appointed by Government, and Government, who had previous possession handed over the villages to the then manager of the temple at Madura, and no opposition was made by appellant's predecessors at the time the villages were so handed over.

Moreover, the plaintiff has failed to establish his title to the trusteeship of the Thanappa Mudali Kattalai, and even if he held such office respondents had rights of possession and management with which he could not interfere.

Mr. De Gruyther replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD MOULTON.—This is a suit brought by the Pandara Sannidhi of an important Mutt situated in Tanjore to recover possession of four villages situated in the Madura District. He alleges that he is Hukdar or trustee of the Thanappa Mudali Kattalai, which is an endowment for the performance of certain ceremonies in a temple at Madura, and that these villages form part of that endowment, and that, therefore, as such trustee he is entitled to their possession. The defendants are the manager of the temple and the members of the Temple Committee appointed by the Government under Act XX of 1863. They deny that the plaintiff is trustee of the endowment, or that he has any right either to the management or to the possession of the properties in question, and they further allege that if he had at any time such right his claim is barred by limitation.

In the Court of first instance the Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the defendants on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was trustee of the endowment, and also on the ground of the Statute of Limitations. On appeal to the High Court, both Judges agreed with his finding that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation, but they differed in opinion as to whether the plaintiff had proved his claim to be trustee of the endowment. In the result, therefore, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in both Courts and from these decisions the present appeal is brought.

The history of the villages in suit has been examined in great detail in the proceedings in the Courts below, and certain points in that history may be taken to have been established. The documents relating to the creation of the Kattalai appear to be lost, but it is agreed that the founder was Thanappa Mudali, who was Prime Minister to the Ruler of Trichinopoly between the years 1704 and 1735. It is not clear at what date or how these villages became connected with the endowment, but it must have been at an early date because very shortly after the foundation of this Kattalai the Muhammadan Government attached these villages, and retained possession of them until about 1790, when the Madras Government assumed possession of the Madura District. Ultimately in 1801 the villages came into the possession of the East India Company, and remained in their possession until 1849, when the general manager of the temple at Madura (who had been appointed by the Company in 1842 in exercise of the powers given them under Regulation VII of 1817) was placed by the Company in possession of the villages.

The income derived from the villages in suit has been applied in various ways during this period. During the time that they remained under attachment by the Muhammadan Government it would seem that a portion of the income was applied to the uses of the endowment, and the remainder was appropriated by that Government. There is no evidence as to what happened between 1790 and 1801. From 1801 to 1849, while the villages in question were in the possession of the East India Company, the revenue from them was applied in whole or in part by the Company to the uses of the endowment. In the earlier years it appears to have been handed over as a whole, but from the year 1817 the Government followed the practice of settling each year a budget showing the amount necessary for the expenses of the Katalai for that year, paying over only so much of the income as was sufficient to satisfy that budget, and retaining the remainder. Since 1849, the villages have been in the hands of the predecessors of the defendants, and the whole of the revenue has been used for the purposes of the endowment (including the expenses of the temple) according to the directions of the temple manager and the Temple Committee.

Throughout the whole of the history of these villages from the date of the Muhammadan attachment to the present time, there is one fact that is clear from the evidence, i. e., that these villages have never been in the possession of the plaintiff or his predecessors. Other villages form part of the property of the endowment, and these have been in the possession of the plaintiff and his predecessors throughout. These latter villages appear not to have been attached by the Muhammadan Government, but to have been left in the possession of the predecessors of the plaintiff on behalf of the endowment. But in all the records relating to possession the contrast between those that relate to the villages in suit and those that relate to these other villages is marked. The latter are entered as being in the possession of persons representing the predecessors of the plaintiff. This is never the case with regard to the villages in suit.

The argument in favour of the plaintiff's claim is, therefore, in reality an argument which is not founded on evidence relating to the past history of the villages, but is of a legal nature. It avers that he and his predecessors have held the position of general trustee of the endowment, and that as such the villages in suit whose revenues form part of that endowment must, as a matter of law, be his and he must, therefore, be entitled to possession. The people who manage the villages and collect the revenues are, he contends, acting for him, and cannot set up an adverse title, so that their possession has been, in the eye of the law, his own. In their Lordships' opinion, there is a fallacy in this reasoning. The property of an endowment may consist partly or wholly in the right to enjoy the revenues of property which is in the possession of persons who have the right and the duty to manage the property, collect the revenue and hand it over when collected to be used in the proper manner for the purposes of the endowment. Such persons may even have certain rights of apportionment of the revenue so handed over by them among the several purposes of the endowment. All this is compatible with there being a general trustee of the whole endowment including the revenues when so collected and handed over. But in such a case the general trustee would not be entitled to the possession of the properties out of which this portion of the revenue comes. His rights do not commence untile after the collection of the revenues by and under the management of those who hold possession. It must be remembered that after all the general trustee is only a representative of the Idol who is a juridical personage, and who is the true owner, and there is nothing legally incongruous in that personage having other subordinate representatives who have the right to manage certain special portions of his property, and pay over the income so collected to the endowment, and even to some degree to control its use. Such rights would, as has been said, not be inconsistent with the existence of a general trustee, but they would be fatal to his claim to possession of the properties from which these revenues are derived. Possession would be in the hands of those entitled to manage these special properties and their possession would be adverse to his.

Their Lordships, therefore, do not consider it necessary to decide whether the claims of the plaintiff to be Hukdar or general trustee of the endowment are or are not well-founded. The history of these villages from the year when they came into the possession of the Company, and even from a far anterior date, indicates that their relationship to the endowment was such as has been just described. The possession was always in some other person than the predecessor of the plaintiff or any person appointed by him, or, indeed, any other person claiming title from the founder of the endowment. The sole interest of the endowment in them has been an interest in the revenues collected from them by such other persons who were in possession of and managed the villages themselves. Their Lordships would be very unwilling to value lightly the testimony of a long course of dealing with the possession of these villages such as the history of this case has disclosed, which, as already stated, indicates that the relationship of the villages to the general endowment has throughout been of this nature. But they consider that it is not necessary to base their decision on the testimony of the earlier history. It suffices to consider the events that have happened from 1849 onwards.

In the year 1849 the Government, which was undoubtedly then in possession of the villages in suit, handed them over to the manager of the temple of Madura (the appointment of whom was in their hands), and there is no doubt that from that time they have been in the possession of such manager and the Temple Committee which is also appointed by Government. The Pandara Sannidhi made no opposition to their being so handed over. From that time forward it is beyond question that the plaintiff has been out of possession of these villages. If he has any right to claim possession in his suit he undoubtedly had the same right in 1849, and, therefore, as at the date of the suit he had been out of possession of these villages for nearly sixty years, his claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations, and this appeal fails.

Originally a claim for some alternative relief was included in this action, but no case has been made out for it.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should stand dismissed, and that the appellant should pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 441 OF 1919.

HARNAMAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS——APPELLANTS

versus

DASONDHI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 144—Custom—Gift—Donee, failure of direct line of—Reversion of gifted property—Trespasser, possession of, whether adverse to nearest reversioner or all reversioners—Trees planted by donee, whether revert with the land—Compensation.

Where on the failure of a donee's line of descendants the gifted property is taken possession of by a trespasser his possession is adverse, within the meaning of Article 144 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, to the nearest reversioner who is entitled to claim immediate possession of the property and not to the more distant collaterals who cannot at once claim possession. [p. 734, col. 1.]

A donee has a precarious tenure of the gifted land and any permanent fixtures, e. g., trees which he attaches to it and any permanent structures which he erects upon it would, in the event of the failure of his direct line, go to the reversionary owner of the land, and not to the collateral heirs of the donee. The latter are not in such a case entitled to any compensation. [p. 735, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 21st November 1918.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—A gift of certain land was made by one Musammat Naraina, widow of Harbhaj, deceased, to her daughter's sons Dittu and Nihalu on the 25th December 1897. Nihalu died on the 1st January 1900 and Dittu obtained possession of his share and retained it till his own death in 1909. After the death of Dittu mutation of all the lands was effected in favour of defendants, Dittu's first cousins, and as mutation was accepted by the nearest reversioner, Achhru, nothing was done by the other reversioners. Achhru died in 1914 and in 1918 plaintiffs, who are collaterals in the fourth degree of the original donor's husband, sued for possession on the ground that the donees' direct lineal descendants having failed, the lands revert to plaintiffs.

The first question before me upon this appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation as regards the share of Nihalu,

Mr. Tek Chand contends that Dittu when he took possession of Nihalu's land was a mere trespasser, that his possession was adverse not only to Achhru, the next reversioner, but to all the reversioners and that qua this part of the claim, the suit is barred. The learned Vakil relies upon the decision of a single Judge reported as Kahla Singh v. Diala (1).

The District Judge has held that the suit is not barred as regards any part of the claim and I entirely agree. In order that the possession of Dittu should be adverse to the plaintiffs it is necessary in the first instance to prove that the plaintiffs had a right to claim possession which they could have enforced against Dittu. But as long as Achhru was alive plaintiffs had no right to sue for possession and the principle of the Full Bench decision in Sundar v. Salig Ram (2) is directly in point in the present case. Kahla Singh v. Diala (1) was a case decided on its own facts, but if the learned Judge who decided it intended to hold that the possession of a trespasser would be adverse within the meaning and for the purposes of Article 144 of the Limitation Act, to a person who had at the time no right to claim possession, I must, with every deference, venture to differ from such an exposition of the law. I hold, therefore, that the suit is within time.

The next question is whether defendants who are the collaterals of the donees are entitled to claim compensation in respect of certain trees planted on the land by Dittu and Nihalu. It is urged by Mr. Tek Chand that these trees were the self-acquired property of the donees and that the latter's collaterals and not the owners of the land are entitled to claim them or their value. I know of no authority in support of a claim such as this, and it appears to me that the ordinary principle must prevail quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. The donees had a precarious tenure of the land and any permanent fixtures which they attached to it or permanent structures erected by them upon it would in the ordinary course of things go to the reversionary owner of the land and not to the collateral heirs of the donees. I think that this part of the defendants' claim has also been rightly rejected by the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

TULSIRAM JANKIDASS—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, rr. 1, 4, 7—Review—Discovery of new evidence—Order granting review—Appeal, when maintainable.

Where in granting an application for review on the ground of the discovery of new evidence, the Court does not come to any finding whether there was a discovery of new evidence, or that the evidence was of such an important nature that a review ought to be granted, nor does it come to any finding whether due diligence was exercised with regard to the production of such evidence at the trial, the order granting review contravenes rule 4 of Order XLVII of the Code of Civil Procedure and is appealable and liable to be set aside. [p. 736, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 7th July 1919.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Messrs. S. C. Ray and A. K. Ray), for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. N. Chowdhury and P. N. Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves and from an order made by him on the 7th day of July 1919.

The application was made by the defendant firm asking that a decree which had been made by the learned Judge in the suit on the 4th of June 1919 should be reviewed. The application was based upon the following ground, that the evidence of one Baldeo Sahay which was very relevant and most material could not be produced by the defendant firm after the exercise of due diligence at the time when the decree was passed. It was alleged that the defendants believed that the evidence of Baldeo Sahay was of such a character that if it had been given at the said hearing it might possibly have altered the judgment. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that a certain contract was void, inoperative, unenforceable and of no effect, and that the defendants were not entitled to enforce the said contract or any rights thereunder. The allegation was that the contract in question had been made through the individual to whom I have referred, Baldeo Sahay. He was not called as a witness at the trial. The result of the trial was that the learned Judge held that the defendants did not discharge the onus which lay upon them of proving the contract. Consequently he gave judgment in favour of the plaintiffs and a decree was drawn up in accordance with the judgment. That was the decree which the defendant firm applied to have reviewed. The learned Judge granted a rule. The hearing of that Rule was on the 7th of July this year. The learned Judge delivered no judgment, but he said "I think I will hear his evidence." Then there was a discussion as to the date when the further hearing should be held. The learned Judge directed "Have it a fortnight hence." He then made the Rule absolute and ordered that costs should be costs in the cause. The result of making the Rule absolute was that the decree which had been drawn up in pursuance of his judgment was set aside. The order drawn up was as follows: It is ordered that this suit be placed on the peremptory list of suits for hearing after a fortnight from the date hereof for re-trial for hearing the evidence of Baldeo Das as a witness on behalf of the defendant firm. The costs of that application and the order nisi were directed to be costs in the cause.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that the order of review which the learned Judge made is appealable, because he argued that the order granting the review was in contravention of the provisions of rule 4, Order XLVII, of the Civil Procedure Code and if the learned Counsel is right in that contention, then it is clear that an appeal lies, because such an appeal is expressly given by Order XLVII, rule 7 of which is as follows:—

"(1) An order of the Court rejecting the application shall not be appealable; but an order granting an application may be objected to on the ground that the application was —(a) in contravention of the provisions of rule 2, (b) in contravention of the provisions of rule 4.....

.....Such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit." Rule 4, sub. rule (2) is as follows: "Where the Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted, it shall grant the same: Provided that.....(b) no such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation." In order to see what is meant by "discovery of new matter or evidence" mentioned in this rule, reference must be made to rule 1 of Order XLVII which is the rule giving a right to the person aggrieved to apply for a review. That rule provides as follows: "Any person considering himself aggrieved, (a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred, or (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed, or (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order.

CHIRANJILAL RAMLAL v. TULSIRAM JANKIDASS.

The learned Counsel argued first, that there must be an allegation such as is referred to in Order XLVII, rule 4, sub-rule (2) (b), and then there must be strict proof of such allegation. It was further urged that the allegation must contain a statement that the evidence which is relied upon has been discovered after the decree was passed: further, that it must be new evidence; thirdly, that it must be important evidence, and, fourthly that it could not be produced at the time when the decree was passed by the exercise of due diligence. He further urged that with regard to the discovery and with regard to the newness of the evidence the allegations made by the applicants in this case did not comply with the rule.

It appears that Baldeo Sahay had made an affidavit on the 23rd of August 1918, some months before the trial took place, which contained allegations with relation to the alleged making of the contract in question and the defendants were aware of the evidence which he would be able to give. Consequently, the learned Counsel urged that his evidence was not new evidence within the meaning of the rule nor was there a discovery of the evidence after the decree was made, and that, therefore, the applicant had not complied with rule 4, sub rule (2) (b) of Order XLVII: I agree with his contention in that respect. Further he argued that even if there was a sufficient allegation, there was not strict proof of such allegation.

Now, the meaning of the words "strict proof" has been considered by the late Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins and by my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe in the case of Ahed Khondkar v. Mohendra Lal De (1). The learned Chief Justice at page 839* said this: "Where there has been placed before that Court such evidence or other mode of proof as the law requires and permits, I cannot think that it was intended that on appeal under section 629" (the learned Chief Justice was then dealing with the Code of 1882) "it was to be open to the Appeal Court to say though there has been legal evidence, and in that sense strict proof, that proof did not convince it though it convinced the Judge who heard the witnesses and, therefore, the application and the order granting the review were ultra vires and beyond the competence of the Court." I intend to say nothing which would in any sense derogate from what the learned Chief Justice said in that case. But the case which we are now considering differs from the case which was then before the learned Judges, because in my judgment in this case there is a material defect, viz., that there was no finding by the learned Judge who heard this application for review that he was convinced by the proof which was put before him upon the material matters which it was necessary for him to consider in deciding whether he should grant the review or not. The learned Judge merely said "I think I will hear his evidence." He has not come to any finding as to whether there was a discovery of new evidence: he has not come to any finding as to whether that evidence was of such an important nature that he ought to grant a review; nor has he come to any finding as to whether due diligence was exercised by the defendants, with regard to the production of such evidence at the trial. The result is that in my judgment the order for review was made in contravention of rule 4, Order XLVII, of the Civil Procedure Code. Consequently, there is a right of appeal.

There being a right of appeal, the next question, that I have to consider is whether the order of the learned Judge should be upheld or set aside.

In my judgment there is no doubt that this order should be set aside. In my judgment the defendants have not shown any ground which would justify this Court in making an order that the evidence of Baldeo Sahay should be taken on a re-hearing.

With regard to the kind of evidence which is necessary in an application of this kind, I need not say anything because my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee and I had to consider this point, and we dealt with it in the case of Nundo Lal Mullick v. Punchanon Mukherjee (2). I do not intend to add anything to what I said in my judgment in that case. The facts of this case are such as to convince me that the evidence which the defendants desired to put before the Court in no way comes within the ruling which we laid down in that case. As regards the class of new evidence, the rule is that the new evidence must be such that if adduced it would be practically conclusive,—that is, evidence of such a class as to render it probable almost beyond doubt that the decision or judgment would be different. What are the facts in this case? We find that the defendant firm in the application which they made to the Court could not say more than that if the evidence had been given at the hearing it might "possibly" have altered the judgment —an allegation which is not sufficient to support the application. Then again, as to what took place at the trial when there was some discussion about the calling of the individual in question, I find a statement in the affidavit of Ramlal, a member of the plaintiff's firm, which is not denied by the affidavit put in in reply thereto to this effect: "When the case came up for hearing on the 4th June last, not only no application for adjournment of the case on behalf of the defendant firm on account of its inability to arrest the said Baldeo Das was made, but on the contrary the learned Counsel appearing for the defendant firm went on to the trial of this suit and expressly stated to the Court that Baldeo could not be produced, and even if he could be produced, no reliance could be placed upon his evidence, he having given his statement to both sides." That is the man, with respect to whose evidence this application was made, in order that a further hearing of this case should take place to see whether his evidence would bring about a different decision. In my judgment it cannot be said that Baldeo Dass's evidence, which was described by the defendant's learned Counsel as being evidence upon which no reliance should be placed, is evidence which would be practically conclusive or which would render it probable almost beyond doubt that the decision would be different.

For these reasons on the merits, in my judgment, this appeal should be allowed, and the order for review which was made by my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves should be set aside, and that the defendant firm should pay the costs of this appeal and of the application in the Court below.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that the order made by Mr. Justice Greaves on the application for review cannot be supported. The suit was instituted on the 19th August 1918 for a declaration that a contract between the parties was void, inoperative, unenforceable and of no effect, and for an injunction to restrain the arbitration proceedings pending before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The suit was decreed on the 14th June 1919. On the 19th June the defendant made an application for review of the decree, on the ground that the evidence of one Baldeo Sahai which was very relevant and most material could not be produced by him at the trial after the exercise of due diligence. A Rule was granted on the same day. The Rule was made absolute on the 7th July 1919. An order was subsequently drawn up in the following terms: "It is ordered that this suit be placed on the peremptory list of suits for hearing after a fortnight from the date hereof for retrial on hearing the evidence of Baldeo Sahay in the pleading in this suit mentioned as a witness on behalf of the defendant firm." It cannot be disputed that the effect of this order was to set aside the decree made on the 4th June 1919. The plaintiffs have now appealed against the order made on the application for review.

The appeal is sought to be supported on the ground that the application for review was granted in contravention of the provisions of rule 4 of Order XLVII of the Code. Rule (1) of that Order provides that "Any person considering himself aggrieved, by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred...and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made.....desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order." It is clear that the litigant who invokes the jurisdiction of the Court to grant a review must allege the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made. When an application has been made on this ground, it may be granted under rule 4, sub-rule (2), if the Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted. There is, however, an important proviso in these terms:— "No such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation." It will be observed that whereas the expression used in rules 1 and 2 is "new and important matter or evidence," the expression in clause (b) of the proviso to rule 4 is "discovery of new matter or evidence." In my opinion, the effect of this expression is the same as if the words used had been "new and important matter or evidence." The jurisdiction of the Court to grant a review depends upon the circumstances mentioned in rule 1; and it cannot be urged that rule 4 is intended to prescribe a different test. Rule 7 next provides that an order granting an application for review may be objected to on the ground that the application was in contravention of the provisions of rule 4. Consequently when, as in the case before us, an application for review has been granted, it is open to the appellant to impeach the propriety of the order on the ground of contravention of the provisions of clause (b) of the proviso to rule 4. The appellant here argues that the application has been granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence, which, the applicant urged, was not within his knowledge or could not be adduced by him, when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation. In my opinion, it is plain that this objection is well-founded. Before a Court can exercise the jurisdiction vested in it to grant an application for review on the ground of discovery of new and important matter or evidence, it is incumbent on the Court to be satisfied with the allegation of the applicant that the evidence in question constituted new and important evidence within the meaning of rule 1. There is no adjudication by the learned Judge in this case that he was so satisfied. The Court must further have strict proof of the allegation that the evidence was not within the knowledge of the applicant or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made. The learned Judge in the case before us has not stated that there was in his opinion strict proof of the allegation. The expression "strict proof" was considered by this Court in the case of Ahed Khondkar v. Mohendra Lal De (1) and the substance of the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins was that strict proof means proof according to the formalities of the law. But proof according to the formalities of the law does not imply merely an allegation in accordance with the formalities of the law that the facts contemplated by rule 1 exist. The Court must be convinced that the materials placed before it in accordance with the formalities of the law do prove the existence of the facts alleged. If any other view were taken, the result would follow that a party would be entitled to an order for review in his favour upon the mere allegation that the evidence which he seeks to produce was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed. In my opinion, it is the duty of the Court to come to the conclusion, before it grants the application, that the evidence in question is new and important and that it was not within the knowledge of the applicant or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made. If a Court without such adjudication grants an application for review, the order is, in my opinion, contrary to the provisions of rule 4 and cannot be supported. In the present case, the order made by Mr. Justice Greaves is open to that objection and must consequently be set aside.

The question next arises as to whether this Court should consider the materials on the record and come to a decision or whether the matter should be remitted to the learned Judge. There can be no doubt that it is competent to this Court to deal with the matter finally and it is in the best interest of the parties that we should so dispose of the matter. Now when the materials on the record are considered, it becomes plain that the application for review should never have been granted. As regards the point whether the evidence was important evidence within the meaning of rule 1, it is clear that the answer must be against the applicant. The word 'important' serves the purpose explained in the leading decisions on the subject mentioned in the judgment of this Court in the case of Nundo Lal Mullick v. Punchanon Mukherjee (2). In that case reference was made by the learned Chief Justice to the decisions in Young v. Kershaw (3) and Brown v. Dean (4). In the first of these cases Smith, L. J., observed that the new evidence must be such as would have been conclusive of the case if it had been adduced at the trial. Collins, L. J., similarly observed that the party asking for the new trial must show that there was no remissness on his part in adducing all possible evidence at the trial; and as to the class of new evidence the rule is that the new evidence must be such that if adduced it would be practically conclusive, that is, evidence of such a class as to render it probable almost beyond doubt that the verdict would be different. In the second case, Brown v. Dean (4), Lord Loreburn observed that the new evidence must at least be such as is presumably to be believed and if believed would be conclusive. I am not unmindful that in this latter case Lord Shaw sounded a modified note. He observed that it was possible to figure cases in which evidence might not be conclusive but might be so gravely material and so clearly relevant as to entitle the Court to say that that material and relevant fact should have been before the Jury in giving its decision. But, whether we adopt the language used by Collins, L J., or by Lord Shaw, it is clear that the applicant in the case before us must fail. The evidence which he seeks to produce now is not important evidence in any sense of the term. It is undoubtedly not conclusive evidence, as on the materials on the record it is plain that the person had made contradictory statements before the trial and that at the trial his Counsel declared that he could place no reliance on him by reason of such circumstance. It is impossible for us to hold that evidence of this description would be such evidence as would justify the grant of an application for review.

I desire to emphasise what was said in the case of Nundo Lal Mullick v. Punchanon Mukherjee (2) that applications for review on the ground of discovery of new and important matter or evidence should be considered with great caution. In the case before us there can be no doubt that the application has been granted very lightly. No doubt rule 4 of Order XLVII states that where the Court is of opinion that an application for review should be granted it shall grant the same. But the opinion of the Court must be opinion according to law, and the principles laid down in the case mentioned are rules which must be borne in mind before applications of this character are granted. I have no doubt at all that we should as a Court of Appeal set aside the order of the learned Judge in order to secure for the plaintiff the fruits of the lawful judgment which he obtained at the first trial.

FLETCHER, J.—I am of the same opinion and I have very little to add. The first question in this case is, does an appeal lie from the order made by Mr. Justice Greaves. It seems to me clear that it does. Order XLVII, rule 7, Code of Civil Procedure, gives a right of appeal in case a review is granted in contravention of the provisions of rule 4. Did the learned Judge in this case grant the order for review in contravention of the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 4? It seems to me quite clear that he contravened all the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 4 (2). The application ought to have been rejected in limine, as it did not contain the proper allegations provided for by the terms of the order; and, also I think that the learned Judge, even if the application contained the proper allegations, was bound, before he could proceed to make an order granting the review, to find that there allegations were strictly proved; that means "proved" within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act. "Proved" is defined in section 3 of the Act as follows: "A fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists." The learned Judge in this case has altogether failed to consider whether the allegations were proved, and the only remark that he has made is that he thinks that he will hear the evidence of this additional witness. It is quite clear that that does not satisfy the provisions contained in Order XLVII as to granting a review on the grounds set up in this case. In that veiw it is quite clear that an appeal lay from the judgment of the learned Judge. If an appeal lay, I agree with the remarks of the learned Chief Justice that no case has been established on which the Court ought to grant a review on the discovery of new and important matter or evidence mentioned in Order XLVII. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

(4) (1910) A. C. 373; 79 L. J. K. B. 69?; 102 L. T. 661; 54 S. J. 442.

Appeal allowed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 142-B OF 1919.

April 13, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Macnair, A. J. C.

CHHOGALAL MEGHRAJ—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KANHAYALAL TARACHAND—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Minor—Contract by guardian, when binding on minor's estate—Creditor, rights of—Subrogation.

Where a contract is entered into by a guardian on behalf of a minor in a case in which the minor's estate would have been liable for the obligation incurred by the guardian under the personal law to which the minor is subject, a decree might be passed against the estate of the minor. [p. 741, col. 1.]

Where a guardian borrows money for the necessities of a minor in such circumstances as to give him a right to be reimbursed from the minor's estate, his creditor may in a proper case be subrogated to the guardian's rights. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 146 of 1918, decided on the 27th of January 1919, arising out of Civil Suit No. 25 of 1918, decided by the Munsif, Chandur, on the 29th of June 1918.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover money advanced for the marriage of the defendant during his minority together with a small sum advanced for the purchase of seed for cultivation. At an early stage the plaintiff gave up his claim for a personal decree but pressed for a decree against the estate of the minor. The Judge of first instance held that Rs. 216-12-3 was borrowed for legal necessity, namely, the marriage of the minor. He held, however, (1) that the plaintiff had not sued for reimbursement in accordance with the provisions of section 68 of the Contract Act, (2) that that section applied only when the minor was supplied with necessaries for the purpose of his maintenance, (3) that the suit was based on a contract with the guardian, and the guardian could not bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The lower Appellate Court appears to have held that if it was necessary for the minor to marry, sums requisite for the marriage and expended on the marriage might be recovered under the provisions of section 68 of the Contract Act. The learned Judge, however, held that as the plaintiff had not taken his stand on section 68 of the Contract Act and had not proved that it was necessary for the defendant to marry during his minority or that the sums actually expended were not excessive, he could not be allowed to set up a new case. He agreed with the lower Court that a guardian could not bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it.

In second appeal it is urged that although a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it, it is still the case that a contract executed by a guardian does in certain cases assist the obligor in obtaining a decree against the estate of the minor. Thus, in the case of Jhitibai v. Tejmal (1), Stanyon, A. J. C., points out one exception:—

"We may take it as sound law that where a Hindu family maintains itself by trade, and a minor becomes by inheritance the sole owner of such business, if the trade is thereafter carried on by the guardian, the assets of such business will be liable for debts contracted by the guardian necessarily incidental to or flowing out of the carrying on of the trade along its normal course."

Again in the case of Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (2) though Wallis, C. J., was of opinion that in the case of a Hindu, money advanced for the expenses of a marriage which the minor has to perform may be recoverable under section 68 of the Contract Act from his estate, the other Judges held that a decree might be passed against the estate of a minor on a contract entered into on his behalf by a guardian, in cases in which the minor's estate would have been liable for the obligation incurred by the guardian under the personal law to which he was subject. In Subramania Ayyar v. Arumuga Chetty (3), a case cited apparently with approval in Tukaram Manaji Dhargar v. Ramchandra Hari Peshkar (4), it was held that though the suit was brought against the minor on a promissory note executed by the guardian, still in the circumstances the defendant was liable to the extent of his share in the ancestral estate.

It seems clear then that a suit based mainly but not solely on a simple contract executed by a guardian may succeed in certain cases. To hold otherwise would lead to extreme inconvenience, as a guardian might not be able to obtain a small advance even if such an advance was necessary for the welfare of the minor or the protection of his estate, unless the guardian executed a document purporting to bind the minor's estate.

I agree with the opinions of the learned Judges who decided Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (2). Wallis, C. J., remarks:—

"Where a guardian himself borrows money for the necessities of the minor in such circumstances as to give him a right to reimbursement from the minor's estate, his creditor may in a proper case be subrogated to his rights."

Seshagiri Ayyar, J., considers that a charge is created on the estate in a case in which the minor's estate would have been liable for the obligation incurred by the guardian under the personal law to which he is subject. The plaint in the case I am considering may not be artistically framed, but the pleadings show that the plaintiff really urged that money was borrowed by the guardian and expended by the guardian in such circumstances as to give the guardian a right of reimbursement. The finding of the lower Court is that certain sums were expended on the marriage of the minor and that this expenditure was necessary: the guardian could claim reimbursement for such expenditure.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the appeal be re-heard. The Court will consider any argument advanced to the effect that the marriage was not necessary or that the expenditure on the marriage was excessive: and will also consider whether the guardian expended any other sums from the advance and whether such expenditure was legally necessary. I remark that the defence in this suit does not appear to be frank. The defendant does not deny that he was married and has in this way received benefit. It was for him to urge that the marriage might, without prejudice to him, have been delayed till he attained majority or that the marriage was celebrated in an extravagant manner. At the time of the alleged advance he was also 16 years old, and his assertion of complete ignorance regarding the advances appears improbable. If the lower Appellate Court then decides that the pleadings are imperfect, the plaintiff's suit should not be dismissed on that ground, but steps should be taken to obtain full pleadings. Costs up to date will be costs in the suit.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 7th March 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Ambala, dated the 20th November 1915, dismissing the plaintiff's claim with costs.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Devi Dial, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present second appeal arises the plaintiffs-respondents claimed possession of certain land of which their maternal uncle's son Sardha was the last male owner. Upon Sardha's death the land was held by his mother Musammat Atri, (see pedigree table on page 7 of the paper-book) and on her death in May 1902 the village proprietors, represented by defendants-respondents, took possession thereof. The parties are Brahmans of Tahsil Kharar, District Ambala and the lower Appellate Court held that they were governed by Hindu Law, under which the plaintiffs as Bandhus of the last male owner were heirs in preference to the village proprietors. The trial Court held that the plaintiffs had not proved any special custom in their favour and that they were not heirs according to Hindu Law and accordingly dismissed their suit. The questions of limitation and res judicata were also raised by the defendants and decided adversely against them by both the lower Courts. The point of res judicata is not now raised but that of limitation is, and we shall deal with it later.

The first point urged by Lala Durga Das on behalf of the appellants is that there should be a remand for further enquiry as to whether the parties are governed by the Hindu Law or by custom. He urges that though Brahmans, they are agriculturists living in a village, and the initial presumption is that they follow the general custom applicable to agriculturists. No certificate for second appeal has been granted by the lower Appellate Court, and in the absence of such a certificate we do not think it is open to the appellants to urge that they are governed by custom. They are high caste Hindus living in Ambala, and we do not think there is any initial presumption that they are governed by agricultural custom. No special custom has been proved, and the lower Appellate Court was, therefore, correct in applying the Hindu Law. What Lala Durga Das wants us to do is to remand the case in order that his clients may have further opportunity of proving the existence of a custom governing the parties. In the absence of a certificate we hold that the question of custom cannot now be raised.

The next point raised by Lala Durga Das is that the plaintiffs, who are the father's sister's sons of the last male owner, are not heirs according to Hindu Law. There is, however, ample authority for holding that in places where the Mitakshara system of Hindu Law prevails the father's sister's sons are heirs. It is only necessary to refer in this connection to Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, Chapter XVI, where at page 704 is given a table which shows the Bandhus ex parte paterna. Amongst these is the father's sister's son, who is specially mentioned both in the Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara. See also Hindu Law by Trevelyan, 2nd Edition, page 402, where the father's father's daughter's son, i.e., father's sister's son, is shown as an heir. In the case reported as Tahaldai Kumri v. Gaya Prasad Sahu (1) it was held that in the Bengal Presidency under the interpretation of the Mitakshara Law a step-mother is not entitled to succeed to the estate of her step-son in preference to the father's sister's son. We accordingly agree with the lower Appellate Court that plaintiffs are heirs and, therefore, entitled to the land in preference to the defendants, proprietors in the village. It is not contended before us that the defendants are entitled to keep the land in accordance with the doctrine of reversion because, as is alleged, the land was gifted to Mina, the ancestor of Sardha, the last male owner, by the village proprietors.

There remains the question of limitation which only affects Rikhi Ram plaintiff, Arja Nand, his brother, being still a minor. After the death of Sardha the land was held by Musammat Atri, his mother, who had the usual woman's life estate, and the plaintiffs had 12 years from the date of her death within which to bring the present suit. The suit was instituted on the 5th May 1914 and Musammat Atri is said to have died in the month of May 1902. There is nothing to show on what date in May 1902 she died. If she died at any time after the 4th of May, the suit is obviously within time. The only evidence that she died in May 1902 is a report of the Patwari to that effect in the mutation proceedings dated the 11th September 1902. Both parties rely upon this; the trial Court held that there was no presumption that she died before the 5th May 1902, and after carefully considering the point we are in agreement with this view. In the Law of Evidence by Ameer Ali and Woodroffe, 5th Edition, at page 682, in the commentary on section 108, the learned authors say: "These sections and the following section deal with certain instances of the presumption which exists in favour of continuance of immutability. It is on the principle of this presumption that a person shown to have been once living is, in the absence of proof that he has not been heard of within the last 7 years, presumed to be still alive. * * * * * * *

The presumption is in favour of the continuance of life and the onus of proving the death lies on the party who asserts it." In accordance with this principle we are of opinion that the onus of proving that Musammat Atri died before the 5th of May 1902 lies upon the defendants who assert it. There is no proof of the exact date of death and we, therefore, hold that the suit is within time.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mortgage, usufructuary—Mortgagee to pay rent—Failure to pay—Redemption—Mortgagor, whether entitled to deduction of rent agreed to be paid.

A usufructuary mortgage provided that the mortgagee should pay the annual rent to the landlord, but he failed to do so and the debt became time-barred The mortgagor in suing for redemption claimed to be entitled to deduct from the principal mortgage money the sum which under the mortgage should have been paid by the mortgagee:

Held, that the mortgagor was not entitled to the deduction he claimed and that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of the non-payment. [p. 744, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saran.

Messrs. Parmeswar Dayal and Jadubans Sahai, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondent for recovery of possession of certain lands or in the alternative for redemption. It appears that defendants Nos. 1 and 6, who are the tenants, gave the lands in dispute in usufructuary mortgage to defendant No. 7 with a condition that defendant No. 7 should pay Rs. 6·8 as rent to the landlord. The interest of defendant No. 7 is now vested in defendant No. 8. The plaintiffs themselves are the landlords and purchased portions of the lands which were mortgaged to defendant No. 7. His suit for possession is on the ground that the usufructuary mortgage was a collusive document not binding on him and in the alternative for redemption. The question whether the document was a collusive one or not has not been considered in the Court below, possibly for the reason that the Court of first instance had found that the document was a genuine one. Therefore, we cannot be embarrassed by that question at all in this appeal.

Now the only question is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to redemption. Clearly they are entitled to redemption on payment to the mortgagee of what is now due by the mortgagors. The question, however, arises whether the plaintiffs are entitled to deduct Rs. 6-8-0 per year which under the terms of the document the defendant No. 7 should have paid to the plaintiffs. The case of defendant No. 8 was that the sum was all along paid to the landlord. The landlord, however, denied that. The Court below has found that it has not been paid and has directed that this sum should be deducted in the accounts which have to be taken of the sum due by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. It seems to me that the case of Fakir Muhammad Khan v. Ali Sher Khan (1) is directly in point. In that case precisely the same question was raised and it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of such non-payment of rent to the Zemindar and that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of the principal sum after deducting the rent not so paid. It rests on the principle that that is a separate matter altogether in respect of which the landlord had a right of action against the mortgagee in possession or if the landlord had brought rent suits against the original tenants, the tenants could have recovered the sums from the mortgagee in possession, but there cannot be an equitable set-off in a suit of this nature. I would accordingly set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and allow the appeal and direct that the plaintiffs will be entitled to redeem the properties on payment of the sum of Rs. 439 to defendant No. 8. The plaintiffs will have three months to redeem.

Appeal allowed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 43, 46—Application by creditor asking action should be taken against insolvent under s. 43, dismissal of—Appeal, whether lies—Revision, whether competent.

No appeal lies against an order of a District Judge refusing to take action against an insolvent under section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, nor is such an order open to revision [p. 745, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 7th January 1919.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a creditor from an order of the District Judge of Gurdaspur dismissing an application for action to be taken against an insolvent under section 43 of Act III of 1907. Mr. Fakir Chand for the respondent takes the preliminary objection that a creditor has no right of appeal under section 46, not being an aggrieved person, and he relies on Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1) and Ladu Ram v. Mahabir Prasad (2) which support his contention

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the appellant contests the correctness of those decisions

(1) 27 Ind Cas 241; 40 M. 630.
(2) 37 Ind. Cas. 996; 39 A. 171; 15 A. L. J. 31.

and he has referred to the following passage on page 35 of Baldwin's Law of Bankruptcy and Bills of Sale, where a definition is given of the expression "person aggrieved" contained in section 108 of the English Act. The expression "person aggrieved" means a person who has suffered a legal grievance by a decision which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something ..... "So a person who makes an application to a Court for a decision or any person who is brought before a Court to submit to a decision is, if the decision is against him, a person aggrieved by that decision."

It is contended on the strength of this definition that as the appellant's application was dismissed he is a person aggrieved and can appeal. Mr Mehr Chand has also cited Burden, In re; Wood, Ex parte, (3) in which a creditor appealed in circumstances similar to the present, and his appeal was heard on the merits. The question, however, whether he had a right of appeal was not considered in that case.

With regard to the definition given in Baldwin's Law of Bankruptcy and Bills of Sale, it appears to me that the second part of the passage quoted above must be read in connection with the first part, and that the appellant could be regarded as a person aggrieved by the dismissal of his application only if the application was one which the Insolvency Act entitled him to make. Now the Act does not provide for any application being made at all, either by a creditor or by anyone else, for action to be taken against the debtor under section 43; sub section (2) of that section merely says that if a debtor does certain acts, the Court may pass a certain sentence on him. Although it is usually on the application of a creditor that a Court takes action under section 43, the Court is in no way bound to entertain such an application, which is not one recognized by the Act, and consequently if the Court declines to entertain it, the creditor cannot be said to be a "person aggrieved." For this reason, rather than for the reason given in Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1) the decision in which appears to me to be based on a wrong analogy, I hold that the creditor has no right of appeal.

Further, in my opinion, the order appealed against is not really an order under section 43 (2) of Act III of 1907 at all, and for that reason also is not appealable. The only order contemplated in section 43 (2) is an order sentencing the debtor.

The section contains no provision whatever for the passing of an order dismissing an application against the debtor (the making of such an application being itself not provided for) or even of an order exonerating the debtor in respect of the offences mentioned, and any such order, however proper it may be, is not an order passed "under" section 43 or any other section of the Act. This conclusion may seem anomalous, but I think it is unavoidable.

Mr. Mehr Chand asks that if the appeal does not lie it may be treated as an application for revision, but it is clear that an application for revision also is not maintainable, for, as the District Judge was not bound to entertain the application made to him by the creditor, he committed no illegality or irregularity in dismissing it.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Ancestral property, nature of—Property inherited from collaterals, whether ancestral—Alienation—Father, power of, to alienate family property—Antecedent debt, meaning of.

Under the Hindu Law property acquired by inheritance from a collateral relation is not ancestral property. [p. 747, col. 1.]

PUDAI RAM v. BAIJNATH LAL.

Joint family property may be sold or charged by the father in order to discharge an antecedent debt, that is to say, a debt incurred not only prior to the date of the sale or charge but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be afforded by it. Where joint family property is thus sold or mortgaged, no question arises as to whether the antecedent debt was incurred for legal necessity or for other purposes binding upon the sons or as to whether the transaction entered into by the father is enforceable against the sons during his lifetime. [p. 747, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 24th February 1919, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 25th February 1918.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamatullah, for Respondents Nos. 12 and 13.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for Respondents Nos. 15 to 17.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant Pudai Ram to recover a sum of Rs. 2,023 alleged to be due on a mortgage executed by the first defendant Baijnath Lal on the 26th May 1910. The principal money secured by the mortgage was a sum of Rs. 450. This principal money, according to the recitals in the bond, was applied in the discharge of four bonds previously executed by Baijnath Lal; three of them were unregistered and one registered. The balance of Rs. 10-8-0 is alleged to have been the costs incurred in executing and registering the deed. The defendants Nos. 2 to 18 were impleaded as subsequent transferees from the mortgagor and the defendants Nos. 19 to 21 are the sons of the mortgagor. The property mortgaged is said to consist of two Zamindari shares, one in Allahdadpur and the other in Sudapur.

The principal contesting defendants were the sons of the mortgagor. They pleaded that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage, that the property in suit was ancestral property, that the property in Sudapur was in any case only an interest created by a lease for cultivation and was not, therefore, capable of transfer and lastly that the rate of interest was unconscionable and penal.

On the question as to whether the property was ancestral or not, the first Court did not come to any definite finding as regards the item of property situated in Sudapur. All that the Subordinate Judge said regarding this property was that it was only a cultivatory holding and, therefore, incapable of transfer. As regards the item in Allahdadpur he held that the property was ancestral. Regarding the question of legal necessity he was of opinion that the four bonds referred to in the mortgage deed had been executed by Baijnath Lal. As regards two of them, however, he found that Baijnath Lal was not the only executant. In one case there was joined with him as co executant a man named Dukhobhor, in the other the co-executant was Nepal Singh. The Subordinate Judge found that there was nothing to show how much each co-executant borrowed. The plaintiff's story was that Dukhobhor and Nepal Singh were merely sureties for Baijnath Lal, but the Subordinate Judge has held that this fact was not proved. In this view he exempted the sons from liability in respect of these two bonds, holding further that there was no evidence of legal necessity. With regard to the other two bonds he found that although they represented antecedent debts, still there was no proof that the sums had been borrowed for purposes of legal necessity. With regard to the item of Rs. 10 8-0 he pointed out that this sum was declared by the deed to be payable before the Sub Registrar. No mention of payment having been made before the Sub Registrar was to be found in the registration endorsement, although there was an admission in the endorsement that this money had been received. In any case the Subordinate Judge held that this did not constitute an antecedent debt. It appears that the Subordinate Judge was pressed with the argument that if the debts were proved to be antecedent debts, there was no need to prove legal necessity. He disposed of this argument by saying that the Privy Council had rejected this view in a case recently decided, namely, the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). The result was that he refused to give any decree on the mortgage. He gave a simple money decree against the first defendant Baijnath Lal. He overruled the defence regarding the high rate of interest and decreed interest at the contract rate.

The case then came in appeal before the learned District Judge. The first question which was argued before him was whether or not the property in Sudapur was ancestral. It seems that this property had been acquired under a lease (Exhibit S1) granted in favour of Ram Adhin, the uncle of Baijnath Lal. Accordingly to the view of the learned Judge this property, whether acquired by Ram Adhin for himself alone or whether acquired by him as a member and for the benefit of the joint family, was at the date of the mortgage by Baijnath Lal ancestral property in his hands. This is in my opinion an erroneous view. If it is found that the property descended to Baijnath Lal from his uncle Ram Adhin by inheritance, then it certainly is not ancestral property in the hands of Baijnath Lal. No property acquired by inheritance from a collateral relation can be ancestral property under the Hindu Law. As regards Allahdadpur he found that this property was ancestral, and in view of the evidence I think there can be no doubt that this finding is correct.

The next question argued before the learned Judge was whether the mortgage in suit was binding upon the sons of Baijnath Lal. The only ground upon which it was argued before the Judge that the mortgage was binding was that it had been executed to pay off antecedent debts contracted by Baijnath Lal. The Judge goes on to say that it had not been proved that any of these antecedent debts had been contracted for legal necessity or for any other purpose binding on the sons of the first respondent. Consequently as Baijnath Lal was still alive, his sons were not bound by the mortgage effected by him. The learned Judge says that he relies for this view upon the Privy Council ruling to which I have just referred.

In my opinion both the Subordinate Judge and the learned District Judge have misapplied the law laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It is not correct to say that that judgment lays down that where the case for the plaintiff is founded upon a transaction entered into for the purpose of discharging antecedent debts, it must be shown that the antecedent debts were contracted for legal necessity or for other purposes binding upon the sons. This matter is clearly dealt with at page 134 of the report of 44 I A. [Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1)]. After referring to the statement of the law by Lord Hobhouse in Musammat Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2) their Lordships say as follows:—

"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate."

It is clear from this statement of the law that their Lordships recognise an established exception to the rule that family property cannot be dealt with by one co-parcener without the consent of the other co-parcener. It clearly shows that joint family property may be sold or charged by the father in order to discharge an antecedent debt, that is to say, a debt incurred not only prior to the date of the sale or charge but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be afforded by it. In the present case the plaintiff shows that the mortgage in suit was executed for the purpose of discharging debts incurred under four bonds executed a long time prior to the date of the mortgage. There can be no question, therefore, that they are antecedent debts in the sense that they were in point of time anterior to the date of the mortgage; and further, as the debts were incurred by the execution of the bonds, it is equally clear that they were not incurred on the security of any joint family property. There can be no question, therefore, of the plaintiff's right to enforce this mortgage against the sons in the lifetime of their father to the extent to which it is shown that these bonds represent liabilities actually incurred by the father. The case must be returned to the District Judge for findings on the following issues:—

(1) Is the Sadapur property ancestral property or not ?

(2) Further, is this property transferable or not ?

(3) To what extent do the bonds referred to in the deed of mortgage represent liabilities incurred by the first defendant Baijnath Lal himself ?

Findings on these issues will be returned to this Court within six weeks from the date of the receipt of this order of remand, and ten days to run from the date of the lower Court's finding will be allowed to the parties to file objections.

Landlord and tenant – Additional rent for additional area, suit for—Standard of measurement—Presumption.

Where in a suit for additional rent for additional area the standard of measurement set up on behalf of the plaintiff is inconsistent with the kabuliyat upon which the suit is based, it cannot be presumed that the present standard of measurement was the standard in use at the time when the lands comprised within the tenancy were originally measured.

Appeal against the decision of the Special Judge, Faridpur, dated the 1st June 1915, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Baliakandi, dated the 10th November 1914.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Monindra Nath Mitter for Babu Baikant Nath Mitter, for the Appellants.

Babus Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Bepin Beĥari Mallick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in these cases is whether the landlord is entitled to additional rent for additional area.

The plaintiff proved that there was measurement in 1276 and adduced evidence to show what the standard of measurement was in that year. The learned Special Judge, however, has disbelieved that evidence.

It is contended before us that the present standard of measurement ought to have been presumed to be the standard in use in 1276, and reliance is placed upon the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Raja Ramranjan Chakarbutty (1).

It is unnecessary to consider the effect of the passage in the judgment of Mookerjee, J., at page 132 in that case, because in the present case the learned Special Judge finds that the standard of measurement set up on behalf of the plaintiff would be inconsistent with the kabuliyat upon which the suit is based; and he points out several circumstances showing that the standard of measurement set up could not be correct.

We are, therefore, unable to hold that the learned Special Judge has committed an error of law in holding that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the defendants were holding any land in excess of the area for which they were paying rent.

It may be mentioned that no case of encroachment beyond the boundaries mentioned in the lease was made in the plaint nor found by the Court below.

In the circumstances, the appeals must fail and are dismissed with costs.

Kotwar—Village service tenant—Kotwar losing office, but continuing in possession of portion of village service holding—Settlement, new, effect of, on arrangement—C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 56 (2), applicability of.

J. and N. were Kotwars in a village and each held one of two fields which constituted the village service holding. It was subsequently decided that one Kotwar would suffice, and the question was which of the two should be dismissed; this was decided by the parties drawing lots, it being understood that the loser would continue for his lifetime in possession of the field he was cultivating. J. lost and was thus deprived of the office of Kotwar, but he continued in possession of the field he was cultivating, and the wajib-ul-arz was corrected accordingly. In the new settlement some years later the village service holding was recorded in the sole name of N.'s son D., who consequently ejected J. J. brought the present suit for re-instatement in possession and correction of the wajib-ul-arz. The suit was resisted on the ground that the arrangement by which J. was displaced as Kotwar but was allowed to continue in possession did not bind the successors-in-office of N. and that under section 56 (2) of the C. P. Tenancy Act, J.'s sub-lease exceeding one year at a time was void:

Held, that section 56 (2) of the C. P. Tenancy Act did not apply; that as the sub-tenancy created in favour of J. was part of the arrangement whereby N. became the village service tenant, it would be inequitable to permit the ejectment of J. merely because a new settlement had been made or because N. had ceased to be Kotwar. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 95 of 1917, decided on the 14th September 1917.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Bhagwant and V. V. Chitale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was brought by the present respondent Jhiblia on the 25th February 1916 to obtain possession of Khasra numbers 104/1 and 104/2 in Mauza Jakhegaon. The original defendants were one Namia and his four sons, of whom the eldest is Dowlatia. While the suit was pending in the Court of first instance, Dowlatia's son Bodrie, a minor, was added as co-defendant. Namia died after the case was decided by the lower Appellate Court and his five co-defendans are now the sole respondents.

When Mauza Jakhegaon came to be settled in 1893-94, the plaintiff Jhiblia and the late Namia were the Kotwars, each having succeeded his father in this office. The village service holding enjoyed by the Kotwars consisted of survey numbers 104 and 105 of which Jhiblia occupied number 104 and Namia number 105. The Settlement Officer decided that one Kotwar sufficed for the village and Jhiblia was dismissed the question which of the two Kotwars should be retained having been decided by lot in Namia's favour. It was, however, arranged that Jhiblia should retain possession of number 104 paying the assessed rental of Rs 6 to Namia. The jamabandi of the settlement record (Exhibit P-3) shows Jhiblia as Namia's sub-tenant, Namia himself being recorded as the village service tenant.

The wajib-ul-arz (Exhibit P 4) contains an entry on the subject which has been translated thus:—

"As Jhiblia is a Kotwar of long standing, he should himself cultivate Kotwardung which is at present under his cultivation and should pay Rs. 6 rent of Kotwardung to Namia, son of Lahu."

It also appears from Exhibit P-1 that the total rent assessed upon numbers 104 and 105 was Rs. 9 and that Namia's cash remuneration payable by the malguzars was to be reduced by the whole of this amount.

The new settlement came into force on the 1st July 1913. The defendant Dowlatia was appointed the sole Kotwar and the entire village-service holding, consisting of new numbers 104/1, 104/2 and 105, was recorded in his sole name. Numbers 104/1 and 104/2 correspond to the old number 104 and the assessed rental thereon is now Rs 8. The new wajib-ul arz contains on clause like that above reproduced from the wajib-ul-arz of 1893-94.

The allegation in the plaint is that Namia and his son, after accepting rent for the agricultural years 1913-14 and 1914-15, ejected the plaintiff in July 1914. The plaintiff claimed, in addition to re-instatement in possession, correction of the new wajib ul arz and the connected jamabandi by inclusion of a clause in the former terms, the rent payable being Rs. 8. In the course of these trials the defendant Dowlatia resigned his post and obtained the appointment of his son Bodria as Kotwar with the defendant Bitkia as his guardian.

The defence was that the plaintiff remained in possession of old number 104 by virtue of a private arrangement between himself and Namia, according to which Namia was to be assisted in the Kotwar's duties, and that this arrangement did not bind any of Namia's successors-in-office. It was also contended that under section 56 (2) of the Tenancy Act, 1898, which is practically identical in terms with section 50 B (2) of the Act of 1883, the plaintiff's sub lease, if for a period exceeding one year at a time, was void. Other pleas also were put forward, but with them we are not now concerned. The following issues among others were framed:—

"1. Whether the plaintiff continued to remain in possession of the field under the orders of the Settlement Office at the settlement of 1893 94, or whether the plaintiff was in possession of the field under the private arrangement between defendant No. 1 and plaintiff as alleged by the defendants?

2. What is the effect of the settlement entry on the rights of parties?

6. To what relief are the parties entitled?"

The trial Judge held that a right of sub-tenancy was created in favour of the plaintiff by the settlement of 1893-94 and that the plaintiff was entitled to remain in possession of number 104 for his lifetime, provided he paid the assessed rent. The plaintiff accordingly obtained a decree directing insertion in the wajib-ul arz of a clause similar in effect to that above quoted from the wajib ul arz of 1893 94 and ordering the defendants to re-instate him in possession of new numbers 104/1 and 104/2.

In appeal the District Judge took a different view. He considered that the Settlement Officer could not do more than obtain from Namia an undertaking that he would sub-let number 104 annually to Jhiblia and that such a promise, though doubtless given, could not bind Namia, who was entitled under section 56 (2) of the present Tenancy Act to treat the plaintiff as at best a yearly sub tenant. The trial Judge's decree was, therefore, reversed and the plaintiff's claim was dismissed, each side being ordered to bear its own costs.

The plaintiff has now preferred this second appeal.

In this Court it is again contended on behalf of the plaintiff that there was no private arrangement between him and Namia and that the settlement of 1893-94 constituted a binding decision that the plaintiff should remain in possession of old number 104 during his lifetime. For the respondents it is urged that unless the plaintiff held by virtue of an agreement with Namia he could have no rights at all, inasmuch as section 72 of the Land Revenue Act, 1881, did not empower the Settlement Officer to create any sub tenancy but merely to ascertain and record the status of all tenants occupying the lands respectively held by them, the conditions on which they respectively held such lands, and the rents (if any) payable by them respectively.

There is evidence which the District Judge evidently believed that the clause in the wajib-ul-arz of 1893 94 was inserted with Namia's concurrence. There is also no reason to suppose that the Settlement Officer arrogated to himself a power of creating a sub-tenancy which he did not possess. The Tenancy Act of 1883 did not contain any provision corresponding to the proviso in section 56 (1) of the present Act, and I think it must be taken that the Settlement Officer did the best he could for the plaintiff by arranging for him to be Namia's sub tenant. The question, however, remains whether this arrangement between the plaintiff and Namia should not be treated as binding upon the Kotwar for the time being for the term of the plaintiff's natural life. This point is raised in the third ground of appeal in connection, with which it is conceded for the plaintiff-appellant that the arrangement come to at the settlement of 1893 94 cannot enure after the plaintiff's death.

In my opinion the question just mentioned should be answered in the affirmative.

RAGHUNATH SINGH v. HAR DAYAL SINGH.

I do not think that sub-section (2) of section 50-B in the Tenancy Act, 1883, should be regarded as governing the case. The arrangement by which the plaintiff-appellant became a sub-tenant should be taken as merely part of one which settled the question which of the two Kotwars should remain as the single Kotwar required. Each of the two men agreed to settle by drawing lots which should be the Kotwar, but this was surely on the understanding that the loser would, as part of the arrangement, continue for his lifetime in possession of the land which he was actually cultivating. In the words of the learned District Judge: "Before the ballot both candidates would readily agree that whichever was chosen would not at once disturb the other: they would even insist on the agreement being made as permanent as possible and would be likely to make a special request that mention should be made of it in the wajib ul-arz." Had it been a condition of this solution of the problem that the plaintiff should assist Namia in discharging the duties of Kotwar, the fact would have been mentioned in the wajib ul-arz and in the jamabandi. The position then was, not that Namia having been recognised as Kotwar and village-service tenant made a transfer of his interest in part of the holding, but the sub tenancy was in effect created as part of the arrangement by which Namia became the village service tenant. In this view it would be inequitable to allow the plaintiff to be ejected merely because a new settlement has been made or because Namia has ceased to be Kotwar.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Judge, with the modification that the entry to be inserted in the new wajib-ul-arz will make it clear that the sub-tenancy enjoyed by the plaintiff until his ejectment will enure for his lifetime only. The defendants will pay the plaintiff's costs in all three Courts.

Profits, suit for—Evidence of collections, absence of—Presumption—Basis of calculation.

Where in a suit for profits of land the recorded collections are suspiciously low, and the defendant neither produces nor gives any evidence to show what was collected, the Court would be justified in presuming that the full amount of the rents had been collected and in assessing the profits on the basis of the gross rental. [p. 751, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 4th January 1919, confirming that of the Honorary Assistant Collector, 1st Class, Sandila, dated the 10th August 1918.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit for profits and the question for decision is whether the lower Courts were right in assessing the profits on the basis of gross rental. The learned District Judge has done this on the ground that the recorded collections are suspiciously low, being only 60 per cent. of the rental, and that the defendant Lambardar has neither produced any accounts nor given any evidence to show what he collected.

This finding is attacked on the ground that it was admitted by the plaintiff that he had collected rent from a few tenants. This would ordinarily be strong argument against the learned District Judge's decision, but the facts in this case are peculiar. The Assistant Collector appointed a Commissioner to verify the collections on the spot. The plaintiff produced the tenants from whom he had collected, but the defendant did not do likewise and the Commissioner found reason to believe that a number of tenants were shown as in arrear who had really paid. The Assistant Collector gave the defendant an opportunity of producing witnesses or accounts before him, but he failed to do so.

Under the circumstances it seems to me that the Assistant Collector was fully justified in presuming that the full amount of the rent had been collected and I decline to disturb the decision of the Court below.

Cross objections have been filed claiming future interest and Pleader's fee in the first Court which was disallowed. On the whole I see no reason to interfere with the discretion of the lower Courts in these respects. I dismiss the appeal with costs and also dismiss the cross-objections but in this case without costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Oral evidence to vary or contradict terms of document, admissibility of.

Evidence of acts and conduct of parties is not admissible in order to contradict or vary the written terms of an agreement. [p. 753, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Mr. A. B. Mukerji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Jadubans Sahay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondent Chakowri Singh for recovery of possession of 1½ bighas of land. The plaintiff relies upon a Kobala executed in his favour in December 1915 by the defendants first party, who admittedly at one time had title to the land in dispute and were competent to deal with it. It appears that prior to this Kobala the defendants second party had executed a mortgage deed in favour of defendants first party and the Kobala in favour of the plaintiff was expressly subject to the mortgage in favour of the defendants first party. The plaintiff deposited the mortgage money under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and then instituted the present suit for recovery of possession of the land in dispute.

The suit was contested by defendants 1st party on the ground that though the document in their favour on the face of it was a mortgage document, still in reality it was a sale and that consequently the plaintiff could not oust them from possession of the land in dispute. It is conceded that the document purports to be an usufructuary mortgage. The question whether evidence of acts and conduct of the parties is admissible to contradict the terms of a document has been considered in many cases and has now been finally decided by the Judicial Committee in the case of Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (1). In the case of Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (2) the Judicial Committee had held that oral evidence for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties to the deeds was not admissible under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. This case was considered in many subsequent, cases especially in a case reported as Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (3) on which the Court of first instance strongly relied. The learned Judges in that case pointed out that though section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act excluded evidence of any oral agreement or statement, it did not exclude evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties not being in the nature of an oral agreement. The authority of that case was very much shaken by a subsequent decision where the learned Judges held that evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties could only be proof either of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the written agreement or of a subsequent oral agreement having the same effect. In the first case clearly it would be inadmissible under section 92. In the second case such a subsequent oral agreement must obviously be pleaded. I am only referring to the subsequent case for the purpose of showing that the authority of the only decision of the Calcutta High Court subsequent to Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (2), namely, the decision reported as Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (3), has been much shaken. It is, however, unnecessary to consider all these cases, because the Judicial Committee in the latest case reported as Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (1) has finally decided that evidence of acts and conducts of parties is not admissible in evidence in order to contradict or vary the written terms of an agreement. In my view, therefore, the Court below has taken a correct view of the law on the subject.

But it was argued with very great ingenuity by Mr. Abani Bhushan Mukherji on behalf of the appellant that though he could not rely upon the document executed in his favour by the defendants second party, still he was entitled to rely upon the facts showing that a new tenancy was created in his favour from the year 1309. He relies upon the eighth paragraph of his written statement, in which he states that "in the beginning of 1309 Fasli the name of defendant No. 1 was entered in the office of the Malik with respect to the disputed land and on the consent of Dhanoo Gope the jama of the said land was separated and a separate receipt was since then granted to these defendents." I do not think that the defendant is really pleading a new contract of tenancy in the eighth paragraph of the written statement. He is merely relying upon the acts and conduct of the parties showing that the document executed in his favour by defendant second party, though it purported to be a mortgage deed, was in reality a conveyance. But even if Abani Babu's construction of the written statement is right, namely, that he was pleading a new tenancy, I do not think that there is any finding of the Court below which supports him. The Court of first instance considered this point and having considered the point, it came deliberately to the conclusion that the rent receipts were not sufficient to establish that the defendants first party were recognised by the Maliks and the only finding of the Court of first instance was to the effect that the defendants first party used to pay rent separately for the disputed land on their own account, whether or not they were formally recognized as required by law. This finding was accepted by the lower Appellate Court and is, therefore, binding on me. Therefore, I must accept that the defendants first party paid rent to the Maliks and got rent receipts. But this is equally consistent with the defendants first party having paid rent as usufructuary mortgagee in actual possession of the land in dispute. In my view this does not amount to a finding that there was a new tenancy created in favour of the defendants first party.

I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court has taken an entirely correct view of the matter and I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 21st August 1918.

Babu Kishori Lal Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Krishna Kamal Maitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case obtained a decree for rent for Rs. 5,292 annas 10, 5 gandas together with Rs. 551 annas 13 as costs. Under the same decree the defendant also was to get from the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 345, 1 anna on account of costs. There was an appeal against that decree by the plaintiff on the question whether the lower Court was right in holding that the plaintiff must proceed against certain property in execution of the rent decree and his appeal succeeded.

In the decree of this Court it was stated that "the decree of the lower Court be varied in the manner following, namely, that the decree, in so far as it directs that the plaintiff shall recover the decretal amount with costs and interest by auction sale either of miras ijara or the property given in security, be and the same is hereby set aside and in lieu thereof it is ordered and decreed that the execution of the decree for the realisation of the decretal amount do proceed against the properties in Schedules A and B of Schudule I, if still unsold, and then against the other properties of the defendants: And it is further ordered and decreed that save and except the variation as aforesaid, the decree of the lower Court be and the same is hereby affirmed." The decree then goes on to state that the plaintiff would be entitled to certain costs of this Court as also the costs of the lower Court from the defendant. Nothing was said as to the costs payable by the plaintiff to the defendant.

The plaintiff decree holder applied for execution of the decree and realised the entire amount of the decree without setting off the amount of costs which the defendant was to get from him under the decree under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code. The defendant then made this application for execution of the decree in respect of Rs. 345, 1 anna, the amount of costs awarded to him against the plaintiff. The plaintiff raised objections to the execution of the decree which were disallowed by the Court below.

The plaintiff-appellant before us has raised two contentions. The first is that under the decree of the High Court, the defendant was not entitled to any costs at all, and secondly, that the defendant was not entitled to execute the decree, his only remedy having been to set off the amount due to him under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 19.

The first contention relates to the construction of the decree. It is true that in the decree of this Court, there is nothing said as to the costs which the defendant was to get from the plaintiff under the decree of the lower Court, although it mentions the costs which the plaintiff is to get from the defendant. But in the earlier portion of the decree, it is expressly stated that "save and except the variation as aforesaid, the decree of the lower Court be and the same is hereby affirmed." That shows that the decree of the Court of first instance was affirmed except as to the matter with respect to which this Court varied the decree, and the mere fact that the costs payable to the plaintiff by the defendant were mentioned in the latter part of the decree (as in the printed form) does not necessarily show that the decree of the lower Court in so far as it awarded costs to the defendant was set aside. We are accordingly of opinion that the lower Court was right in holding that the defendant was entitled to get costs from the plaintiff.

The next question is whether the defendant is entitled to execute the decree. Now, Order XXI, rule 19, of the Code lays down that where application is made to a Court for the execution of a decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other, then (a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction for both shall be entered upon the decree, and (b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree. Under this rule, therefore, the only party entitled to execute the decree is the party entitled to the larger sum, but the party entitled to the larger sum is, under that rule, to take out execution for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum and satisfaction for the smaller sum has to be entered upon the decree. This was not done. The plaintiff, therefore, in taking out execution for the entire amount of the decree without deducting the sum due to the defendant, had acted in contravention of the provisions of that rule.

Had the attention of the Court been drawn to the fact that the defendant was entitled to a certain sum under the decree, there is no doubt that the amount would have been deducted and the plaintiff would not have been allowed to take out execution for the entire amount and satisfaction of the amount due to the defendant would have been entered upon the decree. In these circumstances, we think that the plaintiff ought to refund the amount which he had improperly taken under the decree and although, strictly speaking, the defendant is not entitled to proceed in the ordinary way for execution of his decree, we think that having regard to the circumstances of the case, the defendant should be given relief under the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, upon the application made by the defendant.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed, but in the circumstances we direct that each party do bear his own costs in both Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

Where the partition of a village is applied for and notices of the application are served on the parties under section 110 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, and they have ample opportunity of raising a claim to the land under section 111 of the Act, but they fail to do so, and no reference is made to the Civil Court for the purpose of having the question of title determined, nor does the partition Court decide any such question, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaration of ownership of a particular plot of land in the village. [p. 756, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 19th September 1917, upholding the order of the Additional Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 25th June 1917.

Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the lower Appellate Court directing a certain plaint to be returned to the plaintiff for presentation in the proper Court. The question, which is to be decided here, is whether or not the view taken by the Court below regarding the question of jurisdiction was a correct one.

The dispute relates to a certain plot of land situate in a village called Khargipur, namely, Plot No. $\frac{87 \text{ old}}{365 \text{ new}}$. The plaintiff was Musammat Ratipali and she claimed as against the seven defendants, who were impleaded, a declaration that she was the owner of this particular plot. The defence on the merits was that Ratipali had no title.

The plea of want of jurisdiction in the Civil Court to entertain the suit was raised in the Court of first instance. The Munsif held that the Court had no jurisdiction. He also proceeded to deal with the case on the merits and dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to make out any title to the property in question. In appeal the Subordinate Judge has upheld the view of the Court of first instance that the suit was not entertainable. It appears from the perusal of a partition record which I have had called for that on the 14th or 15th of August 1913 an application for partition of this village was made by a number of co-sharers. It is proved that a notice was issued under section 110 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. It is proved that a notice was also sent to Musammat Ratipali, who on the date fixed for the filing of objections put in a petition to the effect that she had no objection to partition being made. She asked that a separate allotment of her property should be made to her. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that if Musammat Ratipali had any question of proprietary title to raise she had the opportunity of doing so. She was served with the notice under section 110 of the Land Revenue Act. In the year 1916 the defendants presented an application to a Revenue Court regarding the number now in dispute. They asked for correction of the khewat, alleging that this plot had been held in mortgage by certain persons and that the mortgage had been redeemed a good many years before. The notice of this application was served upon the plaintiff. She appeared in the mutation Court and put forward the plea that the property was not held in mortgage but belonged to her under a certain deed of sale which she was unable to produce. Her story was that the deed had been destroyed. The Revenue Court ordered mutation to be made in favour of the defendants, and it is in consequence of this order that the present suit for declaration has been filed. At the time the suit was filed the partition of the village was still going on, proceedings having been delayed owing to the absence of one of the necessary parties on war service.

The law relating to the authority of Civil Courts to entertain suits regarding title in cases where the partition of a village has been applied for has been laid down in a Bench ruling of this Court reported as Mukhtar Ahmad v. Barati Lal (1). Bearing in mind the principles which have been laid down in that judgment, it is apparent that the plaintiff here had no right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. It has already been mentioned that a notice of the application for partition was served upon her and that she had the opportunity of raising a claim to the land in suit under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act. She failed to raise any claim and consequently none of the conditions which must be established in order to give the Civil Court jurisdiction have been fulfilled. No reference has been made to the Civil Court under the provisions of section 111 for the purpose of having the question of title determined. Nor has the partition Court itself decided any such question so that its order is liable to be appealed to a Court of civil jurisdiction. I am satisfied, therefore, that the decison of the lower Appellate Court is correct and that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit for declaration.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Application to withdraw with leave to bring fresh suit—Procedure—Permission to withdraw granted without leave to bring fresh suit, effect of.

Where a plaintiff applies for permission to withdraw his suit with leave to bring a fresh suit, the proper order to pass, if the Court does not grant leave to bring a fresh suit, is to dismiss the application. [p. 757, cols. 1 & 2.]

Ordinarily, an application to withdraw with permission to bring a fresh suit does not mean an application to withdraw if such permission is not granted. Where, therefore, on such application permission to withdraw is granted without leave to bring a fresh suits, this amounts to a refusal of the application. [p. 757, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Munsif, Sewan (Chapra), dated the 27th January 1919.

Mr. Baikuntha Nath Mitter, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Rajendra Prasad and Siveswar Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 107 of the Government of India Act. The petitioner instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif at Sewan (No. 471 of 1916) for a declaration that the deed of sale of the 13th June 1916 executed by the opposite party No. 1 in favour of the opposite pary Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in respect of a house was null and void, and that on the 9th June 1916 the petitioner contracted with the opposite party No. 1 for the purchase of the house, and for specific performance of the contract. On the 1st September 1917 the petitioner applied to the Munsif to be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh one on the ground of defects in the plaint and on the ground that material witnesses had not been summoned. The Munsif granted the permission and then the opposite party Nos. 3 and 4 applied to the High Court in Civil Revision No. 305 of 1917 [Mahendra Ram v. Singi Lal (1)] to set aside the Munsif's order. The case was remanded to the lower Court and the Munsif was directed to pay attention to Order XXII, rule 1, of the Code and to come to a decision whether or not permission should be granted on the grounds mentioned in rule 1 of Order XXIII.

On the 27th January 1919 the Munsif refused permission to the plaintiff to withdraw his suit and to institute a fresh suit. This order of refusal is entered on the order-sheet and it runs: "He is allowed to withdraw from the suit without any permission for a fresh suit on the same cause of action." On the 13th February 1919 the petitioner applied to the Munsif that the Original Suit No. 471 of 1916 should be proceeded with, since no permission had been granted to him to file a fresh suit, and on the 14th February the Munsif passed an order on the application to the effect that the suit had already been disposed of and so the application must be rejected. As a matter of fact after the order of the 27th January 1919 had been passed, a decree had been drawn up in the suit and had been signed by the Pleaders of both parties.

It is now contended here that when the plaintiff petitioner asked to be allowed to withdraw with permission to institute a fresh suit, this did not amount to a willingness on his part to withdraw without that permission.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner has relied chiefly on the case of Suradhani Debya v. Chandra Nath Pramanik (2), where it was held that where a plaintiff does not desire to withdraw from the suit unless with liberty to bring a fresh suit and the Court considers that that liberty ought not to be granted, the proper course is simply to dismiss the application. There is no doubt, I think, that in this case under the circumstances the Munsif rightly refused the prayer to withdraw with permission to institute a fresh suit, but I do not take it that when such an application as was made by the petitioner is refused, a Court is entitled to understand that a refusal of a part of the prayer amounts to an allowance of the rest, or that the petitioner himself meant that, if he could not get one part of his prayer, he was content to take the rest. Ordinarily an application to withdraw with permission in no way means an application to withdraw if such permission will not be granted. In the present case I am of opinion that the Munsif would, if at the time he passed the order refusing the petition he thought that the petitioner meant to withdraw the suit even without permission, have stated this on the order sheet and would then and there have entered the case as withdrawn. There is no final order on the order-sheet at all in support of this, and it seems to me that the Munsif should have noted on the order-sheet that the plaintiff not having been ready to adduce further evidence the suit must be dismissed. The petitioner certainly has throughout shown a degree of negligence in the preparation and conduct of his suit which does not entitle him to much consideration, but I consider that the lower Court was mistaken in believing that the petitioner meant to withdraw his suit whether his prayer was granted or not. I would thus allow the application and order that the petitioner do pay two gold mohurs as costs to the opposite party. The suit will accordingly be remanded to the lower Court to its original number to be proceeded with from the stage at which it was on the 27th January 1919.

Case remanded.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23—Land acquisition—Vacant land—Assessment, method of.

In a land acquisition case the amount of compensation cannot be enhanced upon the basis of conveyances of lands which have no similarity to the lands acquired. [p. 758, col 2.]

In awarding compensation for land acquired under the Land Acquisition Act it is unsound to assert that the value of a raiyat's interest is so much without specification of the conditions of the tenancy. How much is recoverable by a landlord from a hypothetical tenant may be determined with some approach to accuracy from the rent receivable by him. But the exact value of the raiyat's interest is dependent on a number of unknown factors. [p. 758, col. 2; p. 759, col. 1.]

In awarding compensation for a vacant piece of land the existence of a hypothetical tenant on each plot was assumed and calculation was made of the respective values of what was designated as landlord's interest and raiyat's interest. The total of the sums which represented the values of these interests was taken as the value of the land:

Held, that the award was based on unsound principles. [p. 759, col. 1]

Appeal against the decision of the Additional District Judge, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 9th October 1917.

Babus Ram Charan Mitra and Srish Chandra Chowdhury, for the Appellant in No. 13 and Respondent in No. 20.

Mr. Pugh, Babus Jogesh Chunder Roy, Ramani Mohan Chatterjee, Framatha Nath Banerjee and Maulvi Abdul Hai, for the Respondent in No. 13 and Appellant in No. 20.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are directed against the same award made by the Land Acquisition Judge of Pabna and Bogra in respect of lands acquired for public purposes. Appeal No. 13 of 1918 has been preferred by the Secretary of State on the ground that the sum awarded is excessive and has been calculated on an erroneous principle. Appeal No. 20 of 1918 has been preferred by the claimant on the ground that the sum awarded is insufficient. We are clearly of opinion that there is no foundation for the appeal of the claimant. Reliance has been placed upon conveyances of lands which have no similarity to the lands acquired; and we cannot possibly enhance the amount of compensation on the basis of those transactions. The really substantial appeal is that preferred by the Secretary of State. The Senior Government Pleader has contended that the award as made by the Judge is based on unsound principles. The land when acquired was vacant. But both the Collector and the Land Acquisition Judge have assumed the existence of a hypothetical tenant on each plot and have calculated the respective values of what was designated as landlord's interest and raiyat's interest. The total of the sums which represent the values of these interests has been taken as the value of the land. The Land Acquisition Judge has accepted the figures of the Collector in respect of the valuation of landlord's interest; but he has substantially raised the figures for the valuation of raiyat's interest. The Government Pleader has argued that what the lower Court has done in substance is to award to the claimant, in the shape of the value of the raiyat's interest, the entire value of the land and has added thereto the value of the so called landlord's interest calculated by the Collector who has adopted an entirely different basis for the calculation of the raiyat's interest. In our opinion, this criticism is well-founded. The method adopted by the Collector and the Judge is wholly unreliable and is not based on any solid foundation. How much is recoverable by a landlord from a hypothetical tenant may be determined with some approach to accuracy from the rent receivable by him. But the exact value of the raiyat's interest is dependent on a number of unknown factors; for instance if the imaginary raiyat were to sell his tenancy in the open market, the value it would fetch would depend upon his status. It is conceivable that he may not have any transferable interest at all. It is possible that he may be a tenant for a term and that his tenancy may be transferable only with the assent of the landlord. It may be, again, that this rent is not fixed in perpetuity, and is enhanceable. It is obvious that a purchaser of such a tenancy would offer a price in view of the circumstances and conditions of the tenancy. Consequently to assert that the value of a raiyat's interest is so much without specification of the conditions of the tenancy is obviously unsound. We must, therefore, reject the figures given by the Collector as also by the Judge. But this places us in a difficulty. Are there really materials on the record which may enable the Court to determine the market value of the lands on some sound principle? If one of these plots was offered for sale as a vacant piece of land, the purchaser, in making an offer, would obviously have in view the income likely to be derived from it. Now, it has been found that the land can be let out at a rent of Rs. 24 per Bigha, so that if 20 years' purchase is taken, this would give a rate of Rs. 480 per Bigha. But, at the same time, the landlord who let out land to a tenant would in ordinary circumstances demand a premium and if the interest of the tenant were not permanent and transferable, he would ask for a premium on each transfer. There is no evidence on the record to show precisely what may be derivable by the landlord in these contingencies. But in view of the facts which have been stated to us, we are of opinion that substantial justice will be done if in addition to Rs. 480, we allow the landlord another Rs. 100. This judgment will affect the awards in respect of two plots—313 and 314—where the lower Court allowed, in addition to the valuation of the raiyat's interest, the value of the so called landlord's interest. In these two cases the award will be diminished from Rs. 680 to Rs. 580. In respect of the other plots, we do not think it necessary to reduce the sums awarded.

The result is that the appeal of the Secretary of State (No. 13 of 1918) will be allowed and the decree of the Court below will be varied as indicated above. There will be no order for costs. The appeal of the claimant (No. 20 of 1918) is dismissed with costs to the Secretary of State.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fayzabad, dated the 27th February 1917, upholding the order of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 14th September 1916.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, the Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hassan and Pandit Harkaran Noth Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case has already been before me and by my order of the 27th May 1918* an issue was remanded for determination to the lower Appellate Court. The finding on the issue has now been returned and the points which were left for decision have now to be determined.

The facts have been set out in my order passed on the date above mentioned. They may be briefly recapitulated here. The dispute now is with regard to certain lands in a village called Benipur. The claim which the plaintiffs made related also to certain other lands in Mauza Arjunpur, but there is no longer any dispute as regards these latter lands. It has been definitely decided that the plaintiffs have no title. We are concerned only with the lands situated in Benipur, a list of which was attached to the plaint; and the matter to be decided is whether or not the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration that they are under-proprietors of these lands. It is not denied that the plaintiffs were at one time under-proprietors in this village of Benipur. It is proved that a mortgage of the lands now in dispute was made in favour of one Kamta. That mortgage was a mortgage by conditional sale. Kamta brought a suit for foreclosure and obtained a decree in the year 1893. In 1895 an order for possession (dakhal dihani) was made in favour of the mortgagee. Thereafter a pre emption suit was brought by the defendant respondent Indar Sen Singh, who is now represented by Musammat Anpurna Kunwar. Babu Indar Sen Singh obtained a decree for pre-emption and possession was delivered to him in the usual way by the Civil Court in the year 1897.

It is not disputed that notwithstanding these proceedings by way of giving possession through the Civil Court, the plaintiffs remained in occupation from the year 1895 onwards. It is an admitted fact that they were ejected from these lands by an order of the Revenue Court after the present civil suit had been brought. In consequence of this continuous possession the fact of which is admitted by the defendant-respondent, the plaintiffs set up a case that they have acquired an under-proprietary title by adverse possession. Both the Courts below decided this point against the plaintiffs. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had alleged that the lands were their sir lands, they could not claim anything higher than the status of tenants with a right of occupancy. This right of occupancy, it was said, had arisen under the provisions of section 25 of the Oudh Laws Act of 1876, which was in force at the time the foreclosure decree was made.

This section, however, did not create a right of occupancy in sir lands as such. It only gave the ex proprietor the right of occupancy in such lands as were in his cultivating occupation at the date upon which the transfer of the land was made. It does not necessarily follow that lands which may properly be described as sir lands are actually in the cultivating occupancy of the former proprietor. It was for this reason, therefore, that it was necessary to send down the issue to which the answer has now been received. The finding is that it is not proved that these lands now in dispute were in the cultivating occupancy of the plaintiffs at the time foreclosure was made. In these circumstances it is not possible for the defendant to say that the plaintiffs, after the foreclosure decree had been given effect to, became merely tenants with a right of occupancy. The fact is that they were left without any rights at all, the whole of the property passing to the mortgagee from whom it was subsequently pre-empted by the superior proprietor.

The Subordinate Judge was quite right, therefore, when he said in his judgment that after the proceedings under the foreclosure and those which were taken in execution of the pre-emption decree the plaintiffs were in possession without any title whatever. He decided against the plaintiffs on the ground that although they were in possession without title, they nevertheless failed to prove that they had put forward any adverse claim to the knowledge of the defendant. He pointed out that the mere non-payment of rent would not amount to an assertion of adverse title and in this connection he referred to certain authority. The point is, however, that the defendant has failed to show that the plaintiffs ever held possession as tenants after the foreclosure decree had been executed. For the reasons above given, he cannot appeal to the provisions of section 25 of the Oudh Laws Act for the purpose of showing that the status of the plaintiffs had become that of tenants and there is no evidence whatever on the record to show that the plaintiffs ever accepted any tenancy from the defendant. The fact is that although they had lost all their rights under the foreclosure decree, they hung on to the land and were continuously recorded for more than twelve years as under-proprietors.

In these circumstances it must, I think, be held in favour of the plaintiffs that they have acquired the status of under proprietors by adverse possession. The facts speak for themselves. The plaintiffs have been in possession to the knowledge of the defendant, who knew or at any rate must be taken to have known that they were in possession without any right whatever. Even if there is no evidence of an openly avowed claim of right on the part of the plaintiffs, all the acts and circumstances attending the occupation of these lands by the plaintiffs can be referred to for the purpose of showing the intention with which they retained possession. It seems to me that all those acts and circumstances clearly imply and denote an intention on the part of the plaintiffs to hold as under-proprietors against the defendant, the superior proprietor.

The defendant was well aware of the situation and he has allowed these people to continue in possession without title for more than twelve years from the date upon which he himself was entitled to actual possession as against them.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the decree of the Court below is set aside. The plaintiffs are entitled as against the defendant to a declaration that they are the under-proprietors of the lands specified in list A attached to the plaint. The plaintiffs will get their costs in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Accounts, suit for, against lambardar—Parties, necessary—Co-sharers, whether must be joined.

A suit against a lambardar for accounts in respect of one item of village property by one of the persons jointly interested in a portion of the village is not maintainable, unless all the other persons jointly interested are joined either as plaintiffs or as defendants. [p. 762, col. 1.]

As between a lambardar and a person who is jointly interested with others in a patti, there is no such privity of contract as would entitle the latter to treat the former as his agent in respect of the item owned by him. [p. 762, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 183 of 1918, decided on the 26th February 1919.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr, M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues for a half share of the profits of one abadi plot No. 569 in Mauza Khandwa, Taraf Kunbi. His allegations are that Govindram and Rajaram, who were the owners of a half share in that Mauza, mortgaged their share in plot No. 569 together with a house in the town to one Ibrahim Kachi by a possessory mortgage deed, dated the 12th of March 1903, and this mortgage was assigned to him. It appears that subsequent to this mortgage, Govindram and Rajaram sold 2-annas share of the village and mortgaged the remaining 6 annas by way of usufructuary mortgage to Seth Radhakishan Jaikishan.

The only defendant in the suit is the lambardar who owns the remaining 8-annas share. The plaintiff claims profits of this plot for the last six years against the defendant in his capacity as lambardar. The defence is that the lambardar is not an accounting party to the plaintiff in respect of this plot and that the suit is not tenable apart from a suit for village accounts. The plaintiff has not cared to amend the plaint by asking that village accounts should be gone into in the presence of all persons interested and thereafter his share of profits determined and decreed. Moreover, the plaintiff does not seek accounts of the rents of the house in the town of Khandwa, which he says he is realizing separately. The Courts below have dismissed the suit, following Fandu v. Pandu (1) where it was laid down that a co sharer cannot sue the lambardar for each item of village profits, but must bring a general suit for village accounts.

In this second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the rule laid down in the case cited only applies where a co-sharer is entitled to the profits of more than one item and that the rule is meant to prevent multiplicity of suits. This is no doubt the raison d'etre of the rule. But the question still arises whether the lambardar undertakes to render account to each holder of a fragment of right in the village not having a definite fractional share therein. To accept the plaintiff's contention would be to impose upon the lambardar an onerous duty which would make his position intolerable. If the plaintiff's suit succeeds, there may be a deficit in the village accounts and the lambardar will be forced to bring a suit to recover such deficit from the plaintiff's transferor and any adjudication come to in this suit will not bind the latter. If the plaintiff's transferor cannot claim an account of one item of property, he cannot transfer to the plaintiff the right to demand such an account apart from a suit for general village accounts. The lambardar undertakes to explain village accounts to all those who are jointly interested in the 8-annas patti and any apportionment of profits as between them is a matter which does not concern him. If those who can jointly claim with the plaintiff an account refuse to do so, the plaintiff may make them defendants in the suit. There is no such privity between the plaintiff and defendant as entitles the former to treat the latter as his agent in respect of this item of property. The right inheres in the plaintiff jointly with persons interested in the patti. The suit as framed against an agent is not maintainable at the instance of the plaintiff alone and in respect of one plot.

It was further contended that apart from the defendant's position as lambardar, he should be treated as a bailiff on the analogy of the English Statute of 4 Anne, c. 16. That Statute, as explained in Henderson v. Eason (2), is inapplicable to the usual mode of enjoyment of joint malguzari villages in India. Section 27 provides that an action of account may be brought and maintained by one joint tenant and tenant-in-common against the other as bailiff for receiving more than comes to his just share. Parke, B., in delivering the judgment says: "Every case in which a tenant in common receives more than his share is within the Statute; and account will lie when he does receive, but not otherwise * * What, then, is a 'receiving' of more than comes to his just share, within the meaning of that provision in the Statute of Anne? It appears to us that, construing the Act according to the ordinary meaning of the words, this provision of the Statute was meant to apply only to cases where the tenant-in-common receives money or something else, where another person gives or pays it, which the co-tenants are entitled to simply by reason of their being tenants-in-common, and in proportion to their interest as such, and of which one receives and keeps more than his just share according to that proportion." Accordingly it was held that a tenant does not receives more than his share within the meaning of the Statute if he merely has the sole enjoyment of the property, even though by the aid of his own industry and capital he makes a profit by the enjoyment, and takes the whole of that profit. The analogy of that Statute cannot be adopted as a rule of equity, justice and good conscience, as in that case contrary to our practise homefarm land would have to be excluded from accounts between co-tenants. In Mahesh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3) Harington, J., doubted whether the principle enunciated in the Statute of Anne could be applied in this country, but it is clearly inapplicable to malguzari villages. It seems to me that even under the Statute the account of the entire joint property will have to be taken to determine whether a co-tenant has received more than comes to his just share and this in the presence of all persons interested.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Messrs. Susil Madhab Mullick and Shiveswar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. C. Das, S. N. Palit and Ram Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts, J.—This was a suit for a declaration of title to certain fishing rights. In the plaint the suit was valued at Rs. 1,400. The suit was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Purnea and was decreed in favour of the plaintiffs. From this decree an appeal was preferred to the District Judge, who confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

In the Court of first instance one of the grounds taken by the defendants was that the suit was under-valued for purposes of jurisdiction. No issue, however, was framed and the point was undecided. On appeal to the District Judge the same point was taken but again without having considered the matter the District Judge said "it seems to me the value named by the plaintiffs in respect of the property was not inadequate." On second appeal to this Court the question of valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction was the main point taken in the appeal, and it was decided by the learned Judges who heard this appeal that there was no proper finding as to the valuation of the suit and an issue on this point was referred to the lower Appellate Court for a finding. The finding of the District Judge on this issue has now been received, and it is that the proper valuation of the property in respect of which a declaration is asked for is Rs. 16,275. Now it is not contended that this is not the correct valuation of the property, but it is contended on behalf of the respondents that the Court has no jurisdiction to question the valuation of the plaintiff. This contention is not sustainable. If the valuation put on the plaint for the purposes of jurisdiction is contested, the valuation must be decided by the Court. This was the view taken in the case of Dayaram Jagjivan v. Gordhandas Dayaram (1) and though there is no case directly to the point in this Court it is in accordance with the view which has been taken of cases coming under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. In my view, therefore, the Court must determine the value of the subject-matter of the suit.

The next question is, what this value is and it is contended that the suit being a suit for a declaration, the value must be what the plaintiff says it is and cannot be the value of the property in respect of which a declaration is sought as contended by the appellant. I am unable to accept the respondents' contention. It is difficult to see how the value of the declaration can be other than the value of the property in respect of which the declaration is asked for, and I am supported in this view by the decision in Ganapati v. Chathu (2), where it was held that for the purposes of jurisdiction the value of a suit for a declaratory decree must be taken to be what it would be if the suit were one of possession of the property regarding which the plaintiff seeks to have his title declared. The value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction then in this case is Rs. 16,275; the appeal to the District Judge was, therefore, incompetent and his order is without jurisdiction unless the case be covered by section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. It is contended that the case is covered by section 11, inasmuch as objection was not taken at the proper time and in the proper manner and the appellant has not been prejudiced. With these contentions I am unable to agree. The objection was taken at the first possible moment, namely, in the written statement. It was again taken after issues were framed and it was taken before the lower Appellate Court. Nor can it be said that the appellant is not prejudiced inasmuch as if the suit had deen properly valued, there would have been an appeal to the High Court in the first instance. The High Court would have gone into the facts of the case and the appellant would not have been confined to urging points of law. The case, therefore, does not come under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act and the decision of the learned District Judge being without jurisdiction, the decree passed by him is void. In these circumstances I would discharge the order of the District Judge and decree this appeal with costs. The memo. of appeal presented in the Court of the District Judge will be returned to the appellant.

(1) 31 B. 73; 8 Bom. L. R. 885.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 23—Letters of Administration, application for, by two persons—Status of one admitted and of other disputed—Procedure.

Where two persons apply for Letters of Administration to the estate of a deceased person, and the status of one of the applicants to so apply is disputed, while the other is entitled to a portion of the estate, the correct procedure for the Court is to ignore the question of status and grant Letters of Administration to the applicant entitled to a part of the estate.

Mr. Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Ma Ngwe Nu, claiming to be surviving widow of Po Lu deceased, applied for Letters of Administration to his estate and her application was opposed by Ma Thu Daw who was admittedly the adopted daughter of Po Lu, a former wife. Ma Thu Daw denied that Ma Ngwe Nu was married to Po Lu and applied for Letters of Administration for herself.

In these circumstances the Court below ought undoubtedly to have followed the decision in Ma Tok v. Ma Thi (1) because there was a person, namely, the adopted daughter, who was entitled to a part of the estate of deceased, whether Ma Ngwe Nu was the widow or not. The Court should have refrained from going into the question of Ma Ngwe Nu's status at all in the circumstances.

Ma Thu Daw appeals. We consider it unnecesary to go into the question of Ma Ngwe Nu's status at all.

We set aside the order of the District Court granting Letters of Adminstration to Ma Ngwe Nu and direct that Letters of Administration shall be granted instead to Ma Thu Daw on her furnishing security in the sum of Rs. 3,000 for the due administration of the estate.

The respondent will pay the appellant's costs in both Courts.

Advocate's fee two gold mohurs.

Order set aside.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s 14—Hindu joint family, holding let to member of—Ejectment—Holding let to other members of family—Tenancy, whether continuous.

A member of a Hindu joint family taking land on lease from a landholder in his individual capacity is the sole tenant of that landholder to the exclusion of the other members of the joint family and when he is ejected from the holding, and the holding is immediately let to his brothers, the latter are not entitled to count the period of cultivation when their brother was recorded as tenant towards the period necessary for acquiring occupancy rights. [p. 765, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commisioner, Agra Division, dated the 20th of October 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—(February 18, 1920.) —This is a Zamindar's second appeal in an ejectment suit, in which the Commissioner has held that the respondents have a right of occupancy because they are entitled to count a period of cultivation when their brother was recorded as tenant towards the period necessary for acquiring occupancy rights.

It appears from the record, and particularly from the 12 years' abstract admitted in evidence when the appeal was before the Commissioner, that the respondents' brother Kallu had been tenant-in chief for 10 years in 1313 F. At the end of 1315 F. he was ejected, and his brothers, the respondents, were admitted to the holding from 1316 F. at an enhanced rent. It is claimed that the nominal change of tenants, when considered with section 14 of the Tenancy Act, does not operate to break the continuity of the tenancy of the family as a whole. In the first place, I may note that the Commissioner seems to have been mistaken in considering that the holding had descended to Kallu from his father, Nilkanth. The beginning of Nilkanth's tenancy was as a sub tenant holding under one Moti. This is proved by a lease executed by Moti in favour of Nilkanth in 1884 and receipts put in the Commissioner's Court also tend to show, if they are regarded as admissible in evidence, that Nilkanth paid his rents to Moti and not to the Zamindar. This weakens the assumption made by the Commissioner that the holding was the family holding from the time of Nilkanth, the father of respondents.

There is no doubt that Kallu was ejected, and the only question is whether the admission of his brothers to the holding can be considered a re admisssion of Kallu himself. The chief ruling on the point is the Board's Selected Decision No. 5 of 1918, in which it was held that a member of a Hindu joint family taking land on lease from a landholder in his individual capacity is the sole tenant of that landholder to the exclusion of other members of the joint family. This ruling of the Board followed that of the High Court in the case of Kallu v. Sital (1). In the circumstances, I think, I must follow this decision and regard the respondents alone as tenants of the landholder from 1316 F. They have not, therefore, acquired occupancy rights and are liable to ejectment. I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant in both Appellate Courts.

HOPKINS, S. M.—(March 16, 1920.)—The landholder ejected Kallu from this holding and immediately let it to Kallu's brothers Sobha and Kashi at an enhanced rent. It is, in my opinion, a question of fact as to whether there was a real or only a nominal change of the tenants, the decision of which rests on a finding on the issue whether Sobha and Kashi were joint in cultivation with Kallu during the time that the holding was recorded in his name. There was evidence on both sides in the trial Court. The Assistant Collector took into consideration the fact that Kallu's sons had an occupancy holding separate from Sobha and Kashi, and stated definitely that he disbelieved the evidence of the witness who spoke to the joint cultivation.

The Commissioner does not state that he disagreed with this finding of fact or that he believes the evidence on the other side to the effect that Kallu was joint in cultivation with Sobha and Kashi. If he had done so, it would have been difficult for this Court in second appeal to disturb his finding of fact. The basis of the Commissioner's decision is that there is a presumption in favour of jointness and that he accepts the defendants' assertion that they have all along cultivated the holding jointly with Kallu and his sons. The Commissioner, in my opinion, erred in law in deciding the case upon a presumption while the matter was one for decision upon the evidence. The presumption in question was rebuttable and had, as a matter of fact, been rebutted on the evidence as accepted by the trial Court.

In this view, I concur in the order proposed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by father—Necessity—Immorality—Burden of proof.

Where in a suit to enforce a mortgage, by the father of a Hindu joint family, the sons advance the defence that the father was of immoral life and there was no necessity for the loan, the burden of proving not only that there was necessity to borrow but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at the rate of interest stipulated lies upon the plaintiff, while it is for the defendants to prove that the money was borrowed for expenses incident to an immoral life. [p. 768, cols. 1 & 2]

Consolidated appeals against the decision of the Calcutta High Court (Holmwood and Walmsley, JJ.), dated the 18th May 1915, modifying that of the Officiating Additional Sub-Judge, Patna, dated the 27th June 1912.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 18th May 1915, varying two decrees of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 27th June 1912.

The suits were brought to enforce two mortgages, the earlier one, which was, however, put secondly in suit, dated June, 1896, and the later one July, 1897. The appellant and plaintiff is the representative of the original mortgagee. The defendants and respondents are the mortgagor Karu Singh and his two sons, one of whom was an infant at the date of the suits. The first mortgage, which was for a sum of Rs. 2,122, was expressed to be made for re-payment of the third part of some antecedent mortgage-debts created by Karu Singh and his brothers, which debts it was now proposed to apportion and divide so that each of the three should be severally liable for his share.

The second mortgage, which was for Rs. 1,000, was expressed to be for payment of "Zerpeshgi" (i. e. "premium on a lease") due in respect of a certain Mauzah, "and for the cultivation and improvement of my Mauzahs, and for meeting household expenses."

At the time that the mortgages in suit were executed the elder of the two sons was born, though the younger was not; and Karu Singh must, therefore, be treated as the manager of a joint Hindu family, and his mortgages will only be good so as to bind family property if they were effected to meet necessary expenses, or as it is otherwise expressed for joint family purposes.

Karu Singh put in a defence raising objections to the rate of interest and denying the title of the plaintiff to represent the original mortgagee. No importance is to be attached to this defence. The serious defence is that put in on behalf of the two sons. They set up the case that their father was a man of loose character and a licentious person, that the sums had really been borrowed to spend on his mistress, that the necessities mentioned in the bonds were totally false, got up and concocted, and that they were not benefited by the money claimed and not bound by the mortgages. Issues were accordingly framed in each case in which the important one was "Whether the bond debt was contracted for joint family purposes? Whether the bond-debt was contracted for and spent on immoral purposes?"

When the case was ready to come on for trial, several applications were made on behalf of the defendants for postponement. At last the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the applications for postponement were not genuine, and that no further time ought to be granted. Thereupon the Pleaders for the defence declared that they could take no further part in the proceedings, and the Judge heard the case ex parte and thought that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff was sufficient to prove his case. He accordingly made decrees for the enforcement of the mortgages with costs and interest at a certain rate as provided in the bond.

From the decrees in the two suits the defendants appealed to the High Court of Calcutta, and the learned Judges in this Court, being of opinion that the plaintiff had not proved that the moneys were borrowed for necessary purposes, dismissed the suit as against the two sons, but made a decree against the father to the following effect:—

"The result is that there will be a decree against the father Karu Singh, defendant No. 1, for the principal of the two bonds Rs. 2,122 and Rs. 1,000, with interest at 18 per cent. per annum from the dates of the bonds till the date of suit. If the amount found due on account is not paid within three months of the receipt of the decree in the lower Court, the father's share in the mortgaged properties will be liable to be sold on partition."

Upon the findings of the High Court this decree was too favourable to the plaintiff and incorrect. The law was finally established no doubt since that decision by this Board in the case of Narain Prasad v. Sarnam Singh (1), which determined that "A mortgage of the joint family property as a Mitakshara family by its Karta (or manager), unless necessity or an antecedent debt is proved, is void; the transaction itself gives to the mortgagee no rights against the Karta's interest in the joint family property."

Their Lordships, however, have now to examine whether the findings of the High Court were justified. Dealing first with the mortgage of 1896, the recital in it is that it is for the mortgagor's third part in the repayment of two antecedent bonds for family necessaries for which two earlier bonds of 1890 and 1892 had been given. There is no apparent attack on the bond, which the High Court describes as the bond of 1890 but which, if the Hindu chronology is properly translated, seems to be of October 1889, and which was for Rs. 2,000. But there is an attack upon the bond of 1892 as having a false recital, because it says that the money was borrowed to purchase a village called Naya Hajipur. The High Court says that the recital must be false as in 1889 the defendant had mortgaged two annas of that village with only one of his brothers. The family were, therefore, the Judges say, already in possession of the village.

There is nothing to show that the family, which was a joint family, had possession of the whole village. They apparently had then only a two-annas share. On the occasion of the mortgage of 1892 they are found in possession of a three annas share, from which one might conjecture that the money was borrowed to buy the additional anna share. The Judges apparently lay some stress upon the fact that there were only two mortgagors instead of three when the two-annas share was mortgaged. They do not say in terms that, because on the first occasion two brothers joined in the mortgage and two annas were mortgaged and on the second occasion the three brothers joined in the mortgage and three annas were mortgaged, therefore, it must be taken that each brother had an anna share. But unless this construction were to be put upon the transaction, it would appear that the joint family property had been increased by the purchase of the one-anna share. The statement in the judgment that the recital must be false is certainly unwarranted.

With regard to the second mortgage, the High Court took the recital as being that the money was borrowed for repayment of Zerpeshgi, laying a stress on the syllable "re". They proceeded to state that as the mortgagors were in possession of the Thika property there seemed no necessity for redemption; no doubt the translation did give the word as "repayment." But upon this point being taken, the plaintiff challenged the accuracy of the translation from the original, and he applied for permission to send to this country as part of the record another sworn translation which rendered the word as "payment" instead of "repayment." The High Court did not think itself warranted in authorising this, but it directed that the original mortgage should be sent to this country. This has been done and a member of their Lordships' Board, who can read the vernacular, has read it and says that the word is "payment", not "repayment." The fanciful superstructure, in any case a somewhat fanciful one, which the High Court based upon the syllable "re" falls to the ground.

These being the only objections raised in the judgment of the High Court, and they so failing, their Lordships are remitted to the question whether the Subordinate

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 284; 44 I. A. 163; 15 A. L. J. 584; 2 P. L. W. 29; 21 C. W. N. 990; 33 M. L. J. 39; 19 Bom. L. R. 646; 26 C. L. J. 97; (1917) M. W. N. 516; 6 L. W. 334; 39 A. 500 (P. C.).

Judge was right in holding that sufficient proof had been given before him. The allegations made in the defence that the father was of immoral life, and borrowed the money for the expenses incident thereto, are of the class of allegation which is only too frequently made when a mortgage suit is contested. No evidence was given in support of them. The burden of proof lay upon the defendants and was not discharged; so these allegations fall to the ground. Upon the plaintiff lay the burden of proving necessity in such case. He called evidence and produced documents, not all that could have been called or produced, but enough to satisfy the Subordinate Judge, and there is material on the record to show that he had armed himself with further proof of witnesses who might be in attendance if it were required.

Their Lordships, having examined into the whole matter, see no reason to differ from the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge, now that the criticisms of the High Court have been removed, and they think that his judgment upon the main point in the case should be restored.

There is, however, a question as to interest, as to which their Lordships are inclined to agree with the view taken by the High Court. The covenant in the bonds was to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem, with provision for half yearly rests, and a further penalty in the event of default. When the suit came on, the plaintiff did not claim the penalty, and indeed he remitted a large amount of the interest and compound interest; but even so, judgment was given for sums of money fixed as Rs. 32,000, and Rs. 8,000 respectively, with further interest from the date of suit.

When the High Court arrived at the sum for which the Judges thought the father's share would be liable, they fixed it by taking the two original principal sums and allowing simple interest at the rate stipulated, which is equivalent to 18 per cent. per annum. It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that this is too little and is not right. Their Lordships have recently had occasion to consider this matter in the case of Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2) decided on the 18th February 1919. In that case they had laid it down that:—"It is incumbent on those who support a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family to show not only that there was necessity to borrow, but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate, and upon some such terms, and if it is not shown that there was necessity to borrow at the rate and upon the terms contained in the mortgage, that rate and those terms cannot stand."

They proceed to observe as follows:—

"It remains, therefore, that there was necessity and, in virtue of that necessity, authority to borrow upon reasonable commercial terms, and that the mortgage stands as good security to that extent, but that all terms of the mortgage in excess of this necessity are outside the scope of the authority."

These principles must be applied to the present cases. In conformity therewith, the necessity for the high rate of interest secured by these bonds must be proved, if it is to stand. And in this matter their Lordships are not disposed to interfere with the view taken by the High Court. In the result, the appeal will be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge will be restored, but with the respective variations that the sums found due and owing to the plaintiff will be those found due by the High Court, instead of those found due by the Subordinate Judge. The appellant will have his costs here and in the Courts below. Their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty accordingly.

Sind Frontier Regulation (III of 1892), ss. 17, 20, 24—Security for good behaviour, order for—Revision—Judicial Commissioner, power of, to interfere—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind has no jurisdiction, either by express enactment or by necessary implication, to interfere in revision with an order made by a District Magistrate under sections 20 (1) and 24 (1) of the Sind Frontier Regulation requiring a person to furnish security for good behaviour. [p. 771, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Upper Sind Frontier.

Mr. F. J. DeVerteuil, for the Applicants.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application praying this Court to exercise the powers of revision conferred by section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to an order made by the District Magistrate, Upper Sind Frontier, on November 29th, 1918, under sections 20 (1) and 24 (1) of the Sind Frontier Regulation, 1892. Though at the first hearing we were in some doubt as to the nature of the order, the copy produced at our request by the Public Prosecutor makes it clear that the order is one which is strictly within the scope of the Regulation.

The question for our determination—and it was for this purpose that the case was set down for hearing—is whether this Court has jurisdiction. The point is important and is not directly covered by authority, for we are unable to consider certain extra judicial opinions which have been alluded to in argument. Though certain provisions of the Sind Frontier Regulations have from time to time been considered by this Court, there has been no decision upon the precise point now before us. In Emperor v. Imambux Rowal Khan (1) the ground on which this Court held that it could interfere was that the order complained of was one which could not have been made under the provisions of the Regulation of 1892, and was in fact expressed to be an order under section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It was precisely for this reason that the Court held that it had jurisdiction, and we are unable to follow Mr. De Verteuil's argument that this case gives rise to an inference in his favour. In so far as it is in point at all, it suggests that the Court would have held that there was no jurisdiction had the order been strictly within the terms of the Regulation. In Imperator v. Jaro (2) the main question for decision was whether the Regulations applied to a certain area. The Court held that they did not and any remarks as to the effect of the Regulations in ousting the jurisdiction of the Court are obiter. In other respects also the case must be distinguished, as the order there was one under section 3 of the Regulation of 1872, and was, therefore, plainly of an executive nature. In Imperator v. Ghulam Kadir (3) the question was whether this Court had power to release on bail certain persons who were being tried by a Council of Elders under section 8 of the Regulation of 1872. It was held that there was no jurisdiction and the reason adduced was, put shortly, that under section 17 of the Regulation of 1872 general revisional jurisdiction is vested in the Commissioner and that the jurisdiction of this Court was, therefore, pro tanto excluded. If that decision can be extended beyond the facts then before the Court, it is clearly against the present applicants. The point is, however, not entirely free from doubt and requires further examination.

In the absence of any direct authority the question must be determined on the provisions of the Regulations themselves. The powers which are invoked are those which are conferred upon the Court by section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The words "Any proceedings" in that section are no doubt very wide, but they must be confined to proceedings within the scope of the Code. This is not only an ordinary canon of construction but follows from section 1 (2). We are concerned here with a special or local law and we cannot interfere unless there is a specific provision empowering us to do so. The Criminal Procedure Code contains no specific provision of this nature and if it is to be found anywhere, it must be in the Regulations themselves.

By virtue of section 3 of the Regulation of 1892 both Regulations are to be read as one. In the Regulation of 1872 there is one section only which bears in any way upon the matter now before us, viz., section 11. The object of the Legislature in enacting that section is manifest. The powers given by the Regulation are in certain respects inconsistent with the ordinary Criminal Codes. For instance section 7 is in direct conflict with section 497 of the Penal Code in so far as it makes a married woman punishable with the offence of adultery. Thus it was necessary in such cases to exclude the operation of the Codes. In those matters which are specifically dealt with in the Regulation the position is thus clear enough. The Codes, so far as they are in pari materia, apply unless their provisions are inconsistent with the Regulations in matters outside the scope of the Regulations, the Codes are plainly applicable. Section 11 of the Regulation, 1872, carries us no further than this. It cannot be invoked as laying down even by implication that an order for security made under section 20 (1) of the Regulation is subject to the powers of revision conferred by section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Reliance has, however, been placed on section 27 of the Regulation of 1892. It may be observed that this Regulation is divided into parts by cross-headings. Sections 5 to 18 inclusive are in that part of the Regulation which deals with the Council of Elders and the powers of the District Magistrate or Commissioner to make decrees in civil matters or to pass sentence in criminal matters on the finding of such a Council. It may be noted that section 17, which gives powers of revision to the Commissioner, belongs to this part. The effect of that section will be dealt with later. The matter with which this Court is now concerned belongs to that part of the Regulation of 1892 which is headed "Security for good behaviour." This covers sections 20 to 27. This last section runs as follows: "Sections 20 to 26 both inclusive shall be read with and construed as part of Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure which (viz, Chapter VIII) shall, except where the contrary is expressed or implied, be applicable so far as may be to cases of requiring or giving security under sections 20, 21 and 26". It is important to observe that what is made applicable is Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure and nothing else. The powers which we are asked to exercise are not conferred upon us by Chapter VIII. Had the Legislature intended that Chapter XXXII or any portion of it should be applicable, surely it would have used apt words to express that intention. The meaning of section 27 appears to be that, in so far as the procedure in security cases is not prescribed by the Regulations themselves, it is to be sought in Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not possible to argue that because the provisions of the Regulations giving power to take security are to be read as part of Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, therefore, orders made in the exercise of those powers are subject to the same revisional jurisdiction as orders made under Chapter VIII itself.

It would, therefore, appear that neither section 11 of the Regulation of 1872 nor section 27 of the Regulation of 1892 can be construed as conferring by implication upon this Court the powers of revision contained in section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to matters dealt with under the Regulations. It may be remarked that it is difficult to believe that the Legislature, had it desired that this Court should have power to interfere, would not have provided for this by express enactment. Further having regard to the nature of this legislation and of the area to which it is made applicable, it is not surprising if it was considered inadvisable that the proceedings should be subject to the jurisdiction of the regular Courts of revision and appeal. This consideration brings up once more section 17 of the Regulation of 1892. That this section gives to the Commissioner in Sind powers of revision in the case of decrees and sentences cannot be disputed. Is it to be supposed that the Legislature intended that decrees and sentences should be revised by the Commissioner and orders for security by this Court? That surely would be a most inconvenient construction, which a Court should decline to adopt unless absolutely constrained to do so. Nor again is it easy to understand why it was necessary to confer these powers expressly upon the Commissioner, and to leave the powers of this Court to be inferred by dubious implication. But it has been argued that section 17 confers a general power of revision on the Commissioner. If so, the jurisdiction of this Court is necessarily excluded on principles too well-known to need recapitulation. This indeed is the ratio decidendi in a case which has already been cited, Imperator v. Ghulam Kadir (3). If section 17 of the Regulation operates to exclude the jurisdiction of this Court to grant bail under section 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it must equally operate to exclude our jurisdiction to interfere under section 439. It can, no doubt, be argued that section 17 deals with decrees and sentences only, and that an order for security is neither a decree nor a sentence and that, therefore, our powers under section 439 are not affected. But neither is an order refusing bail a decree or a sentence. It is not, therefore, possible to distinguish Imperator v. Ghulam Kadir (3), and it is an authority against the present applicants. It is difficult, however, not to feel a certain degree of doubt as to the true construction of section 17 of the Regulation of 1892. In terms it applies to decrees and sentences only, and the position which it occupies in the Regulation favours that construction. But apart from the authority of the last case cited there are certain further considerations to be taken into account. The order with which we are here concerned is an order committing certain persons to rigorous imprisonment for failure to give security. There is authority for holding, Emperor v. Tula Khan (4), that under the Code of Criminal Procedure an order such as this is a sentence. There are no doubt conflicting decisions on the point. The question, however, is whether such an order is a 'sentence' within the meaning of the word as used in the Regulations themselves. It may be that such was the view of the Legislature and, if so, the order would come within the scope of section 17 of the Regulation of 1892. If so, the power of revision rests with the Commissioner and not with this Court.

But whatever be the true construction of section 17 of the Regulation of 1892, it does not appear that the jurisdiction sought to be invoked is conferred upon this Court either by express enactment or by necessary implication. It follows that upon any view of the case this application must be dismissed.

Application dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

RAFIQUE, J.—The Appeal No. 176 of 1920 and Revision Application No. 129 of 1920 are connected inasmuch as they arise out of one trial. Both the appeal and the revision application are on behalf of the Government. It appears that a dacoity was committed at the house of one Khiali Ram, a Brahman, at the village of Amarpur, on the night of the 4th of February 1919. More than 20 persons, armed with guns, pistols, swords, spears and lathis, raided the house of Khiali Ram and that of his nephew Din Dayal and maltreated the inmates of the two houses in order to find out from them where they had buried their treasure. The dacoits burnt Din Dayal's hands with a torch and set fire to his wife's skirt which resulted in her leg and hand being slightly burnt. They brutally ill-treated the daughters of Khiali. All the women of the two houses were stripped of their ornaments and the two houses were ransacked entirely. The dacoits kept off the villagers by firing off guns from time to time. They remained in the houses of Khiali and Din Dayal for more than an hour. Immediately after the departure of the dacoits the Chowkidar of the village ran to the Mainpuri Police Station, a distance of about four miles from Amarpura, and reported the occurrence. The first report was made at 6 A.M. Sheo Shunker Lal, the second officer at the Kotwali, promptly proceeded to the scene and arrived there at 7 A.M. He took with him Ajudhia Prasad, a neighbouring Zamindar. On arrival at Amarpur and after an inspection of the house of Khiali, the Sub-Inspector traced the footsteps of the dacoits for a considerable distance and at a spot a mile and a half from the village found several articles which had been accidentally dropped by the dacoits. One of these articles was a piece of paper which subsequently turned out to be a jail release ticket. The Police continued the investigation when on the 15th of February, the senior Sub-Inspector Irtaza Husain took it up. He went on the clue supplied by the jail release ticket and after enquiry at the jail found that it belonged to one Narain, who had been released on the 13th of April 1917 after undergoing a year's sentence of imprisonment under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In fact the jail register showed that Narain was the only prisoner released on the 13th of April 1917. Irtaza Husain at once proceeded to the village of Narain and arrested him and got from him information which led to the arrest of Radha Brahman. Radha gave more detailed information which led to the arrest of several persons. Radha turned an approver. On the materials thus collected the Police sent up several men to the Magistrate for trial on a charge of dacoity, six of whom were committed by the Magistrate to the Court of Session. It was stated then that 4 or more of the dacoits were absconding and could not be traced. Their names were known to the Police on the authority of Radha. The learned Sessions Judge of Mainpuri, Mr. Kisch, after hearing the evidence for both sides, convicted the accused before him of participation in the dacoity at the house of Khiali and sentenced them on the 10th of May 1919 to transportation for life. The appeals of the prisoners to this Court were duly heard and rejected. Subsequently two other men were arrested by the Police, namely, Sukhi and Sardar, and were put up before a Magistrate on the charge of dacoity. Radha, the approver, and some other persons were examined, and the Magistrate committed Sukhi and Sardar to take their trial before the Sessions Court. Immediately after the committal of Sukhi and Sardar a third person was arrested, namely, Sundar. He was also challaned before the Magistrate, who after hearing some of the witnesses committed him also to the Court of Session. The learned Sessions Judge of Mainpuri, not Mr. Kisch who had been transferred from the district, tried all the three men together, namely Sukhi, Sardar and Sundar; he convicted the first two and sentenced them to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. He acquitted Sundar, holding that the evidence for the prosecution had not brought the charge home to Sundar. The Government has appealed from the acquittal of Sunder and has filed a revision with regard to the sentences passed on Sukhi and Sardar.

I shall dispose of both the appeal and the revision application by one judgment. The revision application may be disposed of with a few words. No one appears on behalf of Sukhi and Sardar to show cause. The learned Sessions Judge has found, and I think correctly on the evidence in the case, that Sukhi and Sardar were guilty and that they did take part in the dacoity on the night of the 4th of February 1919. The dacoity, as I have mentioned already in the opening part of this judgment, was attended with brutal treatment of the inmates of the houses and was not an ordinary dacoity. The persons who participated in that dacoity do not deserve any consideration of leniency. It is unintelligible to me how the learned Sessions Judge, who tried Sukhi and Sardar, came to sentence them only to seven years' rigorous imprisonment without any attempt to make a distinction between their offence and that of their comrades, who were tried, convicted and sentenced by Mr. Kisch. In fact the present learned Judge does not even refer to the former trial. In my opinion it is highly reprehensible that men who are guilty of such brutal crimes as the dacoits who raided the houses of Khiali and illtreated the inmates of his household should be, after being found guilty, treated with leniency. To my mind the judgment of the learned Judge is highly unsatisfactory. It is a sketchy judgment and does not set out the facts or the reasoning in a manner that is required in a judgment of Sessions trials. In my opinion the sentences on Sukhi and Sardar should be the same as those that were passed against their comrades in the former trial, namely, transportation for life. I would, therefore, sentence both of them to transportation for life.

As to the case of Sundar I have read the whole evidence in the case with great care and have heard the learned Counsel on his behalf. I regret to say that the impression left on my mind by the record of the evidence taken by the learned Judge is that he has not paid that attention to the recording of evidence which is required in a case of importance like that of a dacoity with torture or with murder. The evidence leaves the impression on one's mind of having been recorded hastily, and there is no connection or system as to how one statement leads to another. The judgment, as far as it concerns Sundar, is really in a few sentences and is highly unsatisfactory. Now the evidence against Sundar consists of the statements of three persons, namely, Khiali, Radha and Bhikam. Khiali is the man at whose house the dacoity was committed. He says that he saw Sundar among the dacoits and that it was Sundar who was in a room tying up a bundle of clothes. Radha, the approver, mentioned Sundar in his first statement, recorded on the 21st of February 1919, and adhered to that statement throughout. Radha has made five statements and in all those five statements he has mentioned the name of Sundar. In fact if Radha is to be believed, Sundar was not an unimportant member of the gang. It was at the field of Sundar that the members of the gang met in the evening of the night of the dacoity. It is true that Radha says that he did not see Sundar in the room tying up a bundle of clothes; and upon the difference in the statements of the two men (namely Khiali and Radha) as to the tying up of a bundle of clothes by Sundar the learned Judge rejects the evidence of both Khiali and Radha. I am not prepared to agree with the learned Judge that the said difference in the two statements is such as to discredit the two witnesses entirely. It seems to me that Radha himself must have been busy in looting and getting property and had no time to think or see what his other comrades were doing. In fact this reason by itself is sufficient to explain the apparent discrepancy. Bhikam is the Mukhia of the village of Sundar. He swears that he saw a number of people at the field of Sundar about 6 in the evening of the 4th of February 1919. The learned Judge discards his evidence on the ground that Bhikam Singh made the statement under pressure of the Police. I have examined the statement of Bhikam Singh and I cannot find anything in it to show that he was persuaded by the Police to make a false statement. It is highly unlikely that Bhikam Singh would implicate an innocent man of his own village at the instance of the Police when there was no enmity between him and that man. I think the depositions of Khiali, Radha and Bhikam Singh are worthy of credit and they prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Sundar took part in the dacoity on the night of the 4th of February 1919 at the house of Khiali.

Before concluding the judgment I would also draw the attention of the learned Judge to an omission in the trial of the case. Khiali stated on oath that he had been taken to the jail and identified Sundar from among seven other under-trial prisoners. There are Police papers on the record to show that jail identification was demanded. The Committing Magistrate, it seems, forgot to send up the Deputy Magistrate before whom the identification of Sundar took place. But it was the duty of the learned Judge to have called that evidence before the conclusion of the trial. However, the omission to do so does not, in my opinion, weaken the case against Sundar or throw any doubt upon his guilt. I would, therefore, convict him and sentence him to transportation for life.

MEARS, C. J.—I agree that the appeal of the Government in the case of Sundar must be allowed and I also agree that the appropriate sentence is transporation for life.

As regards the other two men who were sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, I am also in agreement that the application for enhancement of sentence must be allowed and those men be sentenced to transporation for life.

The reasons why Mr. Justice Rafique and I have given separate judgments in this case is that both of us were dissatisfied with the way in which the learned Sessions Judge had dealt with the cases. To me it seemed to show a lack of thought and a lack of care and failure to appreciate how grave was the matter that was before him. But I thought it better that the substantial criticism should proceed from a Judge who has had a wide experience of the administration of criminal work here and knowledge of the procedure of the Courts in this country. For this reason I thought it better that Justice Rafique should be asked to pronounce the principal judgment whilst I pronounce the second judgment though I am entirely in accord with what he has said.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal of the Government as against Sundar be allowed. Sundar is convicted under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code and is sentenced under section 397 to transportation for life.

In the case of Sukhi and Sardar we direct that they be sentenced under section 397 of the Indian Penal Code to transportation for life, the period to run from the date from which they are undergoing the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 338, 339—Pardon tendered to accused—Order directing trial—Jurisdiction—Procedure.

At the conclusion of a Sessions trial the Sessions Judge directed the commitment for trial of two of the accused to whom a pardon had been tendered by the District Magistrate:

Held, (1) that the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to make the order; [p. 775, col. 1.]

(2) that on being placed on trial the accused would first plead their pardons and it would be for the trial Court to decide whether or not the pardons had been forfeited. [p. 775, col. 1.]

Revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 6th March 1919.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Herbert (Assistant Legal Remembrancer), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The relevent facts are that Chanan Singh and Musammat Bishni were tendered pardons by order of the District Magistrate on the 3rd October 1918. The case in connection with which the pardons were tendered was duly heard by the Sessions Judge, who at the conclusion of the trial directed the commitment of both of these persons to the Sessions for trial on the original charge, i. e, one under section 302, Indian Penal Code. Chanan Singh and Musammat Bishni have preferred separate petitions against this order directing their commitment. I have heard Lala Jagan Nath for Chanan Singh and Mr. Devi Dayal for Musammat Bishni, while Mr. Herbert has addressed me on behalf of the Crown.

That the learned Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to pass the order he has passed is clear, and it is obvious that most of the grounds taken by Lala Jagan Nath are based on a misunderstanding of the order complained of. This case is, as near as may be, on all fours with that of Crown v. Kadu (1) and relied on by Mr. Herbert.

I am unable to see any justification for interfering with the order of the Sessions Judge. When the petitioners are placed on their trial they will first of all plead their pardons, and it will be for the trial Court to decide whether or not the said pardons have been forfeited. I dismiss both petitions.

Petition dismissed.

Application against the order passed by the Officiating Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 23rd December 1919, affirming that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Patna City, dated the 18th November 1919.

Messrs. Akbari and Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against the order of the Magistrate of the 18th of November 1918, dismissing the complaint of the petitioner under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order, on motion to the Sessions Judge, was upheld by him on the 23rd of December 1919. The complaint was under section 403 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of a sum of Rs. 2,000 said to have been misappropriated by the accused, who was an agent and a servant of the petitioner's master.

The ground stated by the Magistrate for dismissing the complaint was that the case was one of a civil nature for adjustment of accounts, and not of a criminal nature. The learned Sessions Judge amplified this ground in his order of the 23rd December 1919, stating "that in the present case the accused was dealing with the money of his master as an agent and had got the money honestly."

The learned Sessions Judge has also referred to his order of the same date passed in respect of another complaint filed by the petitioner against the accused under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code.

that on the same date, namely, the 18th of November, the petitioner lodged two complaints against the accused, one in respect of defalcation said to have been committed by him in regard to Rs. 945 alleged to have been given to the accused by the master of the complainant to open business at Badaya with the firm of one Pahari Singh in March 1917. In that case also it was held both by the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge that the accused dealt with certain firms on behalf of the petitioner's master and was liable for accounts and that no criminal charge would lie. The petitioner moved this Court against the order of the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge in both the aforesaid cases. His application to this Court in the case under section 406 was rejected by a Division Bench of this Court presided over by Mullick and Sultan Ahmed, JJ., on the 2rd of February 1920. The application in regard to the present case, however, was admitted by the said learned Judges by their order of the 23rd of February 1920 and a Rule was issued upon the District Magistrate and upon Sarjoo Saw to shew cause why further enquiry should not be ordered. The District Magistrate has shown no cause. The accused now appears through Mr. Janak Kishore, a Vakil of this Court.

The question for consideration is whether the complaint in this case raises a question of account between the petitioner and his agent, or whether it is in respect of a specific sum said to have been entrusted to the accused by a firm with which the complainant's master had dealings in order to be handed over to the petitioner's master. Paragraph 4 of the petition sets out the duties of the accused which he had to perform in connection with the firm of Mahabir Lal, master of the complainant. The accused, as an agent of Mahabir Lal, was to go out to the said firms of Ranigunj, Barh, etc., to purchase grains etc., with the money kept in those firms and to get them sold at a profitable rate through those firms. He had also to bring money and accounts from those firms to the complainant's master's firm at Mansurganj, Patna City. The complaint against the accused in respect of Rs. 945 said to have been made over to him in 1917 related to his failure to deposit the said sum with the firm of Pahari Singh of Badaya or to carry on business with the firm on behalf of the complainant. That was possibly a matter of adjustment of accounts between the parties. In the present case the charge against the accused laid in the complaint is that on the 6th of Aswin Sudi Sambat 1976, corresponding to the 30th of September 1919, the firm of Sant Lal-Makund Lal made over to the accused Rs. 2,000 out of Rs. 3,762 belonging to the complainant, which was in deposit with the firm of Sant Lal Makund Lal. The accused was asked to make over the said sum to the complainant's master at Mansurganj, Patna City. It has already been said that, according to the case of the complainant, it was one of the duties of the accused to carry money and accounts from the several firms mentioned in paragraph 4 of the complainant's petition to the firm of the petitioner's master. The complainant's case is stated in the following terms:—

"The accused, after receiving the money to be handed over to the complainant, deposited the same in the firm of Chhatu Das Kanhai Lal at Barh in the name of the complainants's master's firm on the 20th Aswin Sudi corresponding to the 6th October 1919, two days after he again withdrew that money from the firm of Chhatu Das-Kanhai Lal at Barh, telling them that he was carrying the money to be made over to the firm of Mahabir Lall. But on the 25th of October 1919 when he appeared before the complainant's master at Mansurganj, Patna City, he made over the Chitha of the Barh account and on being asked whether he had brought any money from the Ranigunj firm, he denied having done so. On Kartik Badi 2rd Chottay, complainant's master, came to know from Mahabir Dandidar that the accused had actually taken out from the firm at Ranigunj Rs. 2,000 to be brought to the complainant's master. The accused in the meantime had gone away on the plea that his daughter was to be married. The complainant deputed a man to find him out and to enquire about the aforesaid Rs. 2,000 said to have been taken by him; but he was not found at his house."

The above allegations do not necessarily involve an adjustment of accounts, and the complaint could not be thrown out on that ground alone. It was open to the Magistrate in case of doubt to hold an enquiry under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure before summoning the accused, in order to find out whether a prima facie case was made out or whether the accused should have been summoned or not. I am, however, not satisfied as to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate at Patna City to entertain the complaint in question. The accused is said to have received the money from the firm of Sant Lal at Ranigunj. He deposited that amount in the name of the complainant's master in the firm of Chattu Das-Kanhai Lal at Barh. He again took out that money from the firm of Chhatu Das-Kanhai Lal at Barh. Since then it is not known where the accused took the money to. Under section 403, Indian Penal Code, the offence is complete the moment the accused receives or retains the money with a dishonest motive of appropriating it or converting it to his own use. The offence was, therefore, complete at Barh, where he received the money and has not since then accounted for it. It is true that the money was to be made over to the petitioner's master, Mahabir Lal, at Mansurgunj, Patna City, within the jurisdiction of the Patna City Magistrate, but the failure to hand over the money in respect of which the offence of misappropriation was already committed is not a necessary ingredient to constitute an offence of criminal misappropriation, and is, therefore, not a consequence which has ensued by reason of anything done by the accused. Section 179 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, therefore, has no application to the present case. It is also clear from the express provisions made under section 181, clause (2), of the Code of Criminal Procedure that the Legislature never intended that the words "consequence which has ensued" occurring in section 179 should apply to criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust. If that were so, there was no necessity of an express provision in clause (2) of section 181. That clause provides that the offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be enquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the person by whom the offence was committed. The complaint in this case does not allege that any part of the sum of Rs. 2,000 said to have been misappropriated by the accused was received or retained by him within the jurisdiction of the Patna City Court. The view is supported by the decisions of the Calcutta and the Madras High Courts, viz., the cases of Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha (1) and Rambilas, In re (2). There has been difference of opinion in the Allahabad High Court, vide Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (3), George Langridge v. Grace Atkins (4), Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (5). The cases in Allahabad were all decided by Judges sitting singly and have been dealt with in the aforesaid Madras and Calcutta Courts cases.

For the reasons given in the decisions of the latter Courts, with which I entirely agree, I am of opinion that the present application was beyond the competency of the Magistrate of Patna City to entertain. I would, therefore, dismiss this application, and leave the complainant to take any course that he may be advised.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Further inquiry, order for, when to be made—Notice to accused, whether necessary.

Before an order for further enquiry is passed to the prejudice of an accused person who has been discharged, it is proper that he should be called upon to show cause why such order should not be passed

An order directing further enquiry should not be passed where on the face of the order of discharge it does not appear that the order is perfunctory or foolish.

Revision from the order of the District Magistrate, Sialkot, dated the 13th December 1918.

Mr. Kharak Singh, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner was charged under section 406, Indian Penal Code, and an order of discharge was recorded by Pandit Shambhu Nath, Magistrate, 2nd Class, on 7th September 1918. The District Magistrate, Mr. C. F. Usborne, by an order, dated the 13th December 1918, set aside the order of discharge and ordered a fresh trial by the Magistrate of the Ilaqa. The petitioner has come up on revision to this Court.

The first ground urged on the behalf of the petitioner is that the order of the Magistrate is irregular as it has been passed behind the petitioner's back without any notice being given to him. In my opinion there is force in this ground. It has always been held by this Court and other High Courts that a Court should not pass an order prejudicial to a person without giving him an opportunity of meeting the case against him. It was held in the case of Dulla v. Empress (1) that before an order for further enquiry is passed to the prejudice of an accused person, it is proper that he should be called upon to show cause why such order should not be passed. This is a very salutary rule of practice which has been acted upon in almost all the High Courts, and though it is not specifically laid down in the law that a notice must necessarily go under these circumstances, it has always been held to be a proper course to adopt. Especially in a case where on the face of the order of discharge it does not appear that the order is perfunctory or foolish, a superior Court ought not to set aside an order passed by a competent Court. If any authority is necessary for this proposition, it is to be found in a Full Bench case Emperor v. Kiru (2) in which Mr. Justice Kensington is reported to have observed at page 34* that no invariable rule can be laid down, but speaking generally further enquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete. None of these circumstances are to be found in the present case. In this case it appears from the judgment that the learned Magistrate has thoroughly examined the evidence given in the case and has also taken into consideration the record of the execution proceedings. Reading the judgment of the learned Magistrate, which, in my opinion, is a careful and exhaustive judgment, I think the order under revision was uncalled for.

For the reasons above set forth I set aside the order directing fresh trial. Revision allowed.

PERRY v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, whether illegal—Practice—Evidence, weight of, admissibility of—Statement of unreliable witness corroborated by reliable witness, whether can be accepted.

An offence mentioned in section 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act may be committed by an insolvent either before or after adjudication of insolvency, and the section not only applies to cases of destruction of an insolvent's books of account before they are produced before the Official Assignee but also to cases of destruction in the Official Assignee's office after the latter has taken possession of the documents. [p. 792, col. 1.]

The rule that a charge under section 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act cannot be maintained if the charge is not framed in pursuance of the notice under section 104 of the Act, is subject to the principle that no error or irregularity in a charge will call for a reversal of an order unless it in fact has occasioned a failure of justice, and in determining whether this is the case, the Court shall have regard to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings. [p. 792, col. 2.]

If an accused person receives notice that the prosecution may seek to prove against him either of two alternative intentions, he cannot, as he must be ready to meet a charge in respect to both, be prejudiced by a charge of having had both intentions. [p. 792, col. 2, p. 793, col. 1.]

It is generally necessary that an insolvent should have notice of the charge which it is proposed to make against him. A notice having reference to removing or causing to remove certain documents is sufficient notice of a charge of preventing the production of those documents within the meaning of section 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, inasmuch as removing a document is a mode of preventing its production. [p. 793, col. 1.]

A Court of appeal with all the materials before it can arrive at a finding of intention if this has been omitted per incuriam by the trial Judge, provided it is not a jury case. [p. 793, col. 2.]

The examination of an insolvent purporting to be made under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and without any objection on the part of the insolvent is voluntary and is admissible in evidence in a criminal proceeding against him under section 103 of the Act. [p. 794, col. 1.]

It is the practice to examine an insolvent under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. [p. 794, col. 1.]

The Court has power to examine an insolvent even if section 36 is not applicable, for the Court must have full control over the insolvent. There is no illegal compulsion in such examination. [p. 794, col. 2.]

In a criminal proceeding against the insolvent something said by him in other proceedings in the insolvency may be relied on as admissions of fact under section 17 of the Evidence Act. Being admissions, they are relevant and admissible, unless they are excluded by sections 18 to 31 of that Act. Even if the examination of the insolvent is not authorised, the answers given on such examination without objection are nonetheless admissible. Even if there was compulsion not being of the kind which excludes a confession, then under the Evidence Act the fact of compulsion might affect the weight of the evidence but not its admissibility. [p. 794, cols 1 & 2.]

It is open to a Court to accept part of the story of one witness who is not reliable, if it be corroborated by another who is reliable. [p. 799, col. 2.]

Appeal against the following decision of Mr. Justice Rankin, dated the 6th June 1919:—

"In this case I have been trying an insolvent under special procedure applicable only to an insolvent by which a Bankruptcy Judge has to take upon himself the duties of a Magistrate and to decide what is in all material particulars a criminal case to be treated as a criminal case. The prosecution has been in the hands of the Official Assignee, and this Court has expended a great deal of time which is badly wanted with regard to other matters in trying out the accusations which are at present before me. I should like to say that I think this procedure is a very unhappy one. It would be infinitely better if the practice were that upon proper report being made by the Official Assignee, the Bankruptcy Judge should, if necessary, make an order for prosecution which should be carried out in the ordinary way and in the ordinary Courts. That is the practice in England and I hope it will be the practice in this country before long. There are many advantages in that, one being that, in the ordinary course of criminal investigation, the prosecution can get more assistance and more trained assistance. The other is that in a proper case, the accused can in a presidency town be sent before a jury. The matters which I have been trying are matters which would be infinitely better tried before a jury; the jury would hear the evidence, they would hear what is alleged by Counsel on both sides, the Judge would sum up to them; and the question whether suspicion has passed into proof, and the question of credibility between one witness and another would be left to them for their decision without giving reasons. That course would have been specially preferable in this case, because it is idle to shut one's eyes to the fact that the insolvent is not really the only person intimately concerned in the matter.

Before proceeding to give my reasons I should like to put on the record the facts with regard to Mr. Perkins. Construing as best I could, sections 103 and 104 of the Insolvency Act with the relevant sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, I made up my mind that the course most correct and fairest to the accused was to have the prosecution put all their witnesses in the box before I framed the charges; that the accused should be entitled to reserve all cross examination until after the charges were framed, and should not even be called on to show cause against the framing of the charges until after he had heard all the evidence that was going to be given against him. Unfortunately owing to a fire having taken place in the business premises of Mr. Svamvur, Mr. Svamvur could not be brought to Calcutta for some days and in the meantime Mr. Perkins had to sail for England. I was not minded in the stress of these days to prevent, if I could prevent, Mr. Perkins from leaving by the boat which he had arranged to leave by. The result was that Mr. Perkins' evidence has had to be ruled out. So far as I am concerned I heard the evidence of Mr. Perkin's and I took it down nearly a month ago, but from the moment it appeared that he would not be cross examined, I have not looked at my note. I have done my best to forget it altogether and for all purposes Mr. Perkins' evidence is out of the case.

Now I will commence first by considering the position of this insolvent, as regards his method of business and his method of keeping accounts. The main book of accounts is a book which is partly a cash book and partly a ledger. When one comes to look at the cash part of it, one finds that there are no details as regards dates at all. It is obviously a very inartistic cash book and a very unsatisfactory cash book upon the view most favourable to the insolvent. As regards the ledger, that looks more satisfactory but the insolvent himself says that it was written up within the last two or three months. As regards the appearance of the book, from an Official Receiver's point of view, it undoubtedly looks suspicious but that matter is not directly before me, nor can I decide on it. The next thing is the insolvent says that he never kept any stock book at all. From the earliest moment of which I have any trace, both before and throughout this prosecution, the insolvent has always immediately and consistently denied that he ever kept anything corresponding to a stock book. This is in itself a somewhat curious circumstance, if it be true, as the insolvent was trading in jewellery. There is a bill book, there is an approval and an inspection book, about which no comments have been made and which I think are in order. As regards another book which appears now with the first pages torn and with a series of entries on page 26, the prosecution's case is that it was a sort of stock book: the insolvent's case is that he bought a lot of account books at one time chiefly at an auction, that he used to tear off pages from time to time and used them as he happened to require. His case is that that page 26 was a copy of 2 invoices of Benzimra; that the previous pages had been torn off for casual purposes because he did not attribute much value to the book which he bought with a lot of others. Why these invoices of Benzimra should be copied and these only I have not had explained, but so far as regards an invoice copy book or a stock book there was practically nothing in existence according to the insolvent's case. As regards his cash book the insolvent's statement is that the diary (there were two diaries undoubtedly for 1918 and 1919) was his original cash book, that from these entries in the diary, there was what he calls a rough cash book, which I gather to have been a bundle of papers; that the entries in Exhibit B, the book which was produced, come from those two sources. Another book, however, was found upon the search. It now has pages torn off at the beginning and, as has been pointed out this morning, also pages torn off at the end; and the allegation of the prosecution is that pages at the beginning were inspected at the search on the 6th and were seen to contain entries such as would appear in a cash book, as distinct from a ledger, or daybook or any other sort of book. The insolvent's case is that this was another book from which pages were torn as required, that it was not kept and entered as a book of account at all. At the search another blank book of account was discovered: this one is intact. I do not forget that the insolvent kept invoices and other papers and multifarious papers that have not been catalogued. Still looking only at the uncontested facts as to books, from the point of view of bankruptcy so far as book-keeping is concerned, the case starts with a very considerable deal of suspicion. The matter is not improved by the fact that in an action which the insolvent brought against a certain Rajah claiming to have sold him jewellery with the exception of two bills, no documents material to the present purpose were disclosed, and in cross-examination the insolvent started off with an answer that he kept no books at all. Mr. Ghose has argued before me to-day that if one considers the issue in the case, it is not impossible that the affidavit of documents disclosed all that was relevant to the issue; that the answer about keeping no books at all may have been intended not to be taken at the foot of the letter but as referring to the particular question whether he kept a book which showed his own purchases or his sales; hence that these matters ought not to tell against the insolvent. Though my first impression was very different, I am minded to agree with Mr. Ghose upon that point but if all the explanations be true which are required to explain the insolvent's evidence in cross examination in that action, they certainly do not assist to negative what any sensible person must think obvious, that this man when he became insolvent did so with a very fishy set of books.

Now the adjudication order in this case was made on the 5th March. On the day before the adjudication order the insolvent had received a telegram from a firm or person called Babumall of Delhi from whom he had bought certain jewellery, and it appears that he had paid part only of the full price of the jewellery and had given a post dated-cheque for the balance which cheque had fallen due on the 4th March; the cheque not having been honoured, the insolvent got a telegram the effect of which was to say that unless it was met at once, the case would be taken to Court for cheating. At the same time there was pending against the insolvent a motion for arrest before judgment on the part of the creditor Benzimra and after certain adjournments on the 6th March the motion came on. By that time he had been adjudicated an insolvent and nothing more could be done. Some complaint was made before me that the adjournments were obtained by concealing from the Court the fact that he had for more than a week before contemplated making himself an insolvent. I am not inclined to pay any attention to that complaint as a matter of prejudice. However the matter may stand—and I say nothing to belittle the extreme desirability of professional gentlemen being frank with the Court when asking for an adjournment—I cannot think it was supposed that any Judge, on being told that a man was on the next day to be adjudicated an insolvent, would make an order for his arrest before judgment, in order that it might take effect before adjudication; and, therefore, I am not disposed to pay any attention at all to that particular complaint.

On the 5th March two important incidents occurred in regard to which I confess I have no doubt at all. When a person is adjudicated an insolvent, all his assets and in particular all his books of account vest in, and have to be taken charge of, by the Official Assignee. This Court has for many years waged an unequal struggle with insolvent debtors, and for the last year or more it has been the rule as regards those debtors who come to be adjudicated on their own petition that before the adjudication order is made (in India I understand bankruptcy is regarded as a privilege), the debtor should go before the Official Assignee and be examined and make over to him all his books of account, and should get a slip from the Official Assignee to that effect which he may take to the Registrar. It is the practice and duty of the Registrar also to examine into the question whether the books of account have all been given up before the adjudication order is made. Now, that rule of this Court is not an Act of Parliament, and, therefore, one has to consider from a technical point of view somewhat carefully the effect of what may be done by an insolvent upon these occasions. For the moment I will pass that legal question by and I will examine the question simply in relation to the facts of this case. The Official Assignee says that when the insolvent was before him accompanied by his solicitor, he asked him, when he produced the book which I will call Exhibit B, whether he had any other books, and he was told No, that the business was a small business, he did not keep a clerk, and so forth.

The evidence on the other side was given by Mr. Mandal, that the Official Assignee asked the insolvent whether he had any other cash book and was told No. At that time Mr. Mandal knew the position of the insolvent as regards his books; at any rate he knew that he kept a bill book, approval book, and such like. He had had the cash book, Exhibit B, copied in his office and he says that he was intending at a later stage to make out a detailed list of books and hand them over to the Court. Now I think it is perfectly hopeless to suggest that when one book which was a cash book was produced before the Official Assignee, whose daily duty is to deal with these matters and to ask all debtors whether they have discharged all the books of account which they ought to disgorge, the Official Assignee would go and specially ask for another cash book when he has got one already and would omit to enquire for other books. It is incredible that the question, therefore, was anything save what the Official Assignee says it was, "Have you got any other books?" meaning books of account, and the insolvent with his attorney standing by his side answers that question in the negative and the Official Assignee gives the order for them to go to the Registrar stating that they had disclosed one book as having satisfied his requirements. The matter does not stop there; the parties go before the Registrar to make the adjudication order, and Mr. Remfry is the gentleman who really originated the suggestion that books of account should be obtained before a debtor is adjudicated on his own petition. There is no doubt from the evidence given by Mr. Remfry, and the evidence given by Mr. Mandal himself, that the question was put in the insolvent's presence to Mr. Mandal, "Is this the only book of account?" Mr. Mandal tells me that he answered "Yes." What is the case made in defence of this? Let me consider it. Mr. Mandal's evidence is that although he knew there were these other books, the bill book, the approval book and so on ,he regarded these books as not being the main book of account. There is a distinction he says between the main book and the subsidiary books which he calls "feeders" to the main book, and he states that he thought that at the time the adjudication order was being made only the main book was required. When a person is asked a plain question, is this the only book of account, it is idle to make a distinction and say "I divide the debtor's books of account into the main book, and subsidiary or feeder books." It is perfectly obvious that the intention of the Registrar, before he made that adjudication order, was not to allow the insolvent or his solicitor to make up their minds as to which was important and which was subsidiary, but to get all the books of account before making the adjudication order. If there was any doubt, a frank statement would have solved it. The suggestion that the answer was made in good faith I reject absolutely and altogether. It is absurd to suppose that for purposes of the Insolvency Court the main book of account is the only thing that may be required. As a matter of fact the detailed accounts, the "subsidiary" books of account, from which entries are posted into the main books of account, are as important for every purpose of bankruptcy as the main book. Mr, Mandal suggests that the debtors have 30 days in which to file their schedule and he thought in the course of those 30 days it would be time enough to produce the other books. The two things have nothing to do with one another: the main book of account is essential for the schedule just as the others are. The business of the insolvent is, (and every attorney knows it perfectly well) first of all when he is asked a plain question, to answer truly. Secondly, to give up from the start, if required, the books of account which are demanded. Throughout this case, I say it frankly, when I have been considering the conflict between the evidence of Mr. Mandal and that of the Official Assignee, I have not been able to prevent myself from remembering the way in which Mr. Mandal answered the perfectly plain, and in no sort of way ambiguous, question which was put to him by the Registrar. Anyhow on the 5th a plain and common question is untruly answered twice.

Now, on the 5th another thing of importance to notice is this: on the occasion of going before the Official Assignee, certain jewellery which the insolvent had got from Babumull was handed over to the Official Assignee as part of the assets.

On the next day the creditor, Mr. Svamvur, a representative of Benzimra, found out that this man had been adjudicated, and he naturally enough went with his attorney to make enquiries as to the position of their debt. They go to the Official Assignee and they discover that this book has been put forward as the only book of account. They are not satisfied with this. Sometime in the middle of the day the Official Assignee orders a search to be made of the insolvent's room at the Grand Hotel to see whether he has any other books of account or assets or what not, and the Official Assignee considers that the search should take place in the presence of Mr. Mandal; so Mr. Svamvur, Mr. Arnfield, assistant to the Official Assignee, Mr. Perkins, solicitor of the creditor, and Mr. Mandal went to the insolvent's room at the Grand Hotel. They did not find him there. After waiting sometime Mr. Svamvur found him at lunch and brought him back to the room, and they were all admitted. In the course of that search undoubtedly a large number of books. and papers were found to be in the room. As to what was found to be in the room one thing is absolutely clear, viz, that two diaries, one for 1918 and one for 1919, were then found. These two diaries appeared in the list which was taken by Mr. Mandal. Mr. Svamvur says that the book which now has writing only on page 26 (Exhibit F) was up to that page full of entries with the exception of certain blank leaves in between different entries. He said he immediately remarked upon it to Mr. Perkins, and said that it was a stock book and the key to the position. Another book is a book, Exhibit G, which Svamvur says he looked at, and found to be a cash book, with a good many pages from the beginning filled up with entries. Mr. Mandal from the commencement of the search insisted on behalf of his client that as he had been threatened with prosecution by Babumull of Delhi certain telegrams and papers ought not to be taken away by the Official Assignee, and among these was a press copy letter book which contained copy of a telegram sent by the insolvent on the 5th March, the same day as that on which he was adjudicated, in response to a telegram of the 4th, which I have already mentioned. Now, as regards that matter the first thing that took place no doubt was a discussion about the list. Mr. Mandal says he wanted a detailed list; he wanted a detailed list which would not only show what books were taken away, but the number of pages that were entered therein. That is referred to by Mr. Svamvur as though Mr. Mandal was insisting upon taking a detailed schedule of every document. Mr. Perkins seems to have been a man of some sense because at his suggestion the proper thing was done, viz, a rough list was made out as best as could be done; then the documents were put into a box and taken under lock and key to the Official Assignee's office. Mr. Mandal's evidence is that he argued first of all the question of the principle of the list and when he found he would only get a rough list, he took little or no further part in the proceedings until towards the end when he desired to make a list for himself. Mr. Mandal also says (I think it rather curious) that he insisted upon the box being sealed, but that is denied by Svamvur. Now, I have considered very carefully the evidence of what took place at the search, and I have come to the conclusion, and am absolutely satisfied, that the diary of 1918 was found at the search on the 6th and was missing at 11 o'clock the next morning. I am also absolutely satisfied that the pages prior to page 26 in Exhibit F were also found at the search as Mr. Svamvur says, and that they were missing the next morning at 11 o'clock. As regards the cash book also I believe Mr. Svamvur, but I prefer to deal with this when I have discussed the other incidents of this case.

Now, the next morning Mr. Svamvur came at 11 o'clock to examine the contents of the box. The Official Assignee says that he arranged with him to do so the night before after the box had come back to the Official Assignee's office. As to what happened at 11 o'clock there is little occasion to consider matters in dispute at all. Mr. Mandal admits that later on the same day he was told about the missing diary and the missing pages in the stock book. The evidence for the prosecution is that Mr. Svamvur discovered the diary and certain loose pages which I have not mentioned hitherto to be missing, that he told the Official Assignee and went off to get Mr. Perkins. He and Mr. Perkins came back, and Mr. Perkins, the Official Assignee and Mr. Svamvar went into the matter, and discovered what was missing. I care nothing whether the diary was discovered absolutely at 11 o'clock or a few minutes later when Mr. Perkins was present; I care nothing whether the missing stock book was discovered before Mr. Perkins arrived that morning or after Mr. Perkins came in. There is no sort of reason to suggest, if these documents in the box were tampered with, that they were tampered with more than once. It is perfectly certain that at 11 o'clock the diary and, as I think, the pages from stock book too were missing.

Now, I have to consider whether I am satisfied that on the morning of the 7th the insolvent himself was actively engaged in committing an offence under section 103 first of all with regard to these two books. According to the evidence for the accused, at 10 o'clock on the morning after the search, the insolvent arrived at the attorney's office and wanted the attorney to write a letter to the firm in Delhi which had sent him a telegram on the 4th, threatening to take him to Court for cheating. Mr. Mandal says he looked up Exhibit H, the list of documents which he had made in the Hotel the previous day, to find the date of the wire in reply to this. The telegram receipt was put down as a "telegram receipt" without a date, and they wanted for the purposes of replying to know that date, as the date, so Mr. Mandal says, was essential. He says also that he would have liked to have a look at the wording of the telegram and that he was going to be busy at 10-30 before the Registrar as well as the whole of that day, and that was why he and the insolvent left the office and called at the Official Assignee's office at about 10-5. He says they went first of all to a waiting room next to the Official Assignee's room; that Mr. Mandal went along to Mr. Arnfield's room to ask Arnfield for inspection of the copy telegram which was in the press copy letter book, and that Arnfield refused to give it to him until he got the Official Assignee's permission. He says Arnfield suggested that they should wait for the Official Assignee to come; he would not be long; and they stayed there with Mr. Arnfield for some ten minutes or so when they were notified by the peon, who had been told to do so, of the Official Assignee's arrival. He says he went in and complained to the Official Assignee that he had been unable to get what he wanted without the Official Assignee's permission; the Official Assignee said: "Very well, I will give you my permission, so you will have your inspection." He says that thereupon he said: "I can't take it now as I have got to appear before the Registrar"; in the result Perry was left to inspect this document and Mandal went to his appointment before the Registrar. That is the case for the accused.

Now the first thing one has, I think, to remember in this particular matter is this: that whatever dispute there is with regard to the stock book pages, there is absolutely no doubt with regard to the 1918 diary that it was in the box on the evening of the 6th, and that it was not there on the morning of the 7th at 11 O'clock. No doubt about that at all. Another thing there is no doubt about is that though Arnfield is not a party before me, upon the evidence which is given between the parties who are before me it is idle to suggest that Arnfield is not involved in the disappearance of that diary. It was given into his charge by way of special precaution to put into his tiffin room; he was given a key, and this book was absent the next morning. There has, therefore, been a loss of at any rate one book, and that loss must have been connived at by Arnfield.

The next thing that I have to consider is, what were Mandal and Perry doing at the Official Assignee's office at 10-5 on the morning of the 7th? This matter is complicated by a dispute as to whether there had been on the previous evening at about 5 o'clock an interview between Mandal and the Official Assignee. Mandal says that he saw the Official Assignee about this matter after the search towards 5 o'clock on the 6th; that he mentioned certain documents having reference to the Delhi case, including the press copy letter book; that he asked the Official Assignee to let him have these documents, and that the Official Assignee had agreed provided that he would write a letter asking for them. There is a letter dated 6th March to that effect from Mandal's office, and it is prefectly clear that that letter was delivered by a peon and signed for in the peon book by one of the Official Assignee's clerks, not on the 6th, but on the 7th. The Official Assignee denies everything with regard to that interview; he says that he took no notice of the date mentioned in the letter, he did not notice that its statements were false and as a matter of fact he had forgotten all about the letter. Now the question is, what were Mandal and Perry doing at the Official Assignee's office at 10 5 the next morning, and upon that question I do not think that the dispute about the letter has any great materiality. I am inclined to think that the accused's case is distinctly worse with the letter and with the interview than without them. I am quite satisfied that for Arnfield to be at the office at the time that he was the next morning was an unusual circumstance. It was so unusual that the peon, Baman, who give evidence before me and who, I think, was a distinctly honest witness, thought it so early for Arnfield that he looked at the clock to see whether he had gone wrong as regards his notion of time. The Official Assignee says that 10-30 was the hour for Mr. Arnfield to come to office just as it was the hour for himself to come. Not unnaturally the clerks, when asked whether the Official Assignee or Arnfield came first, give different answers. The bulk of the evidence appears to be that Arnfield usually came after the Official Assignee, but I attach no importance to this general comparison of their habits. If both these gentlemen had the same time for presenting themselves at the office no doubt one would come before the other one day, and another day the position would be reversed, and clerks and peons would be apt to generalise from particular instances. I accept it from the Official Assignee, who must know that in the ordinary course of things Arnfield's hour was 10 30. It has been said, and it is prefectly true, that there is a tradition which has got into the rules of the Court that the office hours of the Official Assignee are from 10 o'clock. In previous years this hour may have been observed by all the staff. Also I do not doubt that long before 10-30 peons, chaprassis and sweepers, to dust and clear, present themselves. It is in evidence that by 10-15 one of the clerks, the cashier, is in the habit of presenting himself. For the moment what I am concerned with is this, that on the morning on which papers were missing with Arnfield's connivance, Arnfield came to the office much before his usual time.

Now the next thing is, Is the fact of Mandal and Perry being there at 10-5 a circumstance which ought to be regarded as suspicious? It is not proved before me as facts in a criminal case should be proved that Mandal knew that there was never any chance of seeing the Official Assignee at his office before 10-30. Again 10 o'clock itself is not an extraordinary or very unusual hour for a person who wants to see another, to try and find out if he is there. But I do think that the story which Mr. Mandal gives as regards the cause of that visit is distinctly absurd. There had been this search the day before and one would have thought that when Perry arrived at Mandal's office at 10 o'clock, these parties would have had something to discuss. I am told Mandal had not seen Perry overnight. I am told that Perry started at once about replying to Delhi, that Exhibit H was got out and that it was noticed that the date of the telegram which Perry had sent was not mentioned. Reading the evidence for the defence fairly, it is at any rate alleged that one essential matter for which they went to the Official Assignee's office then and there (seeing Mandal was busy at 10-30 before the Registrar) was to get the date of that telegram. I am very sorry to say so, but I have been also absolutely unable to convince myself that this story about the date of that telegram is anything except an afterthought. The position is this:—on the 5th Perry had been adjudicated and had handed over his jewellery in the presence of his solicitor to the Official Assignee; and on that day he sent a telegram to Babumull in reply to the threat of taking action against him for cheating contained in the telegram of the previous day. The telegram is as follows:—"Wire received—Refer my letter 13th instant—Your goods delivered Court—Letter follows warn you against proceedings—Serious consequence will follow if you take proceedings." Now it was put to Mr. Mandal whether he thought that that telegram was the sort of telegram that Perry himself could draw up and he accepted the suggestion that it looked as if it was drawn up by a lawyer, and he also accepted the suggestion that if it was drawn up by a lawyer, that lawyer must be himself. Although in his answers with regard to this matter he went just short of actually saying avowedly "Yes, I know I drafted that telegram for Perry," it is impossible to read those answers carefully, as I have done, without seeing that it is perfectly clear that that telegram was drafted with Mr. Mandal's assistance. It is to be observed that the purport of the telegram was to assure the person at Delhi or at any rate to give him pause, by telling him that the goods had been delivered to Court. Mr. Mandal's evidence is that he originally intended to write the letter on the 6th, and as I understand his evidence this letter would have been posted on the 6th but for the time occupied in the search. He wanted to put in that letter that the debt had been admitted in the insolvent's schedule or list of creditors and, therefore, everything was above board; that he had meant to file on the 6th but the search prevented him. Now I am told on the morning of the 7th at 10 o'clock the insolvent came about the important matter of the letter and that the insolvent did not recollect that he had sent his reply by telegram on the same day—two days before—on which he had been adjudicated and had handed up the jewellery, that Mandal did not recollect that he had drafted a reply on the same day as the adjudication order was made. That he did not recollect that he had intended to send this letter on the previous day and had been prevented by the search. That these two persons at 10 o'clock went over to the Official Assignee's office for the purpose of getting the date. I find it impossible to accept this story. So far as Perry is concerned, he presumably is not adjudicated every day, presumably he is not threatened with criminal proceedings every day, and how Perry could possibly doubt having sent that telegram on the 6th, two days before, I say how he could have been in any doubt as to when he had sent it, passes my comprehension altogether. It is said about Mandal that he is a very busy man and undoubtedly he is. His letter book shows a great many letters written in it on the 5th. It is also true that this telegram appears to have been despatched not from Mr. Mandal's office but from the Grand Hotel. Mr. Mandal, when he gave his assistance, may very well have given it not meaning to charge Perry for it. Even so, it is quite incredible from the point of the answer "The goods have been deposited in Court"—that Mr. Mandal did not recollect that it was sent after they had been deposited, so that the telegram could only have been sent on the 5th or 6th. Perry must have known all about it and the idea that either of these two persons took the trouble to walk across the street to find out whether the telegram was sent on the 5th or 6th, is a suggestion I reject in toto. The Official Assignee says that when he saw Mandal on the morning of the 7th, he was told that he wanted a copy of a letter in the press copy letter book. I am not going to take it against the accused that what was asked for that morning is distinct from the copy, of the telegram in the press copy letter book. I think there is nothing in that discrepancy at all. The Official Assignee says that what was asked for was a copy and one thing that makes the matter suspicious was the fact that Mandal had come ostensibly to ask for a copy but no copy was obtained in the end. Mr. Mandal says that he will not swear whether he asked for a copy or for inspection. What happened was Mandal being pressed for time having to go to the Registrar's office, Perry was left to do what was required and according to the evidence for the defence what Perry brought back to his attorney was a slip of paper with the date of the telegram on it and Mr. Mandal says that he (Perry) told him the substance of the telegram. The idea that either of these two parties did not know the substance of the telegram I reject altogether and, therefore, I am bound to say that even if the natural desire of a solicitor is to see a document before doing anything else in the matter, the case for the defence about getting this essential date does add a very strong element of suspicion to an already suspicious case. Moreover there was nothing, whatever essential about the exact date, nor indeed did it matter two pence to anybody for any purpose. The reply would have been just as good without it, if it had said "Reference your wire of 4th and my reply thereto." According to Mandal, on the evening of the 6th the Official Assignee promised that these documents including the press copy letter book would be sent. If true, I do not think that has any effect except to make it rather less probable that these people immediately on Perry's arrival at his solicitor's office at 10 o'clock walked over to the Official Assignee's office. But inspite of the Official Assignee's failure to pay attention to the letter dated the 6th and the rash charge made by his Counsel at an early stage of the case, I do not think it is true. If these documents were promised, the Official Assignee would not have forgotten it and the promise must have been a prominent topic in the conversation of next morning. It is difficult to see why they should not have been handed over then.

Now comes the question of other possible ways, in which on the morning of the 7th these documents could have been lost. The suggestion has been made to me as part of the case of the accused that although it is not for him to show how the documents were lost or to accuse any other person, there was fraud on the part of Mr. Svamvur himself to get Perry into trouble out of spite against him. It was put to Mr. Svamvur in cross examination that on a certain date a friend of his, Mr. Dunlop, had come to his room and there were papers and diaries on the table (meaning of course Perry's papers, which we are considering) and that Mr. Svamvur told Mr. Dunlop that Perry would give a lot of money for those papers. This was put to Mr. Svamvur and denied by him. Mr. Dunlop was called and his evidence was to the effect that Svamvur was working at papers apparently in connection with Perry's case but he did not say anything, nor even hint at anything, which led him to suppose that he was intending to do anything unworthy, simply meaning that Perry would be very interested to know the result of his investigations. That attack broke down absolutely. Now I do not feel as regards that attack on Svamvur that the accused ought to be prejudiced by it, because I think it is quite possible that that extremely fatuous suggestion is the result of the silliness of Mr. Dunlop. But another suggestion was made about which I take a very different view. The suggestion was that on an uncertain date—only given, noticeably, as being after the examination under section 36 before the Registrar, Mr. Svamvur and the accused went together for a drive in a motor car, that in that car there were certain papers, and that Mr. Svamvur offered to get Perry out of his difficulties if he paid him a certain amount of money. I cannot say whether it was by way of making this story bear the semblance of truth or whether it was for some different reason but a slip of paper was put in in the handwriting of Mr. Svamvur which is to the effect that a lady was waiting in a car for Perry, a document which Svamvur says he sent up at the request of a lady whom both knew made to him as he was passing through the hotel. I do not know whether it is supposed that that slip had anything to do with the other incident, but in any case, what an extraordinary notion from the point of view of the defence. This man had been examined in the month of March about these missing documents, he is taken in the car in which were these documents, and this proposal is put to him. What a chance for him to stop the car, get the number, call the Police or passers-by, go to his solicitor, explain to him everything and write at once to the Official Assignee. It is a curious thing for him to do, to be journeying in a car with a creditor who was bringing these serious charges against him. Not a word of this until the trial. Not even the exact date yet. Then again it is stated that Svamvur was a disappointed creditor, that Svamvur was the man who had induced the Official Assignee to have a search made, that there is an animus on the part of Svamvur against the accused; therefore, I must consider the possibility of Svamvur having done this. I see no animus on the part of Svamvur against the accused which was not quite commensurate or in keeping with the proper attitude of a creditor who wanted the Bankruptcy Court to do its duty by him as a creditor. Svamvur was interested in getting the dividend, in tracing assets, and it would be reis.mi exempli if this Court were to lay down that because he was exercising his patent rights to have the books of account taken possession of, to have matters properly thrashed out and traced in a case reeking with suspicion so far as the books are concerned, it ought to be imputed to him that he was prepared himself to get the debtor into trouble by committing a crime. Apart from that there are various other considerations. As I understand, it was suggested that this might have been done immediately after the search because on the discrepancy among the witnesses as regards time, the box was rather longer than it should have been on the 6th, when it arrived at the Official Assignee's office. I can only say that Mr. Svamvur must be credited with great promptness if he suddenly and immediately made up his mind to commit this swindle when going away with the Official Assignee's assistant and Mr. Perkins, his solicitor. Arnfield as a matter of fact has, I know, been suspended, and has got into trouble and difficulty over this matter; but there is not a suggestion that Svamvur has ever been impeached by Arnfield or rounded on by Arnfield, and Arnfield did ask the Official Assignee that this box should not be opened except in the presence of Svamvur. That was on the morning of the 7th. It was a most ridiculous suggestion and a most suspicious one —one which could only be mentioned at the time to shield himself and improbable if Svamvur was in league with him. Beyond all this there comes the most extraordinary fact of all. According to the debtor there were no pages torn off which had been part of Exhibit B, no pages prior to page 26 in the stock book and no pages in the cash book torn out since the search. Apart from the diary, I really do not understand what the papers were in the view of the defence that Svamvur is supposed to have offered on this journey in the motor car. For these reasons I am of opinion that Svamvur has done everything to show that he is bona fide, and that there is absolutely not a tittle of reason in the suggestion that he may be the culprit.

There is yet one reason more which seems to me to put the the matter beyond argument, and that is this: Svamvur had looked into the book (Exhibit F) and noticed what entries it contained. Svamvur had not at the search, so far as the evidence goes examined that diary. The diary was a book which might or might not be of importance from a business point of view. We know now, since the private examination under section 36, how important it was, but the importance of the diary as a book of account was not disclosed on the 6th, nor on the 7th because of course it was absent On the 7th we know that the complaint before the Police Court was drawn up; the parties joining in it directly or indirectly were Perkins, Svamvur and the Official Assignee. Now that complaint mentions nothing about the diary at all, and at one part of this case it was suggested on the strength of this that the diary had never been discovered missing till after the 7th, though Mr. Mandal's evidence in the end put that matter right. Just consider the position, to steal the diary on the 6th for the purpose of getting the insolvent into trouble, and yet not to complain about it on the 7th, and not to put it into the complaint by the Official Assignee. That fact alone shows, whoever stole the diary, it was certainly not stolen by Svamvur for the purpose of getting the insolvent into trouble. The one thing which was made much of in the complaint was the absence of the pages from the stock book. There is an incidental reference to the absence of the loose pages that are said to have come from Exhibit B. But the one point on which the insolvent was to be prosecuted then was the missing pages in the stock book. Perkins is a solicitor, Svamvur the creditor who had looked into it and called Perkins' attention to it on the previous day, the Official Assignee is prosecuting on the strength of their evidence. That fact to my mind puts all doubt aside as regards Svamvur's evidence about what he had noticed, about the conversation that there was when that book was found. He says he saw his own account; he says he looked it over; he said it was a stock book; he said it was the "key of the position," but the debtor denied it was a stock book and preferred to call it an invoice copy book; that, therefore, was put down.

Now, then Svamvur being out of the way; Arnfield going before 10 o'clock to the Official Assignee's office; the accused and Mr. Mandal going there soon after 10. I come next to the direct evidence of what happened at the office. The direct evidence that matters is the evidence of two witnesses, one Baman and the other Harish. Those two witnesses speak to two different times of this visit. Baman speaks to the beginning of it, and Harish speaks, as I think, to the closing. Baman says that Arnfield came to the office at 9-45; he says Mandal came five minutes afterwards; that he was told by Mandal to fetch Perry; that he fetched Perry from near the Official Assignee's office; that Mandal and Perry went into Arnfields's room; that upon that Arnfield opened the tiffin room door, and he saw them go inside: that in two or three minutes; Mandal came out of the tiffin rooms that he went out, i. e., he went towards the left, either towards the lift or the Official Assignee's room. So far as that witness is concerned I have considered very carefully Mr. Das' arguments, not only the question whether he is an honest witness, but the question whether if what happened was as Mr. Mandal says, this witness could, by mistaking times or by being rather stupid, misrepresent the facts into something different. I can imagine no reason for rejecting Baman's evidence on the ground of honesty. He appeared to me to be a particularly straightforward witness of his particular class. He made no effort to do anything in the witness-box except honestly to recall what took place. I do not think he could possibly be accused of letting his imagination get mixed up with his memory, and so far as he is concerned, there is not any suggestion that his evidence is at all in contradiction of the evidence he gave on that very day when the Official Assignee held the enquiry.

As regards the other witness, Harish, I am bound to say that his evidence is not nearly so good. The statement that he made on that day was that he came that day at 10 20 to 10-20; that he saw Arnfield in front of the tiffin room door, and that he saw Mandal and Perry inside. It does not appear that he was asked what they were doing inside, though it is very difficult to suppose he was not asked that question, but no answer as regards that appears in his statement before the Official Assignee. In his examination-in-chief here he adds that they were handling papers, and in his cross examination he adds the statement that they were kneeling down apparently looking at something on the floor.

An attempt was being made to show that Harish and his family were on terms of enmity with Mandal about a matter which arose some 10 years ago. I do not pay any attention to that at all and think that it broke down altogether, but I do pay attention to the fact that the statement first made by this witness differs from the full statement that he makes in cross examination by the absence of certain very important statements, and so far as I am concerned I would be slow to act upon the evidence of Harish if it stood alone. On the other hand I am prepared to act upon the evidence of Baman, and I do think that the original statement of Harish made very shortly after the event was in all probability perfectly true.

Now, the case for the defence is—and indeed it must be—that Mandal and Perry never were in the tiffin room at all at that time in the morning. In addition to the fact that their case on that is untrue, if Baman's evidence is correct, there is of course no honest reason which they could possibly have for being taken into the tiffin room of Arnfield at that time of the morning, where the box lay which contained the documents which had been seized from Perry. In view of the undoubted fact that documents were missing as in the case of the diary, in view of the undoubted fact that Arnfield came to the office that morning especially early for some special purpose; in view of the fact that the story for the defence as to the occasion for going to the office on that morning breaks down altogether so far as Mandal and Perry are concerned, I find that the prosecution in this case have established beyond reasonable doubt that these documents were taken and tampered with by Perry.

I will, however, consider one further matter upon which a good deal of argument was addressed to me. In a matter of this sort the consideration is obvious, that the person interested in suppressing documents is the accused and no one else. On that Mr. Das argues and so far as I am concerned, very forcibly, in this way. He says if you are going to look at Perry with suspicion and to act upon the assumption that his was the interest to do away with these documents, there should be some tangible ground for knowing that it was his interest to remove these documents. I quite approve of that. It is only prima facie in the interest of the insolvent to have his documents removed. If he is an honest insolvent it may be very much against it, if he is a dishonest insolvent even then it may not be to his interest to add a question about the disappearance of papers to other charges. Therefore, I do think that Mr. Das is right and that this Court ought to consider whether there is any tangible evidence to say that the disappearance of these documents would be to Perry's interest. Now so far as Perry is concerned there can, I think, be no doubt at all, in view of the examination under section 36, that in the absence of that diary, any investigation of his affairs, whether for the purpose of tracing assets or any other purpose, is paralysed and very nearly impossible.

As regards the stock book, the argument that was addressed to me for the defence is this. We have one page of the stock book which is really only a copy of two invoices, and if it may be assumed that the other pages contained nothing more, then until it is shown that invoices themselves, which or many of which are in the box, do not give that very information, there would not be any point in destroying those papers. Well, no doubt if the pages that are now missing are mere copies, and nothing more, of invoices, all of which are in the box, there would be not much point in taking away the document. But were the pages mere copies? An invoice copy book is a record of stock as it is bought, taken in the convenient form of the supplier's invoices. As stock comes in, it can be taken into the book in that way, and if there is nothing more than a mere copy of an invoice, one would not call it a stock book, but if that is made the basis of further memoranda it is quite possible to convert an invoice copy book into a book which is in the nature of a stock book. I am perfectly satisfied that this book, Exhibit F, was not a stock book in the least degree like the book that was put forward by one of the witnesses for the defence, when he produced a very large volume with columns for the most minute details with regard to every item of stock, a book that would rejoice the heart of an accountant to see the detail and care with which it was kept. There is no suggestion that this insolvent ever kept a book so artistic as that. A stock book may be kept in all sorts of ways, and it may not be called a stock book. From the basis of an invoice copy book if memoranda are made as to how the things coming in in that way have been dealt with, it is quite possible to trace, e. g, what stock would be in hand. Now, that is exactly how the book struck Svamvur when he looked at it. He says it was a stock book. Pressed he says he saw entries in it, red ink and so on. It seems to me that when a businessman like Svamvur, who looked at the book and showed it to Perkins, was immediately impressed by the use of that book, what he says at the time is almost certain to be right. Perry, like other jewellers, could not carry on his business if he was wholly and always without the kind of information that ordinarily and properly is kept in a book that is called the stock book. Probably no accountant would have been satisfied with this book as being a model or proper stock book. I think it was a compromise and contained such memoranda on the basis of the invoices as would serve him in the place of a stock book, in so far as he needed one or was minded to keep one. One thing is plain: the most painstaking examination of the invoices in the box, having nothing with which to compare them, will produce no result either as showing or as negativing the insolvent's interest to suppress these pages. On the existing materials now, no possible way of checking what stock the insolvent ought to have on hand can be or has been suggested.

There are various other matters, but I do not think any useful purpose would be served by my going into them. There is, of course, the meeting or meetings that took place with Mandal and the Official Assignee on the 7th; there is the controversy as to that, between what persons and in what sequence the different things happened. The Official Assignee says that he told Mandal and the insolvent that they came and asked for a copy of something and took no copy; he says he was told "Oh, I only wanted the date." The evidence of Mandal is different as regards that. One point is worth observing, and that is that apparently when challenged as to what had taken place in the morning Mandal told the Official Assignee that he had been present with Perry the whole time, but on the Official Assignee saying that he had evidence to the contrary, Mandal, without withdrawing his statement, said that perhaps he might ; that it was difficult to remember, or something to that effect. I find it very difficult to realise why Mr. Mandal on the afternoon of the same day, if what had happened was what he says, should have wavered or even hesitated upon so simple a point as that. I cannot help thinking that that corroborates in a material particular the evidence that is given by the witness Baman and although these small points are not to be strained this is one which, among others, ought, I think, not to be overlooked.

So far as regards the cash book (i. e., Exhibit G) I do not think that in a criminal case sufficient attention has been paid by the prosecution to get up their case with regard to that matter. It was omitted under section 36 and I am not going to hit the insolvent on any charges relating to that exhibit.

With regard to the first charge which refers to what took place on the 5th, withholding the production of the following books : the diary, the stock or invoice copy book, bill book and bank pass book, I have thought from the first that the surrounding circumstances (as regards the other charges) would on the question of intent make a difference to the result. I do not think it any defence for an insolvent to say that his solicitor took the responsibility upon himself, though I shall take it into account on the question of sentence. The intent being present, I think that section 103 applies : production withheld when demanded just before adjudication is, I think, covered by the section just as destruction before adjudication would be covered.

As regards the stock book it does not seem to me to matter which of the three charges is chosen because on the facts of this case I think all three are open, but I propose to convict on the charge 2a (wilfully preventing the production of pages 5—22 of his stock book) and also 2c, viz., destroying the stock book by removing the pages.

So far as the diary is concerned I propose to convict him of wilfully preventing the production of the diary.

* * * * * * *

On the first charge, I merely make an order for ordinary imprisonment for seven days.

As regards the other charges (wilfully preventing the production of the stock book, destroying the stock book by removing the pages, and wilfully preventing the production of the diary), I sentence the accused to 12 months' imprisonment to run concurrently upon each of these three charges, i. e., simple imprisonment and not rigorous."

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—The insolvent is charged under section 103A (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) with four offences. I deal now only with the charges upon which he has been convicted and which are the subject of appeal. These charges are (1) that the appellant on the 5th March 1919, fraudulently and with intent to conceal the state of his affairs and to defeat the objects of the Act, purposely withheld the production of his diary for the years 1918 and 1919 and his stock or invoice book, (2) that he, fraudulently with intent to conceal the state of his affairs and to defeat the objects of the said Act on the 7th March wilfully prevented the production of pages 5—22 of his stock book by removing or causing to be removed the said pages from the said book, the said pages and book relating to such of his affairs as are subject to investigation under the said Act ; (3) that he, fraudulently and with intent to conceal the state of his affairs and to defeat the objects of the said Act, on the 7th March destroyed his said stock book by removing or causing to be removed therefrom the said pages relating to such of his affairs as are subject to investigation; and lastly (4) that he fraudulently with intent to conceal the state of his affairs and to defeat the objects of the said Act, on the 7th March 1919 wilfully prevented the production of his diary for 1918 relating to such of his affairs as are subject to investigation under the said Act.

A number of objections have been raised as regards the form and nature of these charges and to the formal findings thereon.

It was argued that section 103 does not contain words as the Provincial Act does (section 43) shewing that the offences there mentioned may be committed before or after the adjudication. I may say at once that I think there is no substance in this point. But then it is said that the books the subject of charges (2) and (4) were produced and taken possession of by the Official Assignee on the 6th March and, therefore, it cannot be said that the insolvent prevented their production. The actual prevention is said to have been effected by removing the said pages of the stock book and, apparently, stealing the diary on the following day, the 7th March, at the Official Assignee's office after possession made over to the Official Assignee. Charge (3) is also, it is said, bad because the destruction there mentioned is a form of prevention or withholding, the words being "destroyed or otherwise wilfully prevented". It is, therefore, said that the destruction referred to in the section is destruction before the document has been produced before the Official Assignee and not the alleged destruction (as is here said to have taken place) in the Official Assignee's office after he had taken possession of the books. It is said that these acts may constitute the offences of mischief and theft under the Penal Code but are not specific insolvency offences. If the books were in fact produced having been taken possession of by the Official Assignee, it cannot, it is urged, be said that they were withheld from the Official Assignee or that their production was wilfully prevented. I am not prepared to uphold this construction of the section. In this case, it is to be observed there was an alleged withholding on the 5th March and the books were never produced by the insolvent but were seized upon on search by the Official Assignee. It would not, I think, be reasonable to hold that if books were withheld on the 5th, and were taken possession of by the Assignee on the 6th at a search and were made away with by the insolvent in the office of the Official Assignee before the latter even saw them, that no offence was committed under the Act. Moreover, objections which may have some force as regards the word "Withhold" are without them as regards the word "Destroy."

It was then argued that charges (1) and (3) were not in accordance with the notice and it has been held by Jenkins, C. J., and myself in Lucas v. Official Assignee of Bengal (1) (Appeal 20A of 1914, decided on 9th June 1914) that a charge not framed in pursuance of the notice cannot be maintained. We must, however, I think, read this statement, if not actually subject to the provisions of section 537 of the Code, then subject to the principle which is embodied in that section, namely, that no error or irregularity in a charge will call for a reversal of an order unless it in fact has occasioned a failure of justice, and in determining whether this is so the Court shall have regard to the fact whether the objection could, and should, have been raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings.

No objection was taken to any of the charges at the trial. It cannot be contended reasonably that we should not act on a principle governing the trial of cases in the criminal jurisdiction proper. Here it is objected that the notice as regards the first charge runs "Wilfully withheld" whilst the charge runs "Purposely withheld." It is obvious that a trivality of this kind does not count. 'Wilfully' and 'Purposely' have the same or approximately the same sense. This objection fails.

It was at first objected that the notice states the intention alternatively by the word "Or" and the charge cumulatively by the word "And." This objection refers to several of the charges, but there is no substance in it and it was subsequently withdrawn. If an accused receives notice that the prosecution may seek to prove against him either of two alternative intentions he cannot, as he must be ready to meet a charge in respect to both, be prejudiced by a charge of having had both intentions. The intentions mentioned in the Act are "to conceal the state of the insolvent's affairs" or "to defeat the objects of the Act." Concealing is doubtless a form of defeating the object of the Act and, therefore, the second intention must refer to other modes of defeating the Act. There is nothing to prevent an accused having had both intentions. He might wish to conceal the state of his affairs and also have some other object within the definition of the second intention. If it were the fact that the allegation of the second intention called for particulars, we must take it there was no need for them here, as they were not asked for and no objection was taken.

The objection, therefore, that the charges are not in conformity with the notice is not substantiated.

But then a more serious objection is taken, it being said that no notice was given as regards charges (2) and (4). I think it is generally necessary that the insolvent should have notice of the charge which it is proposed to make against him. The notice does not contain anything about preventing the production of the stock book which is the subject of the 2nd charge and the reference to the diary in the notice (clause G) runs "surreptitiously and dishonestly removed or caused to be removed from the custody of the Official Assignee your diary for 1918." The terms of this offence are not those mentioned in section 103, though there is a reference to removal in section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but removing a document is a mode of preventing its production and I think, therefore, that the notice was sufficient. As regards the second charge as there was no notice at all, I should have been disposed to hold that it was bad were it not that no objection was taken to any of the charges and the accused could not have been prejudiced, for the act charged by charge 2 is practically the offence charged in charge 3 in different language, and of this latter charge the insolvent had full notice.

It was then argued on the strength of the decision in Lucas v. Official Assignee of Bengal (1) that the charges (2) and (3) are inconsistent or that at any rate the prosecution must state on which charge they ask a conviction and that there cannot be a conviction on both charges. For the case cited holds that to establish that books are purposely withheld it must be shown that they exist, for preventing presupposes existence. It is to be observed that the act charged in charge (2) is the same act as is charged in charge (3), for the prevention of production is by removing the pages 5 – 22 and the destruction is by removing the same pages and the acts charged took place at one and the same time and were one alleged event. I am somewhat doubtful, therefore, whether the accused could be convicted and sentenced under both charges (2) and (3). It is not necessary, however, to decide the point, because Mr. Gregory has said that in the event of there being any doubt in the matter he would elect to proceed under charge 3. The point, moreover, has no practical interest because if the insolvent is acquitted under charge (2) he must be convicted under the circumstances of this case under charge (3).

The result then is that the charges stand except the second which, to avoid an unnecessary discussion, is withdrawn because a conviction on charge (3) would be sufficient and an acquittal on that charge carries with it an acquittal under charge (2). It was then said that the judgment was defective because there is no finding as to the intent with which the accused committed the acts of which he has been convicted: R. v. Ingham (2). It is to be observed that that decision is a Jury case. I am not prepared to hold that this Court with all the materials before it could not, in appeal, make a finding of the intent if this had been omitted per incuriam by the Judge. But I am not satisfied that the judgment is so defective in this respect as that it cannot stand, though it would have been better if the finding were more specific. The learned Judge had obviously the question of intent in his mind and expressly mentioned it as regards the first charge, and I think he meant to find the intention which is involved in his convicting the accused on this and the other charges. In that conviction is implied a finding of the intention with which he has been charged. I hold that this ground fails.

The 32nd ground of appeal submits that the examination of the insolvent should not have been admitted and that, therefore, the judgment proceeds upon what is not legal evidence. The insolvent was examined apparently under section 36 of the Act. It was contended that the insolvent could not have been examined under this section, and that under English law admissions obtained under compulsion are only evidence "against a party" if the compulsion was legal, but not if it was illegal, and a number of decisions of the English Courts have been cited to us as they were also referred to in the judgment under appeal. It seems that there is a practice to examine the insolvent under section 36. It is doubtful, however, whether this is provided for by that section. Under clause (1) the Court may summon the insolvent or other person there mentioned. The words "Any person" in clause (2) appear to refer to the same words in clauses (1). Such person may be brought up for examination. But this can hardly be the insolvent, seeing that the person summoned must be tendered a reasonable sum. Clauses 3, 4, 5 refer to persons other than the insolvent. Apparently section 27 which provides for the examination of the insolvent could not be held applicable. Mr. Gregory suggests that though the examination was nominally held under section 36, it was justified under the provisions of section 33 which compel an insolvent to submit to such examination as may be required by the Official Assignee or may be directed by the Court. It is to be noted that the examination of the accused was held without objection from him and was, therefore, voluntarily made just, as it has been held as regards witnesses that section 132 of the Evidence Act makes a distinction between those cases in which a witness voluntarily answers a question and those in which he is compelled to answer, and gives him a protection in the latter of these cases only. We are, however, in my opinion, not concerned with the English decisions cited, nor with the principle that an accused is not called on to incriminate himself. There is no question of that here. In this trial he has not been called on to say anything. What has been done is to put in evidence against him something said by him in other proceedings in the insolvency.

These statements are relied on as admissions of fact. There is no doubt that the answers given by the insolvent now accused on the former proceedings are admissions under section 17 of the Evidence Act. Being so, they are relevant and admissible unless they are excluded by sections 18—31 of the same Act. None of these sections exclude the evidence. On the contrary section 29 states that even a confession (and not merely an admission as here) otherwise relevant does not become irrelevant merely because it was made in answer to questions which the party need not have answered. Even, therefore, assuming (which I do not decide) that the examination of the insolvent was not authorised, the answers given on such examination without objection are nonetheless admissible. Even if there were compulsion not being of the kind which excludes a confession (such as the illegal compulsion suggested), then under the Evidence Act the fact of compulsion might affect the weight of the evidence but not its admissibility. Apart, however, from this I am not satisfied that the Court had not power to examine the insolvent even if section 33 were not applicable and that there were any illegal compulsion. It is obvious that the Court must have full control of the insolvent. Nextly there being no objection to the examination there was no compulsion in fact but voluntary answers, and lastly even if there were illegal compulsion, this would not under Indian law affect the relevancy and admissibility of evidence, though it might in particular cases affect the weight of the evidence. I, therefore, overrule the objection and hold that the examination of the insolvent which was purported to be taken under section 36 is admissible, and we have accordingly referred to it. It is chiefly relevant as shewing that the accused kept an account of his dealings in his diary, that it was used in such a way as to be a book of account and for the admissions which it contains that if the missing diary were available, it would afford evidence of transactions which might not otherwise be had.

I now proceed to the case upon the merits. At the beginning I may point out that it is admitted that if the other and more serious charges fail, it is not contended that there can be a conviction on charge ( ). The learned Judge has said that the acts and conduct on the 5th March that might in an ordinary case have an innocent appearance take on a very different appearance if the other charges are established.

It has been contended that mens rea as regards the events of the 5th March cannot be inferred from the subsequent facts. On the other hand it may be replied that if in cases this be so, all the acts charged may be taken to be part of one common design, which is again contested. But as I have said, even upon the view taken by the learned Judge the first charge fails if the others fail and it is, therefore, to them that we must first look. Moreover I think that if the evidence shews that the insolvent was bona fide acting under the advice of his solicitor as to what books were necessary to be produced, the fraudulent intent mentioned in the notice is negatived.

I will deal then with charges (3) and (4).

The case for the prosecution is that Mr. Mandal, the insolvent's solicitor, was aiding and abetting his client in the commission of these offences and that three persons were in conspiracy, viz., the insolvent, one Arnfield, the Official Assignee's assistant, now dismissed, and Mr. Mandal. It might have been possible to have so put forward the case that Mr. Mandal was not necessarily involved, for it might have been argued that the insolvent had an interest to make away with the diary and possibly also to tamper with Exhibit F and that he had an opportunity to do so first when he was with Arnfield before the Assignee came to office, and after Mr. Mandal had, according to the witness Bamdeo, left the room of Arnfield and secondly when he was with Arnfield after the arrival of the Assignee when Mr. Mandal was admittedly absent. But reliance has not been placed on the second opportunity (if it was one) nor evidence given directly with reference thereto, and as regards the first opportunity the witness Harish Dey, going beyond his written statement to the Assignee, gives evidence that Mr. Mandal was seen by him handing the papers. Though this does not necessarily carry with it an inference of guilt, for such inspection might have been (so far as the prosecution case was concerned) with the leave of Arnfield, it was in fact relied on as an incident showing complicity.

I think, therefore, that the Advocate-General was right when he said that the case of Perry and his solicitor must stand or fall together and, therefore, that anything which renders the case as against Mr. Mandal improbable, weakens the case against the insolvent. Mr. Gregory admits that the case made and the evidence given was that the offences charged were so charged to have taken place before the arrival of the Official Assignee, when according to the prosecution evidence Mr. Mandal and his client were in Mr. Arnfield's tiffin room. The case, therefore, against the insolvent will be weakened by anything which is shown which indicates that Mr. Mandal was not involved. Not only this, for to the extent that Mr. Mandal is freed from suspicion, to that extent he becomes a reliable witness as to what actually occurred unless on the face of the evidence it is unacceptable.

At the outset it is to be observed, that whilst it is easy to speculate as to the motives of the insolvent and Arnfield, I am unable to imagine why Mr. Mandal should have, as alleged, implicated himself in this affair. He is a solicitor. He must know that to do what is here charged might result in his being struck off the rolls and convicted of a grave offence. And for what was he undertaking this risk? After all people who take such grave risks must do so in the hope of some good to themselves. Mr. Gregory was unable to say what this good might be. This is not a case in which so far as I can see there is any money. On the contrary the complaint is that there is so little. The insolvent is a man of no substance who has been hawking about for sale the jewellery of others —some of it obtained on credit. Until a short time before his insolvency he was an entire stranger to Mr. Mandal. All that Mr. Gregory could suggest was that the solicitor was too zealous on his client's behalf and had been thus led away to tamper and make away with documents and perjure himself—an explanation I cannot accept as sufficient. I am wholly unable to accept such an explanation in this case, where (so far as the record is concerned) there is no suggestion which shews that the solicitor in question has any but a good reputation, where until the insolvency proceedings he was a stranger to the insolvent, and where no advantage to him, pecuniary or otherwise, is suggested in return for the risk incurred by him in aiding and abetting offences of a criminal character under the Insolvency Act and in return for his bolstering up such conduct by perjury on the trial of such alleged offences.

Whilst, however, there is nothing to shew why the insolvent's solicitor should make himself a party to the commission of these offences, we must see whether the evidence offered is sufficient to prove that he did so. Not of course that the solicitor is on his trial; for the issue is as to the insolvent's guilt, but as part of the case which is made against the latter. It has not been made at all clear when the conspiracy was entered into, and a criminal intention first entertained by Mr. Mandal. Some of the evidence and argument would go to shew that the two—the solicitor and client—were both in it from the first. On the other hand Mr. Gregory, when pressed to explain certain incidents, put forward the theory that Mr. Mandal had no criminal design until after the search when he wrote the letter of the 6th March to the Official Assignee. If this be so, then there are certain objections to the earlier part of the case which are unanswered.

It is thus said that on the 5th March they—the insolvent and his solicitor—saw the Official Assignee together. Mr. Falkner says that he asked "Have you brought your books" when a book (Exhibit B) was produced which is said to be both cash and ledger. In examination before the Registrar the latter asked the insolvent whether he (the former) did not say "Is this your only book." In his evidence, however, taken later, Mr. Remfry says he asked whether this book was the only book of account and he understood from Mr. Mandal that that was so. (Mr. Mandal) also says (and in this he agrees with Mr. Remfry) that the latter seeing the receipt for Exhibit B asked him "Is that the only account book." On which he Mr. Mandal said "Yes." As regards the interview he says the Official Assignee asked (and in this he disagrees with the latter) "Is this the only cash book" on which the insolvent said "Cash and ledger combined." Mr. Mandal says that he could not have said that Exhibit B was the only book because he knew that there were others, though he had not seen them. Rightly or wrongly he believed that it was only necessary to put in the main book and not the other books, which it is contended are not strictly books of account though ancillary thereto. There is no doubt that only one book Exhibit B was at first produced. The dispute turns on the question whether the insolvent or Mr. Mandal (it matters not which, for they were present together) said it was the only book the insolvent had or the only book of account. No one, of course, suggests that either Mr. Falkner or Mr. Remfry were telling other than what they believed to be true. The question is one of recollection and seeing that at the trial Mr. Remfry says the question was as to the book of account and Mr. Mandal says so also, and as Mr. Falkner is not certain of the exact words used or who said them, I do not think that this part of the case standing by itself has been made out.

But whatever the words used, whether book, or book of account, the Official Assignee directed a search at the instance of the creditor Mr. Svamvur and his solicitor Mr. Perkins. Then at the Grand Hotel where the insolvent was staying other books were certainly found, which related to his business, whether they can be technically called books of account or not, and whether Mr. Mandal was right or wrong in supposing that they need not be handed in at the first instance but later on. Of course the point is made that if the insolvent had been minded to destroy any of the books he would have done so whilst they were in his possession before the search. It is suggested in reply that he might not have known that there was going to be a search. In that case if his solicitor was aiding and abetting him as alleged, he might have warned his client, either before the search was ordered or possibly afterwards, to get rid of what was against him in his books. According to the evidence of Mr. Savamvur he found Mr. Mandal and Mr. Arnfield in earnest private conversation before the search, suggesting that something was being got up there. It would have been possible then to have delayed the search and communicated with the insolvent. But it is not suggested that this was done. The search took place without objection. Mr. Mandal wanted a list to be made and in fact prepared one himself. It would on the hypothesis of fraud have been more useful if the books had been bundled into a box without any list whatever. Mr. Mandal's list is in fact correct and would on any abstraction of the documents shew what had been taken. In fact he sent a copy of his true list to the Official Assignee after the time when he is alleged to have been a party to the abstraction of the diary for 1913. This is not the conduct of a guilty man. There is no doubt that two diaries were found on the search as also that one diary is now missing. According to Mr. Svamvur Exhibit F, the alleged stock book, but which was said to be an invoice book, had pages in it with writing which have since been torn out. It is a curious fact that if this be so, the only page which was left was a page shewing goods supplied by Mr. Svamvur's firm. Why this was not also torn out is not clear, unless it be that it was an oversight. It is suggested that this was because the word "sold" appeared on other pages. But why, it may be asked, leave anything at all seeing that the evidence of Mr. Svamvur, the creditor, as to what was said about the book at the search is denied. It must be noted also that the book contains 425 pages. Of these pages 1—4 are in existence and blank. Pages 5—22 are missing, 23, 24, 25 are in existence and blank and 26 only has some writing on it which happens to relate to Mr. Svamvur's goods. The remaining pages are blank.

According to Mr. Svamvur when Exhibit F was found he said "This is one of the principal things we want. It is the key to the situation. It is just the book we want, shewing the stuff which he should have on hand." When asked whether it was written up, he replied "Absolutely full" at least up to a certain page and at page 26 there was his own firm's stock purchased by the insolvent on the 1st October. He says he shewed that page to Mr. Perkins. The latter's examination is not before us as he left before cross-examination, but as regards this particular page there is no dispute because it is still curiously enough in the book. According to Mr. Svamvur other invoices were copied in Exhibit F. It is to be noted here that there are a number of invoices and if these were those copied in F, then if F were destroyed, the materials from which F was supposed to have been made are available. When asked whether he examined the diary for 1918, the witness Mr. Svamvur said "We had no time to examine the books. I just looked through it. I took charge of it." Mr. Mandal on the other hand denies that there was any discussion about Exhibit F. When asked whether any observation was made by any one when that book was found, he replied "None whatever." It is said that Mandal did contradict Mr. Svamvur as to the latter's statement as to the contents of Exhibit F and that he knew himself from before what they were. But his evidence, which I accept, is that he had not previously seen the book and at the search he did not examine it.

On the other hand it is a circumstance in favour of Mr. Svamvur's evidence that he told the Official Assignee that he had brought the stock book (which properly speaking it was not, judging from present contents), for it may be said he would not have done this if it contained one page only. The evidence, therefore, as to the supposed contents of the book other than the page now existing is contradictory. Whether Exhibit F contained the pages which have been it is said torn out, depends on Mr. Svamvur's evidence alone. Without impeaching the truth of that evidence it would not, therefore, be safe to convict the accused in a matter of oath against oath unless it were shewn that there was good reason to believe that Mr. Mandal was a party to the alleged offences and that his evidence was on this or other grounds untrustworthy.

As regards, however, the diary the case stands on a different footing, for it is common ground that two diaries were in fact found at the search, that they were taken in a locked box to the Official Assignee's office and that the box was in Arnfield's keeping, and there is no doubt that one diary is now missing. The case, therefore, now resolves itself into this—has it been shewn that the insolvent abstracted or was a party to the abstraction of this diary from the box of the Official Assignee which was in the keeping of his assistant Arnfield?

PERRY v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA.

There is no question but that Arnfield is prima facie responsible. For the diary was in a box in his keeping, the key was with him and the box was kept in his tiffin room. No one, therefore, could have made away with that document except Arnfield aided and abetted that act. At least that is the conclusion on the evidence before us, though of course Arnfield's guilt is not directly in question. It is only relevant so far as it bears on the charge against Perry. It may also, I think, be said on the evidence that the insolvent may have had an interest in getting rid of the diary. But the question is did he in fact give reality to that interest by actually abstracting the book? Has that been proved clearly and beyond all doubt? The first suggestion made is that Mr. Mandal put forward a pretence for the purpose of getting access to the box. Mr. Mandal says he saw the Official Assignee at about 4 45 on the 6th March after the search, when he explained to him that certain documents found on the search were relevant for the insolvent's defence against a criminal charge, which one of his creditors was making from Delhi, but that the documents were not required for the administration of the insolvent's estate. He says that the Official Assignee agreed to make over the documents on Mr. Mandal writing to him on the subject, on which he (Mr. Mandal) went back and wrote the Official Assignee a letter on the 6th March. This is Exhibit I. The letter commences "With reference to my interview with you this afternoon." Mr. Falkner denies having had any such interview, and in fact Mr. Avetoon appearing for the Official Assignee on the trial actually charged that the letter was a fabrication but subsequently withdrew this charge, as he stated that he was instructed that the letter of the 6th March had been received, and in fact it bears Mr. Falkner's initials. The suggestion, however, now is that the letter was written for the purpose of making evidence that is for the purpose of explaining Mr. Mandal's presence with the insolvent at the office of the Assignee on the 7th March. Mr. Mandal says he did not get the documents. On the 7th, therefore, he went to the Official Assignee's office a few minutes after 10 A. M. As Mr. Falkner had not arrived he went into Arnfield's office and asked for inspection of the press copy letter book, but Arnfield refused this without the permission of the Official Assignee. Mr. Arnfield, however, said that the Assignee would come shortly, and Mr. Mandal and his client sat in Arnfield's office until news was given of the arrival of Mr. Falkner about a quarter of an hour later. Mr. Mandal and his client then saw the Assignee, when the former explained his business and the Assignee gave directions that Arnfield should give inspection to Perry. Mr. Mandal, however, himself went away as he had business in Court. Apparently Mr. Perry then went and saw Arnfield. Mr. Falkner says that though the insolvent and his solicitor, when they saw him on the 7th asked for a copy of a letter from press copy letter book for the purpose of the criminal charge, yet that no copy was taken that day or any other day, and that when he pointed out that to Mr. Mandal he explained that he only wanted the date. After the insolvent had seen Arnfield, the creditor Mr. Svamvur arrived and on inspecting the documents discovered the loss and alleged tampering. So far as Mr. Mandal is concerned, it is to be noted that it was, therefore, possible on the evidence that the abstraction and tampering, if it took place, was done when admittedly he was absent at the High Court and when Arnfield and the insolvent were together.

As an answer to this case about the letter of the 6th March it is pointed out that it is an admitted fact that there was some discussion at the search as to some of the documents being necessary because of the possibility of a prosecution by the Delhi merchant Babumull. According to one hyhothesis put before us, Mr. Mandal had not at the time of the search determined that any document should be tampered or made away with. If this be so, the reference to these documents at the search could not have been a mere pretence. If so, there is nothing in the point that the information sought has been (sic) and was not obtained at the search, whether this was possible or not. It is suggested, however, that after the search when the documents were taken away the criminal intention may have been formed and in pursuance of it a demand was made on the 6th for documents relevant to the criminal charge, in order that there might be an excuse for the presence of the insolvent and his solicitor at the Assignee's office on the 7th. The two hypotheses do not work together. I think that the admitted fact that the need for the documents was mentioned at the search is a circumstance against the case made against Mr. Mandal that the letter of the 6th March and the demand for the documents was a mere pretence. As regards the reasons given by Mr. Mandal for wanting the documents it was not a date only which was required but the press copy book in which the telegram was copied, in order that the words used might be before him in dealing with the threatened criminal charge.

Reliance is placed on the fact that the statement in the letter of the 6th March is not challenged in the correspondence by Mr. Falkner, who in his evidence states that on the 7th the insolvent and his solicitor came to him for a copy of a letter in the press copy book "as (to use his words) it was necessary in view of the criminal charge that they had spoken to me about the previous day." Either this is an admission that the Assignee did see them the previous day or possibly Mr. Falkner meant to say that Mr. Mandal told him on the 7th that he had been spoken to on the previous day. If the latter, this supports the defence that Mr. Mandal did see Mr. Falkner. For it is then shewn not only that he wrote to that effect but re-stated the fact at the interview on the 7th. It is possible that Mr. Falkner's memory may not be accurate on this point. We have it that Mr. Avetoom (I presume on instructions) stated that the letter of the 6th March was a fabrication, but subsequently had to withdrew it as it was found the letter had been in fact received.

I am unable, therefore, to hold that it has been established that Mr. Mandal was putting forward a pretended interest in the documents relating to the threatened criminal charge in order to account for his presence at the office on the day of the alleged tampering and theft.

If this be so, I cannot say that there was no reason for Mr. Mandal visiting the office of the Assignee with his client the next day. It is said that he went early, though it is to be observed as to this that the adjudicating orders shew that the office hours were from 10 to 4. But apart from this Mr. Mandal wished to get away to Court and he in fact left immediately after the arrival of the Official Assignee. If in fact, as the evidence generally states, Arnfield used to come late after the Assignee, this is a circumstance unexplained and to that extent a circumstance of suspicion but does not by itself go far. This is a matter for Arnfield himself to explain but he is not called, though I think that the Official Assignee was justified under the circumstances in not calling him as his witness as he could not put him forward as a witness of truth.

I now pass to the evidence of what occurred at the office when the insolvent and his solicitor were there. This depends entirely on the evidence of the witness Bamdeo whom the learned Judge thought to be a trustworthy witness and I accept his impressions on this point. I say "entirely," because the witness Harish Dey the learned Judge thought to be not satisfactory and accepted only his evidence so far as it was corroborated by Bamdeo. It is of course open to the Court to accept part of the story of one witness who is not reliable if it be corroborated by another who is reliable. But to accept the story is not necessarily to say that the evidence is stronger because of its being spoken to by two witnesses; since the acceptance of one witness's statement is not on his credit but on that of the other reliable witness who supports him. There is some ground for believing that this witness Harish was inimical to Mr. Mandal and he in fact introduces features in the evidence not spoken to by Bamdeo or mentioned in the statement to Mr. Falkner or Harish himself, namely, the important alleged incident of Mr. Mandal handling the documents in the tiffin room of Arnfield, which is in contradiction to Bamdeo's evidence who says nothing about handling papers and that Mr. Mandal left the room leaving Perry and Arnfield there. Bamdeo's evidence is that Arnfield arrived at 9.45 and Mandal at 9.50. The witness was told to fetch Perry who was outside. Then Arnfield opened the tiffin room where the box with the documents was and all three went inside. After two or three minutes Mr. Mandal went out leaving Perry and Arnfield together for 10 minutes. Then Perry went out, Harish Dey's account is discrepant with this, but both agree that Mandal and Perry were in the tiffin room, and this seems to have been reported to the Official Assignee. It is noteworthy that Perry and Arnfield were together on the two occasions, before and after the arrival of the Official Assignee, and Mr. Mandal was there on the first occasion, and it is possible that there may be some confusion in Bamdeo's mind in mixing up these two occasions. However this be, I am not prepared to hold that the evidence of Bamdeo is sufficient unless it were shewn (as in my opinion it is not) that both the events leading up to and following the fact spoken to by him sufficiently support the respondent's case. It is certainly noteworthy that if these persons had the intention before the Official Assignee came to tamper and abstract the documents, that they should have left the door open for others to see what they were doing and that the peon was not sent away on some business or other. Then we find both, after the supposed incident, going to the Official Assignee. It is noteworthy also that it was at one time proposed to bring criminal proceedings against Perry and Arnfiled alone, no mention being made of Mr. Mandal.

It was suggested that Mr. Svamvur and Arnfield may have been in complicity. This I do not believe. The insolvent's charges on this head have been disbelieved by the learned Judge and his case has not been advanced thereby, nor by his absurd allegation that the Official Assignee himself was withholding books. It could not have been to Svamvur's interest to get rid of either any pages of Exhibit F or the diary. But though the making of such unfounded charges may detract from the insolvent's explanations, they cannot by themselves establish the Assignee's case.

It is possible that Arnfield, who on the evidence before us is prima facie responsible and an unreliable man, might have had some interest in embarrassing the creditor's case as regards Exhibit F, but this cannot, I think, be suggested as regards the diary the value of which was not apparent till the insolvent's examination later on. That the insolvent may have had an interest to make away with and tamper with the books is, I think, indisputable. But the question is, has it been made out that he did so? The case against him would have been stronger had it not been asserted that Mr. Mandal was aiding and abetting him. This on the evidence I cannot believe and as the charge against Mandal is mixed up with that against Perry it is not possible, I think, in this case in the view I take of the matter, so far as Mr. Mandal is concerned, to hold that the charges have been established against the insolvent though there are circumstances of suspicion against him.

In the result, therefore, I must hold that the charges against the insolvent have not been made out. I do not believe upon the evidence that Mr. Mandal was aiding and abetting as alleged. I accept his evidence that when he was in Arnfield's room there was no handling of the papers, and no case has been made that in his absence on either the first or second occasion of Perry's visit to Arnfield the insolvent committed the alleged offences. On the contrary the case throughout has been that the two were jointly concerned in committing the offences alleged —an allegation which in my opinion fails.

The appeal, therefore, succeeds and the order of the 25th May 1919 sentencing the insolvent to imprisonment is, as regards all the charges, reversed. The surety for the appearance of the insolvent during the hearing of this appeal is discharged.

KARORI—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 177 (e)—"Question of proprietary title"—Defendant holding as proprietor—Appeal, forum of.

The question whether a defendant is holding as a sub-tenant or is cultivating the land as khudkasht with no obligations to pay rent to anybody is a real question of proprietary title within the meaning of section 177 e) of the Agra Tenancy Act, and in such a case an appeal lies to the District Judge and not to the Commissioner.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Agra Division, dated the 21st of August 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—[February 19, 1920]. —This is a second appeal in an ejectment suit, in which the appellant has been held by the Commissioner to be a sub-tenant of the respondent and liable to ejectment. The first ground argued before me is No. 2 in the grounds of appeal, which challenges the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to entertain the appeal.

The defendant in his pleadings set up the case that he was not a sub-tenant of the plaintiff but was in possession of the land as proprietor. The Assistant Collector found that the relation of landlord and tenant did subsist between the parties and accepted the entries in the Patwari's papers, but apparently by mistake he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Although no formal objection was made by the defendant when the plaintiff appealed to the Commissioner, apparently this point of jurisdiction was argued before him. He came to the conclusion that there was no real question of proprietary title involved, for that title had not been challenged. The only question in his view was whether the defendant was holding as a sub-tenant or was cultivating the land as khudkasht with no obligation to pay rent to anybody. Personally I agree in the view of the Commissioner that there was no real question of proprietary title in issue, but in Selected Decision No. 14 of 1915 the Board decided to be bound by the latest ruling of the High Court, namely, Bindeshwari v. Gokul (1).

This was a decision of a Full Bench on a reference by the Commissioner of the Gorakhpur Division, in which the question referred was precisely that arising in this case. The decision was given in 1914. As it is desirable to have a settled practice and the Board has already decided to follow the ruling quoted of the High Court, I think this appeal must succeed and the order I would pass is that the memorandum of appeal in this Court should be returned to the appellant by the Commissioner for presentation to the District Judge. In these circumstances the parties may bear their own costs in both Appellate Courts. I may add that the matter has been again decided by the Board in the sense I propose in a decision shortly to be published as Selected Decision No. 18 of 1919.

HOPKINS, S. M. —I agree.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 12th February 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Munshiganj, dated the 1st December 1917.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Appellants.

Babu Pares Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Dacca made in affirmance of an order of the Court of first instance to the effect that the appellants are liable to satisfy a decree for costs made in favour of the respondent in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. The respondent joined the appellants as defendants in the mortgage suit on the allegation that they were transferees of the equity of redemption. He obtained the usual mortgage decree specifying the amount due on the mortgage and the costs of the suit. The decree directed that if this sum was not paid within the period of grace by the defendants to the plaintiff, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof would be sold and the sale proceeds applied in satisfaction of the decree. Execution was taken out in due course and the decree was satisfied in part. But although the mortgaged properties had been exhausted, a considerable sum still remained due to the decree holder. The decree-holder thereupon applied for execution. The office raised a question as to whether execution could be had before the decree-holder had obtained a supplemental decree in accordance with Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court thereupon directed that the record should be sent for and that the matter should be put up for consideration in the presence of the decree-holder. No notice of the application was served upon the present appellants or upon any of the other judgment debtors. The Court subsequently came to the conclusion (and this was an ex parte decision) that a supplemental decree was not necessary and that execution could issue on account of costs as against the present appellants. Execution was issued with the result that the present appellants forthwith appeared before the Court and objected that they were not liable under the decree. The Court held that the matter had been previously decided and that they were bound by that order. They appealed, but to no purpose and the order of the first Court was confirmed. This view cannot be supported. As explained by Mr. Justice West in Sheik Budan v. Ramchandra (1), there is no room in such circumstances for the application of the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (2). That decision is based on the ground that if a party to an execution proceeding who had an opportunity to take exception to a proposed order of the Court has omitted to object, he is bound in the same way as if an adverse order had been made in his presence. In the case before us, the appellants had no notice of the application by the decree-holder. Indeed, the only matter for consideration before the Court at that stage was whether execution could proceed without a supplemental decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6. The Court could not have intended to decide, in the absence of the judgment-debtors, and without notice to them, the question of their liability under the decree. We must consequently hold that the order of the Courts below cannot be supported. The question now arises whether the matter should be remitted to the Court of first instance for consideration. Fortunately it is not necessary to do so. The decree has been produced before us and shows, on the face of it, that the defendants are not personally liable for the costs.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Court below set aside and the application dismissed with costs, both in this Court and in the Court below. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Maintenance grant—Mashahara bandegi patra, construction of—"Douhitransha," meaning of—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 160, applicability of.

A mashahara bandegi patra (maintenance grant), executed in favour of his daughter by a zemindar of considerable means having no son, recited that the daughter had been receiving a certain sum of money from his zemindari for her maintenance and other expenses, and that unless some deed was executed objection might be raised in future to her getting the "settled amount of maintenance" which was, therefore, made "kaim" (permanent) by the deed and it was, further, provided by the deed that the daughter would get the same in "douhitransha":

Held, (1) that the grant was intended to be perpetual and was not limited to the life of the daughter's sons; [p. 804, col. 2.]

(2) that the word "douhitransha" was intended to mean "in the line of the daughter's sons." [p. 804, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 22nd of June 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that District, dated the 11th of January 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit (with him Babu Kshirode Narain Bhuiyan), for the Appellant.—The only point for your Lordships' consideration is the construction of a document which has been described as a "Mashahara bandegi patra." The document was executed about seventy years ago by the maternal grandfather of the plaintiff's husband. It was a maintenance grant executed by the father in favour of his daughter, and the question is whether the grant was a perpetual one. I submit that having regard to the terms of the document, the grant is perpetual. The qualifying word used is "Douhitransha," which means "in the line of daughter's sons." If the grant was meant to be limited to the life only of the daughter's sons, appropriate words might have been used for that purpose. The document further provided that the amount of maintenance which the daughter had been receiving was thereby made "kaimi." The word 'kaimi' means permanent and implies that the grant is perpetual. Having regard to its real meaning, the document should be liberally construed. To find out the true intention of the executant your Lordships will also take into consideration the other circumstances of the case. Here is a Zeminder of considerable means having no son. He makes a maintenance grant of a comparatively small amount in favour of his daughter. Even, therefore, if the words used in the document are capable of being interpreted in two ways, your Lordships should give effect to the contention of the plaintiff.

Babu Brojolal Chakraverty (with him Babu Birendra Kumar Dey), for the Respondents.—The word "Angsha" means a share and therefore "Douhitransha" "means as the share of the daughter's sons." It cannot, therefore, go beyond the daughter's sons. If an estate of inheritance was meant to be created, appropriate words as "Putrapoutradi Krame" might have been used. In the absence of an express intention to grant an absolute estate, the grant must be taken to be limited to the life only of the daughter's sons and the principle enunciated in section 160 of the Indian Succession Act would apply.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover arrears of maintenance under a Masahara Bandegi Patra, dated the 12th Sraban 1255.

The deed was executed by one Jugal Kishore Acharji Choudhuri in favour of his daughter Janoki Debi. It recites that she had been receiving Rs. 317 for her maintenance and other expenses from his Zemindary, and that unless some deed was executed, objection might be raised in future to her getting the "settled amount of maintenance." The deed then (according to the translation furnished to the Court on behalf of the appellant) runs as follows:—"So I make the said amount of your maintenance permanent. Out of the said amcunt deducting Rs. 79 which is the annual profits from the 25 Paras of Brahmattar lands within my Zamindary, you shall get year after year the balance of Rs. 238 in Company's coin from my Zemindary in the line of my daughter's sons born of your womb."

The word in the original is Douhitransha and has been rendered as "in the line of my daughter's sons" in the above translation. The decision of the question involved in the case turns largely upon the meaning of that expression. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the word Angsha means heirs, and having regard to the circumstances mentioned in his judgment held that the grant was perpetual. On appeal the learned District Judge, Mr. Seaton, held that the grant was limited to the daughter's sons only. The plaintiff has appealed.

Janoki, it appears, had two sons, one of whom died childless. The other received the full amount of maintenance until his death. The plaintiff is his widow and she claims the right to the maintenance under a Will executed by her husband.

The word 'Angsha' means a share and sometimes it has been used in the books in connection with "heritage." We have, however, not come across the expression Douhitransha in any document, and there is some force in the observation of the learned District Judge about the absence of "some expression in common use and acknowledged meaning such as Putrapoutradi Krame." But the expression 'Douhitransha' must have been used to mean some persons besides the daughter's sons and we think it was intended to mean "in the line of the daughter's sons." The expression is also to be considered along with the fact that the settled amount of maintenance was made Kaim, which we think means, having regard to the context, permanent. The document was executed about 70 years ago (in 1848). It was drafted evidently not by a lawyer, and should be liberally construed having regard to its real meaning. The grantor was the owner of substantial Zemindary, the income whereof is admittedly about Rs. 20,000 a year. He had no son and had only two daughters, of whom Janoki was one. The amount of maintenance was a very small one, but as suggested on behalf of the appellant it might be due to the reluctance to impair the value of the estate which the male heir (the adopted son) was to receive.

It is unlikely, however, that the Zemindar should have intended that such a small grant, which might place the family of the daughter's sons at any rate above actual want, should cease after the daughter's sons, and if that was the intention, it could have been clearly expressed by saying that the daughter's sons (Douhitragan) would get it.

Having regard to the expression used and the fact that the settled amount of maintenance was made Kaim (permanent) and that the grant was made to the daughter by a Zemindar of considerable means who had no son, we think that the grant was intended to be perpetual.

Some reliance was placed upon the principle enunciated in section 160 of the Indian Succession Act in support of the contention that the grant was limited to the life of the daughter's sons. But apart from other considerations, the principle contended for cannot apply when a contrary intention appears in the document.

It is unnecessary to consider the question whether the amount of maintenance is a charge upon the defendants' estate, as the plaintiff has not in her plaint claimed any charge nor asked for declaration of any charge, and the suit is not framed for enforcing a claim for money charged upon immoveable property.

We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and below.

Decree set aside.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows:—Mukhan Lal, defendant No. 6 in the suit, was the sole proprietor of Mauza Patalma, Touzi No. 2966 of the Shahabad Collectorate. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were Bhaoli tenants of a portion of this Mauza. Somewhere about the year 1901 the defendant No. 6, Mukhan Lal, mortgaged Mauza Patalma to the plaintiff, Mukhan Lal remaining in possession. The plaintiff subsequently brought a suit on the basis of this mortgage and in 1907 he obtained a decree. In 1911 settlement proceedings started in Mauza Patalma. A dispute arose about rent between the defendant No. 6 and the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the defendant No. 6 claiming that the rent was Bhaoli rent and the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 claiming that it was Nagdi rent. The parties, however, came to an agreement that the defendants should pay Nagdi rent and this rate was settled under section 109 (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On the 8th of October 1912 the plaintiff purchased the property in execution of his mortgage decree and got possession, and on the 24th of November 1912 the Record of Rights was published with the rent of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 entered as settled under section 109 (c). The plaintiff has, therefore, brought this suit for a declaration that he is not bound by the entry in the Record of Rights. He also sued for arrears of Bhaoli rent. The suit was decreed in the trial Court and this decree having been upheld by the District Judge, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have appealed to this Court.

Both the lower Courts have found that before attestation the tenant defendants paid produce rent and that the rate settled on compromise under section 109 (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is considerably lower than the average rate settled on commutation of produce rent in the vicinity. There is also a finding of the Munsif, which has not been displaced by the learned District Judge, that the defendant No. 6, Mukhan Lal, colluded with the tenants and after taking a large Nazarana he agreed to an unjustifiably low rate because he saw no chance of saving the property from sale.

The first point which has been urged in appeal before us is that the rent having been commuted from Bhaoli into Nagdi rent under section 40, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction. This, however, is not a case of commutation at all and has not been treated as such in either of the lower Courts. Accordingly the question of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court does not arise. The real question is whether the mortgagee is bound by the agreement under section 109 (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which was made between the tenants and the mortgagor in possession. Both the lower Courts have found that he was not, and with this view I agree. The question under what circumstances a mortgagee is bound by the acts of the mortgagor in possession was fully discussed in Anand Ram Marwari v. Dhanpat Singh (1). After considering the cases of Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishori Kumari (2) and Reynolds v.

MUNAWARALI v. TAIYABALI.

Ashby & Sons, Limited (3) Atkinson, J., remarked: "It is thus laid down and recognised that where a person gets a contractual benefit from a mortgagor in possession after the date of the mortgage, the onus is upon such person to prove that it was a benefit which he might derive and retain in the usual course of the management of the property." In the present case it is perfectly obvious that the benefits which the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 derived from the agreement were not such as they might retain in the usual course of the management of the property. Up till the time of the agreement they paid produce rents. The rate settled on compromise was considerably lower than the fair rent which would have been settled on commutation, and it has been found by the learned Munsif that this abnormally low rate was entered into because the mortgagor saw no means of saving his property. He accordingly colluded with the tenants and on condition of a heavy Nazarana he entered into an agreement which no manager would in the usual course of management have entered into.

I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where a decree for joint possession of an estate assessed to revenue is passed by a Civil Court, it is for the Collector not only to make allotment but to complete the partition by delivery of possession, and where he refers the parties to the Civil Court for this purpose he fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law. [p. 807, col. 1.]

After the allotment has been made, the parties cannot claim to be joint owners of the property even though the partition proceedings have not been completed according to law. [p. 807, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 198 of 1918, decided on the 15th February 1919.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Pandit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant Munawarali and the defendant-respondent Tyabali are brothers. In Suit No. 79 of 1909 instituted by Tyabali a decree for partition was passed by the District Judge, Nimar, on the 2nd September 1912 declaring that their shares are equal halves and in accordance with section 54 and Order XX, rule 18, Civil Procedure Code, the decree directed that partition, so far as it related to the estate assessed to the payment of revenue to the Government, be made by the Collector. The Collector made two shares A and B. The share A was allotted to Tyabali and B to Munawarali by the Collector on the 10th March 1913. Munawarali thereupon appealed to the Commissioner who set aside the order. The Collector then passed a fresh order on the 29th September 1915, according to which share A was given to Munawarali and share B to Tyabali. Tyabali then applied to the Court of the District Judge for separate possession of his share, but the District Judge held that possession could not be given until a final decree had been drawn up on a non-judicial stamp and ordered Tyabali to furnish the requisite stamp. Tyabali failed to furnish the stamp and so no decree was drawn up, nor was possession delivered.

It seems, however, clear that upon the passing of the first order of the Collector Tyabali obtained possession of the share A and the settlement papers in 1913 show him in possession of this share. From Exhibit P-2 it appears that Munawarali applied on the 2nd August 1917 for being put in possession of the fields as finally partitioned. On this the Deputy Commissioner ordered that the applicant may be directed to go to the Civil Court for getting possession of the fields. Instead of applying to the Civil Court he has filed a suit for possession of share A.

The Munsif passed a decree for joint possession disallowing the plaintiff's claim for separate possession. The District Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit, and this second appeal has been filed by the plaintiff Munawarali.

The sole argument advanced is that the Munsif properly decreed joint possession of the share, though such a relief was not asked for in the plaint. I agree with the learned District Judge, following Parbhudas Lakhmidas v. Shankarbhai (1), that it is for the Collector not only to make allotment of the shares but to complete the partition by delivery of possession. The Collector in referring the applicant to the Civil Court made a mistake and failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law. But I am unable to see how that enables the plaintiff to ignore the partition proceedings and claim to be joint owner of the property after the allotment has been finally made by the Collector, though the partition proceedings have not yet been completed in accordance with law. To decree joint possession in such a case would be to interfere with the order for delivery of possession which, as the law contemplate, should be passed by the Collector.

Even if the Civil Court were competent to interfere with the allotment made by the Collector, it has been well pointed out that the order of the first Court was inequitable. Munawarali is admittedly in possession of share B and cannot claim to be awarded a decree for joint possession of share A as well. This argument of the learned District Judge appears to be unanswerable.

It has not been argued before me that the plaintiff should be given a decree for exclusive possession of share A. That is a matter which is apparently conceded to be solely within the jurisdiction of the Collector.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SHEORAJ KUERI—RESPONDENT.

Procedure—Trial of suit—Findings to be recorded on evidence adduced—Findings based on inadmissible evidence, effect of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Confidential inquiry as to possession, whether admissible.

In deciding a suit for the possession of a holding, the Court must record a finding on the evidence adduced before it and is not entitled to base its judgment upon matters which are not properly admissible in evidence. [p. 808, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued for possession of a holding. The suit was dismissed, the Judge relying upon a confidential inquiry conducted by an Assistant Settlement Officer at the time of the Revised Settlement for the purpose of ascertaining to whom the holding belonged:

Held, that the judgment could not be maintained as the proceedings of the confidential inquiry contained an opinion on an ex parte investigation which was not admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act, and that it was the duty of the Judge to record a finding on the evidence adduced before him. [p. 809, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Saran.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Saran. The plaintiff, who is the appellant before me, instituted the suit for declaration of his title to, and for confirmation of possession, or in the alternative for recovery of possession, of a holding bearing Survey No. 280/980. His case is that one Bhakole was in possession of this holding and that he continued the holding at a sale in execution of a decree for rent. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's suit but the Court of Appeal below, disagreeing with the Court of first instance, has dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The final entry in the Record of Rights is in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judge recognises that presumption is in favour of the plaintiff, but relying very greatly upon a confidential inquiry conducted by the Assistant Settlement Officer at the time of the Revisional Settlement, the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the holding in dispute never formed part of the holding of Bhakole. He says that the Assistant Settlement Officer writes that he made a confidential inquiry and ascertained that the holding belonged to the defendant. Being of opinion that the confidential inquiry made by the Assistant Settlement Officer deserves much consideration and also considering that the evidence of possession advanced by defendant was better than that adduced by the plaintiff, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In my view, the judgment of the learned Judge is wrong. If he had found on a consideration of the evidence that was adduced before him that the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant was better than that adduced on behalf of the plaintiff, he would have been within his rights in dismissing the plaintiff's case. But he, no doubt, took into consideration certain matters which, in my opinion, were not properly admissible in evidence. He ought not to have relied upon the confidential inquiry conducted by the Assistant Settlement Officer.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha on behalf of the respondent urges that the confidential inquiry conducted by the Assistant Settlement Officer was admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. In my view, this is not correct. Section 35 of the Evidence Act provides that "an entry in any public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or by any other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact." But in my view the opinion of the public officers formed on an ex parte investigation is not made admissible under section 35 or under any other section of the Evidence Act.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha next urges that the lower Appellate Court considered the oral evidence of both the parties and thought that the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant was better than the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. That is so, and if the lower Appellate Court had merely relied on his finding of the oral evidence in the case, I would be powerless to interfere with his decision in appeal. But since he relied, and very strongly relied, upon a document which, in my view, was not properly admissible in evidence, it is impossible to say to what conclusion he would have come had he excluded from his consideration the result of the confidential inquiry conducted by the Assistant Settlement Officer. It may be that he would have come to the opposite conclusion. In any case, the matter must be reconsidered by the learned Judge. I would allow this appeal and remand the case to the Court below for decision according to law.

There is another point which ought to be mentioned. The learned Judge has disposed of the case on his finding as to possession. This is not quite correct. The plaintiff as the auction purchaser has brought his suit within 12 years from the date of purchase. Even if he is out of possession, he is entitled to recover if otherwise he proves his title to the land in dispute. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs incurred in the Courts below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

Case remanded.

MOHAMAD ALLI—PLAINTIFF—NON-APPLICANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Property attached in execution—Purchaser from discharged defendant, whether party.

A person who, prior to the passing of a simple money decree, purchases from a discharged defendant property against which the decree is sought to be executed but which is not affected by the decree itself, is not a representative of that defendant within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against the decree in Civil Appeal No. 301 of 1915, in the Court of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, decided on the 14th February 1916, arising out of the decision in Miscellaneous Case No. 18 of 1915 in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Morsi, decided on the 10th September 1915.

Mr. N. M. Bedarkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 192 of 1912 on the file of the Sub-Judge, Morsi, one Mohamad Ali and Daudbhai sued Vinayakrao and Baliram claiming Rs. 2,800 on khata accounts. They obtained a decree for that sum and costs from the second defendant Baliram alone. In execution of that decree field Survey No. 20 of Mouza Tarora and Survey No. 44 of Mouza Khanapur were attached. Baliram's son Kashirao filed an objection to the attachment, contending that he had purchased the fields in suit from Vinayakrao and that they were attached from his possession. The sale took place during the pendency of the civil suit and before the passing of the decree. The first Court found that the application fell within Order XXI, rule 58 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was disallowed. It was contended in appeal before the learned District Judge, Amraoti that the application comes under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and not under Order XXI, rules 58 59. The Judge holds that Kashirao is not the respresentative of Vinayakrao and that his application was rightly dealt with under Order XXI, rule 58, and that such being the case no appeal lies. The appeal was dismissed.

The short point argued here is that Kashirao is the representative of Vinayakrao who was admittedly a party to the civil suit, and as such his application to release the land from attachment was one to be dealt with under section 47, Civil Procedure Code and that an appeal, therefore, lay against the first Court's order to the lower Appellate Court. I am referred to Balaram Kunbi v. Sadeba Mali (1), Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (2) and the dissenting judgment of Sir John Stanley in Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (3), in support of the contention that the present appellant is Vinayakrao's representative-in interest. Now the decree did not bind the fields. It was a money decree. Vinayakrao, if still the owner of the fields, could doubtless have his claim to them determined in execution proceedings; but the appellant, who says he purchased from Vinayakrao prior to the date of the money-decree, is not in my opinion a representative of Vinayakrao within the meaning of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. Appellant according to his own story did not succeed to the rights of Vinayakrao after the decree was passed; Kameshwar Pershad v. Run Bahadur Singh (4). In my opinion it would be stretching section 47 too far to hold that that section included in an application for execution of a simple money-decree a person who had purchased from a discharged defendant property against which the decree was sought to be executed but which was not affected by the decree itself. I think the case has been rightly decided in the lower Appellate Court and, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—Ex parte decree—Application to set aside decree unaccompanied by decretal amount or security—Time, whether can be granted for furnishing security—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 148, applicability of, to Provincial Small Cause Court.

Where an application, under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, is made to set aside an ex parte decree, the applicant must at the time of making the application either deposit in Court the decretal amount or furnish security for the performance of the decree. The provisions of the section are mandatory, and the Court has no power to grant time for furnishing security. [p. 810, col. 2.]

The provisions of section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be applied to extend the time for doing an act prescribed by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. [p. 811, col. 1.]

Application from a decision of the Small Cause Court Judge, Purneah.

Mr. Shiveswar Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Lal Mohan Ganguly, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court refusing to restore a Small Cause Court suit under Order IX, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that the suit was decreed ex parte in favour of the plaintiffs on the 16th September last. On the 19th September the defendant applied under Order IX, rule 13, for setting aside the ex parte decree and for re-hearing of the original suit, but the applicant did not deposit into Court the amount due from him under the decree or give security to the satisfaction of the Court for the performance of the decree which was passed against him. The Court, however, gave him time to furnish the security bond on or before the 13th of November and the applicant did furnish a security bond within the time allowed to him by the Court. When the application ultimately came on for hearing, the plaintiffs who had succeeded before the learned Judge argued that inasmuch as at the time of presenting his application the applicant did not deposit into Court the amount due from him under the decree or give security to the satisfaction of the Court for the performance of the decree, the application could not be heard. The learned Judge agreeing with this contention has rejected the appellant's application. In my view, the learned Judge has taken an entirely correct view of the law on the subject. Section 17 gives a right to apply for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte, but it imposes certain conditions on the defendant. Those conditions will be found in section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which runs as follows:—"Provided that an applicant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte or for a review of judgment shall, at the time of presenting his application, either deposit in the Court the amount due from him under the decree or in pursuance of the judgment, or give security to the satisfaction of the Court for the performance of the decree or compliance with the judgment, as the Court may direct." It seems to me that this section is mandatory. It is impossible to read this section in any other way. Obviously the Legislature intended to discourage, so far as was possible, applications for setting aside ex parte decrees in respect of Small Cause Court suits. The Calcutta High Court has consistently taken the view that this section is mandatory, but it appears that under the latest case the Calcutta High Court has taken the view that it is not necessary that the security bond should be filed along with the application. It is sufficient according to this decision if the security bond is furnished within the time limited for making an application under Order IX, rule 13 It is, in my view, unnecessary to decide whether the security bond should be filed along with the application or not, because in any view of the case the security bond was in fact furnished long beyond the time allowed under the law for making an application under Order IX, rule 13.

The learned Vakil, however, argues that the Code of Civil Procedure now gives an express power to the Court for extending time and that consequently the Court had power to extend the time and did in fact exercise that power and that consequently the Court ought not to have rejected the application. In my view, this argument is not sound. Section 148 provides that "where any period is fixed or granted by the Court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by the Code, the Court may, in its discretion, from time to time, enlarge such period, even though the period originally fixed or granted may have expired." It is obvious that section 148 has no application to the facts of this case, because the doing of the act, namely, furnishing the security bond, is prescribed not by the Code of Civil Procedure but by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. I would accordingly reject this application with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Where there is a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding, it is only on the theory of abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the landlord can re-enter and where such abandonment took place 12 years before the landlord's suit to recover khas possession, the only way of overcoming the bar of limitation to the suit would be by establishing a case within section 18 of the Limitation Act. To establish a case of adverse possession against the landlord by the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding it must be shown that the possession was adequate in continuity, publicity and extent. The element of publicity would be wanting if the landlord was not aware of the transfer, and where the element of publicity is wanting the element of extent would also be wanting. [p. 813, col. 2.]

Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi, 36 Ind. Cas. 890; 20 C. W. N. 773, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 30th of April 1919, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Jhenidah, dated the 26th of February 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Indu Bhusan Roy, for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The plaintiffs are the landlords of a non-transferable occupancy holding and brought this suit for recovery of khas possession of the holding on the ground that their tenant had abandoned the holding. One Isa Sheikh was the original tenant. In 1311 B. S. he sold the holding to the wife of defendant No. 1 and since then we are in possession of the holding as her heirs. Thus by continuing in possession for more than twelve years we have acquired the limited interest of tenants. The landlord's right to get khas possession is barred by limitation. The landlord's right to recover khas possession accrued as soon as the original tenant transferred the holding. The question of the landlord's knowledge of the transfer is immaterial unless, of course, it is shown that the landlord was kept out of the knowledge of the right to sue by fraud so as to bring the case within section 18 of the Limitation Act. See Probhabati Dasi v. Taibaturineesi Chaudhurani (1) and Parchkari Chattapadhya v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2).

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose for Babu Upendra Narain Bagchi, for the Respondents.—I was in possession through the original tenant till 1316 B S. I was receiving rent through the defendants only as marfatdars of the original tenant. Rent was being paid through the original tenant within 12 years of the suit. In the case of the transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding the right of the landlord to re-enter depends on the question as to whether there has been abandonment or not, i. e., abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Unless that abandonment took place 12 years before suit, the principle of the two cases cited by my learned friend would not apply. The case in Probhabati Dasi v.

(2) 28 Ind. Cas. 708; 19 C. W. N. 456.

Taibaturinessa Chaudhurani (1) was distinguished by this Court in Second Appeal No. 803 of 1914. The landlord's knowledge of the transfer is essential. Until the landlord comes to know of the transfer, the tenancy subsists in the original tenant. Finally, if my learned friend wants to establish title by adverse possession, it must be shown that his adverse possession was adequate in continuity, publicity and extent. Refers to Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (3) and Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (4). The element of publicity would be wanting if the landlord was not aware of the defendant's possession.

Babu Indu Bhusan Roy briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by the defendants. The suit was one for khas possession. The plaintiff, who is the landlord, alleged that one Isa Sheikh, an occupancy raiyat, was the original tenant until 1319, that he then abandoned the holding and when the plaintiff went in 1320 to take khas possession, he was resisted by the defendant who alleged that he was a purchaser from Isa Sheikh. The holding in question was not a transferable one. The defence was that Isa had left the holding more than 12 years before the institution of the suit, the first defendant's wife having purchased the holding from him in 1311, and after her death the defendants, her heirs, possessed the land and paid rent to the landlord in the name of the old tenant, therefore, they were not liable to be ejected, and the suit was barred by limitation. Both Courts decreed the suit.

The facts found are that Isa sold this holding 12 years and 3 weeks before the institution of the suit, the defendants and their predecessor have been in fact in possession since then, but the plaintiff was not aware of this till at most 5 years before the institution of the suit. The defendants alleged a tender of rent to the plaintiff in 1318, and though the Appellate Court has not definitely come to a finding whether that story is true or not, at any rate this much is found that before that the plaintiff was not aware of the transfer and of the defendants' possession. There is also a finding by the first Court, which is not touched by the Appellate Court, that for the years 1313 to 1316 the plaintiff got a decree for rent against the original tenant Isa. The rent decreed was deposited in Court and on that occasion the defendants did not "attempt to prove that the deposit was made in his name" (which I take to mean that the defendants did not try to prove that they made the deposit) or that at that time any plea of the transfer of Isa's interest was made. The first Court also found that the defendants never tried to get recognition from the plaintiff, a finding with which the Appellate Court did not interfere. On these findings the Courts have held that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The question of limitation is again raised before me. Though it is called a question of limitation, it is presented as a plea of adverse possession, that is that by continuing in possession for over 12 years the defendants have acquired the limited interest of tenants. The learned Vakil for the appellants has referred to two cases to show that the question of the landlord's knowledge of the transfer is immaterial and that to succeed he has to make out facts sufficient to establish a case within section 18 of the Limitation Act, that is, that he has been kept out of the knowledge of the right to sue by fraud till within the period of 12 years before suit.

The first of the two cases referred to is that of Probhabati Dasi v. Taibaturinessa Chaudhurani (1) In that case it appears that rent was actually paid by the transferee, though it was paid in the name of the original tenant, while receipts known as marfatdari receipts were given in which the name of the transferee appeared as the person actually paying the money. In that case it was remarked that "the right to recover must be by reason of forfeiture or abandonment; whichever it be, this event occurred very many years more than 12 prior to the commencement of the suit and the only way of overcoming this bar would be by establishing a case within section 18 of the Limitation Act." The other case is that of Panchkari Chattapadhya v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2). The case was decided on the authority of the earlier cited case. The statement of facts shows that the case was based on the theory of abandonment and it was found that the transferee had been openly in possession of the land ever since the purchase and had been paying rent to the landlord's officers who had given him receipts describing him as guzratdar.

(3) 26 Ind. Cas. 890; 20 C. W. N. 773.

(4) 27 C. 943; 27 I. A. 136; 4 C. W. N. 597; 2 Bom. L. R. 594; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 714; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 617.

The learned Vakil for the respondent distinguishes these cases from the present case in this way. He argues that the right of the landlord to re-enter depends on the question whether there has been abandonment or not and that means abandoment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, also that in the present case there has been no abandonment until within the period of limitation. Of course it is only on the theory of there being abandonment that the landlord can re-enter and unless that abandonment took place 12 years before suit, the principle of the two cases cited would not apply. In the present case there is no finding as to the abandonment having taken place more than 12 years before suit. On the contrary, as I have already stated with reference to the facts found, it appears that the money decreed in the rent suit was deposited in the name of the original tenant and there is nothing to show that it was deposited by the defendants, even though in fact they were in possession. Consequently it has not been shown that the abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act took place more than 12 years before suit.

This is enough to dispose of the matter, but I may point out that in another case of this Court, the case of Probhabati Dasi v. Taibaturinessa Chaudhrani (1) was distinguished, that is, Second Appeal No. 803 of 1914. That was an appeal from a judgment in which the learned District Judge had referred to that case and to the cases of Deb Narain Dutt v. Baidya Nath (5), Tarak Das Pal Chowdhury v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (6). When the matter came before this Court, the learned Judges remarked that the Additional District Judge had omitted an important item which appears in those decisions, namely, that the landlord must know of the transfer to the purchaser.

It is hardly necessary to refer to a further argument that has been advanced, which has considerable force, and that is that to establish a case of adverse possession, the adverse possession must be adequate in continuity, publicity and extent. Obviously the element of publicity is wanting if the landlord was not aware of it, and if the element of publicity is wanting the element of extent is also wanting [Ram Chandra Sial v. Ramanmani Dasi (3)].

I think the learned Subordinate Judge puts the matter quite correctly when he says the period of limitation runs from the date when the tenancy of the plaintiff's tenant, that is, the vendor of the wife of defendant No. 1, came to an end and the adverse possession of the defendants commenced, and he finds that the adverse possession commenced in 1319. That being so, the case of adverse possession is not made out.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ONKAR MAL MARWARI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Where in a case of eviction from lands which formed a Cantonment the defendants allege that they have acquired a permanent tenancy, the burden of proving such tenancy lies upon them; the facts that they and their predecessors held the lands without a lease for a very long time, that the rent was never altered, that succession to the lands by transfer and inheritance has been established, and that buildings have been erected on the lands, do not by themselves establish a permanent tenancy, nor do such circumstances raise any presumption of ownership in favour of the defendants or their predecessors-in-title. [p. 814, col. 2.]

The fact that permanent structures are constructed on such lands to the knowledge of the plaintiff would not estop him from denying the permanent character of the tenancy of the defendants. [p. 815, col. 1.]

Where a person with full knowledge of the limited interest which he possesses in land constructs permanent structures upon the same, he is not entitled upon eviction to any compensation. [p. 815, col. 2.]

Appeals from a decision of the District Judge, Manbhum.

Messrs. P. K. Sen and Abani Bhusan Mukherji, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A.A. Asghur (Government Advocate), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of two suits which were instituted by the Secretary of State for India in Council against the defendants for khas possession of the lands in suit by evicting the defendants. The plaintiff's case is that village Doranda with other villages constituted a Cantonment which was created in 1833 or 1834. That towards the end of 1905 the troops were withdrawn from the station but it continued to be managed by Cantonment Regulations up to 1908. At the end of 1908 the Cantonment Regulations were withdrawn and the station has since then been managed by the Khas Mahal Department. It was further alleged that during the period when Cantonment Regulations were in force, no permanent settlement of any kind was made but that people used to live there under the permission of the military authorities and that the permission to the predecessors of the defendants to remain within the Cantonment was simply a license and did not give them any permanent right whatsoever. The defendants contested the suits on the allegation that they had a permanent interest in the lands in dispute. They further alleged that they had built permanent structures and costly buildings with the knowledge of the authorities and contended that the plaintiff was estopped from denying their permanent right to the lands. There were other pleas also taken, but it is not necessary to deal with them as they were not touched in the course of the arguments before me. Both the Courts below came to the conclusion that the possession of the lands in suit by the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants was on sufferance or at the highest it was a tenancy from year to year and that the defendants had absolutely no permanent interest in the lands in suit, and, therefore, held that the plaintiff was entitled to evict them. These second appeals have been filed against the decrees of the lower Appellate Court. The learned Counsel for the appellants firstly contended that on the evidence in the case the permanent tenancy of the defendants had been established. There can be no doubt that, on a question whether the tenure is permanent or precarious, the burden of proof must lie upon the defendant who sets up the permanent tenancy. It is not alleged that there was any written lease under which the predecessors of the defendants were inducted on the land. But it is argued that as they held these lands for a very long time and the rent had never been altered, that as succession to the lands by transfer and inheritance had been established and that as buildings have been erected on them, the permanent tenancy of the defendants must be inferred. I will presently show that these circumstances by themselves do not and cannot establish permanent tenancy, but considering that permanent tenancy is claimed in lands which formed part of a Cantonment governed by Cantonment Regulations these circumstances are almost valueless to prove permanent tenancy. The whole scheme of the regulations under which Cantonments have been established in India seems to be based on the principle that the Cantonment Authorities or the Government should not in any circumstances contract themselves out of the powers to resume lands lying within a Cantonment. It is unnecessary to refer to the various Regulations and Acts governing Cantonments, as this point has not been challenged by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellants. In the case of Kaikhusru Aderji v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that "Such circumstances raise no presumption that the appellants or their predecessors in-title were owners, and that the appellants were mere licensees and the land in question was lawfully resumable by Government." It has been found that the defendants and their predecessors came on this land after the year 1834 when the Cantonment was established, and, therefore, it must be taken that the right of the Government to resume the land, even when buildings have been erected thereon, was fully known by the defendants and their predecessors. Great reliance has been placed by Mr. Sen on the fact that permanent structures had been constructed on these lands, and, therefore, it is submitted that the plaintiff is estopped from denying the permanent character of the tenancy of the defendants. The leading authority on the law upon this point is Ramsden v. Dyson (2), where the Lord Chancellor at page 141 of the report observed: "It follows as a corollary from these rules, or, perhaps, it would be more accurate to say it forms part of them, that if my tenant builds on land which he holds under me, he does not thereby, in the absence of special circumstances, acquire any right to prevent me from taking possession of the land and buildings when the tenancy has determined. He knew the extent of his interest, and it was his folly to expend money upon a title which he knew would or might soon come to an end." Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3) at page 502 observed as follows: "If there be one point settled in the Equity Law of England, it is, that in circumstances similar to those of the present case, the mere erection by the tenant of permanent structures upon the land let to him, in the knowledge of and without interference by his lessor, will not suffice to raise the equitable right against the latter which has been affirmed by the Courts below." There is absolutely no evidence that the defendants were induced to expend their money by reason of something amounting to an agreement or license on the part of the landlord. Under these circumstances the plaintiff in my opinion has established an irresistible case for the eviction of the defendants. Mr. Sen, however, has pressed upon me the question of compensation. He has submitted that at any rate he is entitled to compensation with respect to the structures. In this connection it may be observed that the maxim "quicquid in ædificatum solo, solo cedit" has no application to the present case and as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3) referred to above, the rule established in India is that of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that "the lessee may remove, at any time during the continuance of the lease, all things which he has attached to the earth: provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it." If the defendants with full knowledge of the limited interest which they possessed in the land constructed permanent structures upon the same, they are not entitled to any compensation as in the words of the Lord Chancellor "it was their folly to expend money upon a title which they knew would or might soon come to an end." That the Government allowed compensation to some other persons who were similarly evicted is irrelevant to the determination of the legal rights of the parties. Nor has condition IX of the Annexure to Form A of the Cantonment Code of 1899, which is the form of lease for lands situate in Bazars, etc., any bearing upon these cases where no lease is ever said to have been executed. The result is that these appeals are dismissed with costs.

Appeal, second—Document, admissibility of—Objection, whether can be taken in second appeal—Finding by trial Court—Appellate Court, difference by—Reasons for finding.

An objection to the admissibility of a document cannot be taken for the first time in second appeal where an answer to the objection involves an enquiry into facts. [p. 817, col. 1]

An Appellate Court, in arriving at a conclusion different from that of the Court of first instance, should state its reasons for the same in order to enable a Court of second appeal to see whether the conclusion has been legally drawn. [p. 817, col. 2; p. 818, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 24th of February 1919, reported as 50 Ind. Cas. 468, affirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Faridpore, dated the 31st January 1917, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 903 of 1917.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt, for the Appellants.—The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. The first Court found that the defendants were occupancy ryots. The lower Appellate Court reversed the first Court's judgment without assigning any reason on this question of the status of the defendants and decreed the suit. On appeal to this Hon'ble Court which was heard by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Greaves, the decision of the lower Appellate Court was confirmed. My submission is that the Courts ought to have rejected Exhibit H as being inadmissible in evidence. If that had been done, then I would have succeeded. The documents relied on by the Courts are quite irrelevant to the present suit as they do not relate to identical lands. The defendants being occupancy ryots are not liable to be ejected. The question of the status of the defendants depends upon that of the plaintiffs' landlords. If the plaintiffs are tenure holders the defendants are ryots. If the plaintiffs are ryots the defendants are under-ryots. The first Court found that the defendants are occupancy ryots. The learned Subordinate Judge held that they are trespassers and decreed the suit, although he did not state the reasons for reversing the finding of the learned Munsif. The question of the status of the defendants is very material and it cannot be lightly disposed of. Refers to Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Secretary of State for India (1), Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendra Mansingh (2). I would, therefore, ask for a remand for the trial of the question.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakravarty), for the Respondents.—With regard to the first point urged by the other side, I submit the documents were relevant to the present case as they related to lands held under a common title. Hence they were admissible in evidence. Further the documents went in without any objection and it is now too late in the day to put forward that objection which ought not to be entertained at all. As regards the status of the defendants the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is conclusive on the point. It cannot be questioned in this Court. The learned Judge has not assigned reasons because they are obvious on the record. The appeal should, therefore, be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—Two questions are raised in this appeal. The first is whether the plaintiffs have made out any title and the second is whether assuming that title had been so made out, the defendants are entitled to remain on the land and are protected from ejectment by reason of the fact that they are, as they allege, raiyats with rights of occupancy. Upon the question of title the judgment of this Court is impugned on the ground that the learned Judge, whilst holding that certain documents were inadmissible, has yet thought that the judgment of the lower Appallate Court might be affirmed on the ground that besides such documents there was sufficient evidence on the record to justify the conclusions at which the lower Appellate Court had arrived.

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 226; 46 C. 90; 23 C. W. N. 643; 45 I. A. 190 (P. C.).

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 411; 45 C. 805; 5 P. L. W. 1; 35 M. L. J. 214; 27 C. L. J. 543; 22 C. W. N. 674; 16 A. L. J. 522; 23 M. L. T. 384; (1918) M. W. N. 379; 20 Bom. L. R. 743; 45 I. A. 67 (P. C.).

As regards this Mr. Justice Greaves has assumed for the purposes of his judgment that Exhibit H was inadmissible. It does not appear, therefore, whether he was of opinion that the document was admissible or inadmissible. But he has assumed that it was inadmissible in favour of the appellants now before us. As regards the decree it is not quite clear whether or not he considered that document to be inadmissible. There are words in the judgment which seem to support that conclusion, for he says: "there is no evidence on the record to show that the land in that suit was held under the same title as the land in the present suit."

It has, however, been urged that if these documents were inadmissible or were assumed to be such for the purposes of the judgment, this Court which does not deal with facts could not say what the Subordinate Judge's decision would have been, had he been concerned with the dakhilas alone. I am not prepared to uphold the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon the grounds upon which Mr. Justice Greaves has rested his decision in this respect. I refer to his decision on the question of title. I think, however, that the appeal fails on this issue of title and on the ground, namely, that no objection was taken to the reception of the documents, the admissibility of which is now called in question.

The case made out as regards their admissibility by the respondents is this. They say that the previous transaction evidenced by Exhibit H and the decree to which I have referred, related no doubt to lands other than those in suit, but that nevertheless those documents were relevant on the ground that the lands to which they refer and the lands in suit were held on the same title. The documents were assertions, therefore, of the title which the plaintiffs made in the present suit. I am not prepared to hold that, in second appeal, this contention of the respondents could be made good, because the question whether or not the lands referred to in those documents and the lands in suit were, as alleged, held under a common title is one which involves an enquiry into facts. I, therefore, base my judgment as regards this question of title on the ground that these documents were admitted without objection. An objection was in this case all the more necessary, because the objection which is raised was that the document had no relevancy, having no connection with the matters in issue in the suit. Had that point been taken, it might have been open to the defendants-respondents to show that they were relevant in the manner which has been alleged before us here. I am of opinion, therefore, that the grounds upon which the decision of the learned Judge as to title is impugned fail.

There remains, however, the consideration of the second question, namely, whether the defendants were raiyats or under-raiyats. If they are, as alleged, raiyats with a right of occupancy, they cannot be ejected. This is a question which depends upon whether the plaintiffs are tenure-holders or raiyats and which requires a careful consideration of the evidence. I may refer in this connection to the decision (amongst others) in the case of Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Secretary of State for India (1) and to the decision in the case of Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendra Mansingh Bhramarbar Roy (2).

Now, the first Court which went into this matter dealt with the evidence, stated its reasons and came to the conclusion that the defendants were raiyats with rights of occupancy. On appeal that decision is reversed in the following terms:—

"Considering the evidence in the record I find that the plaintiff's interest is that of a raiyat at fixed rate. It is never a tenure as alleged by the defendants. The defendants' father was then an under-raiyat. The interest of an under-raiyat is not heritable, so the defendants are merely trespassers in the land. The fact that they are in possession for a very long time would not help their position a bit. Under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, an under-raiyat can be ejected after service of notice. The defendants are not entitled to such notice, still they are served with one. I, therefore, find they are liable to be ejected from the land." Though the learned Subordinate Judge reverses the decison of the first Court upon this issue, he has given no reasons for the conclusions at which he has come. We should have known the grounds upon which the decision of the Subordinate Judge in this matter was based so as to see whether the conclusions had been legally drawn. I think, therefore, that, on this point the case should be re heard in appeal by a Judge other than the Judge who previously heard the appeal, and in arriving at a conclusion as to the status of the defendants the reasons for that conclusion should be stated.

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 226; 46 C. 90; 23 C. W. N. 649; 45 I. A. 190 (P. C.).

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 411; 45 C. 805; 5 P. L. W. J; 27 C. L. J. 543; 22 C. W. N. 674; 16 A. L. J. 522; 23 M. L. T. 384; (1918) M. W. N. 379; 20 Bom. L. R. 743; 35 M. L. J. 214; 45 I. A. 67 (P. C.).

The result, therefore, is that we set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it is thereby held that the defendants are mere trespassers and, therefore, liable to be ejected. The finding and decree on the question of title will stand. The appeal, therefore, will be re-heard upon the question only whether the defendants are, as they allege, raiyats with rights of occupancy on the land which is in suit and, therefore, protected from ejectment which the plaintiffs seek in this suit.

As regards costs, the order we make is this. In so far as the appellants have partly succeeded and partly failed, each party will bear his own costs of the appeal in this Court, but all the other costs in this litigation will abide the result of the re-hearing of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court, which we hereby direct.

Appeal partly allowed;
Case remanded.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 50, 115—Enhancement of rent, suit for, after publication of Record of Rights—Tenant, whether entitled to presumption under s. 50—S. 115, effect of, on s. 50.

Where after the publication of a Record of Rights a landlord brings a suit for enhancement of rent against an occupancy raiyat, the latter is precluded from relying upon the presumption raised in section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, because the provisions of that section are controlled by section 115 of the Act. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Special Judge, Mozafferpore.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Rai Guru Saran Prasad and Nawal Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, by which the landlords applied for a fair rent to be settled for the excess lands in possession of the defendants under sections 52 and 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The application was disposed of in the first instance by the Settlement Officer. Then there was an appeal to the Special Judge who, by his judgment dated the 20th September 1917, disposed of the application.

As regards the holdings under the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 6 and 7, the Special Judge held that there could be no enhancement because they were holding the lands under kabuliyats executed by the defendants in favour of the landlords. As regards the holding of defendant No. 3 he held in favour of the applicant landlord and came to the conclusion that the landlord had made out a good case for enhancement under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As regards the holding of defendant No. 4 the Special Judge held that a case for enhancement under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been made out against him but that the application for enhancement under section 30 had failed. As regards the holding of defendant No. 5 the learned Judge held that he was entitled to the benefit of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The landlord has filed this appeal against the decision of the Special Judge. He firstly contends that the learned Judge's decision with respect to the holding of defendant No. 5 is clearly wrong inasmuch as, while attempting to follow the decision of the Full Bench case of Pirthi Chand Lal Choudhury v. Sheikh Basarat Ali (1), he has held directly against that decision. That case was followed in this Court by my learned brother Mr. Justice Coutts and myself in the case of Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Bhagwan Mahto (2), where it was held that section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act controls section 50, clause (2), under which an occupancy raiyat is precluded from relying upon the presumption raised in section 50 after the publication of the Record of Rights when the landlord brings a suit for the enhancement of the rent. Therefore, it is clear that the defendant No. 5 was not entitled to the benefit of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the appeal as against him must, therefore, succeed.

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 449; 13 C. W. N. 1149; 10 C. L. J. 343; 37 C. 30.
(2) 54 Ind. Cas. 672; 1 P. L. T. 27.

It was urged on behalf of the appellant that as against the defendant No. 4 his application for enhancement ought to have been considered on the ground of general rise in prices. The Special Judge seems to have considered the register of the Collector prepared under section 39 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the case of the defendant No. 3, and there seems to be no reason why the same benefit should not be given to the landlord as against the defendant No. 4 as was given to him as against the defendant No. 3. In my opinion the landlord is entitled to an enhancement against the defendant No. 4 on the ground of rise in prices, which admittedly had existed because the learned Judge himself gave him the benefit of that rise as against the defendant No. 3.

As regards the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 6 and 7, the learned Vakil for the appellant has submitted that the kabuliyats alleged to have been executed by them in favour of the landlord are not binding upon the landlord inasmuch as there is no evidence to show that the kabuliyats were, as a matter of fact, accepted by the landlord. The first Court found that these kabuliyats were executed by the defendants Nos. 1 2, 6 and 7 in the presence of the landlord, and judging from certain circumstances he came to the conclusion that these kabuliyats were accepted by the landlord. The learned Judge in appeal has not disturbed that finding and, therefore, I think, I would be justified in holding that the kabuliyats were not only executed by the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 6 and 7 but were also accepted by the landlord. This is a finding of fact arrived at by the first Court and which has not been disturbed by the lower Appellate Court.

The result is that this appeal succeeds as against the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, and I declare that the landlord is entitled to the enhancement he claimed as against these two defendants. He has already been declared to be entitled to enhancement under section 30 as against the defendant No. 3 and under section 52 as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 4. His application for enhancement, however, fails as against the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 6 and 7 under section 30. As against defendants Nos. 1, 6 and 7 it also fails under section 52. The result is that the appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court as well as in the two Courts below from the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, but he must pay the costs in this Court to defendants Nos. 1, 2, 6 and 7.

I direct that the case be sent back to the lower Appellate Court for a determination of the excess rent payable by the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 in addition to that by the defendant No. 3.

Appeal partly allowed;
Case sent back.

GAJADHAR AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS

BENI PRASAD AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage of grove land—Mortgagee, right of, to let for cultivation—Lease, whether binding upon mortgagor.

It is within the rights of a mortgagee of grove land to let the land for agricultural purposes, and such letting is binding on the mortgagor. Where grove land is so let, the mortgagor cannot set up the fiction that it was not held for these purposes. [p. 820, col. 2]

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 19th of May 1919, in the case of ejectment.

GAJADHAR v. BENI PRASAD.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are correctly set out in the following portion of the Assisant Collector's judgment:—

"The plots in suit were originally groves and are recorded as uncultivated groves bila lagan in the names of Shankar, etc., the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs, in khatauni of Settlement 1284 F. In 1293 F. the groves were mortgaged with possession by Shankar to Hira Lal who was the proprietor of the land on which the groves existed. The plots in question ceased to be grove long ago and became ordinary cultivated land. They were first cultivated by the proprietary of the land for 3 years and subsequently let to tenants. No. 505 was let to Beni's father in 1299 F. and No. 535 to Mata Badal in 1306 F. Revenue was assessed on No. 505 in 1891 and on No. 535 about 1899. There are only two pipal trees left. They are at a distance of 3 bighas from each other on the boundary line. It is consequently quite clear that both the plots ceased to be grove prior to 1899 and have been all along used for agricultural purposes since they were denuded of trees.

A suit for redemption was brought in the Court of the Munsif in 1912 by the plaintiffs. The decision went through several modifications and ultimately in 1915 the redemption of the mortgage was allowed by the High Court subject to the tenancy of the defendant. The money has been deposited in the Civil Court and the redemption has been made."

The applicant has now sued to eject the respondents, describing himself as an occupancy tenant and the respondents as his sub-tenants. The Commissioner has held that whether the respondents are tenants of the applicant or tenants of the Zamindar, they have acquired occupancy rights and the applicant has no right to eject them.

The applicant has made no attempt to show that he is an occupancy tenant. The application for revision is made to this Court on the ground that the Commissioner's finding is contrary to the decision of the High Court, that the finding of the Civil Court that the land is a grove cannot be questioned, that the applicant as a grove holder is a tenant within the meaning of the Tenancy Act, and that the respondents are his sub-tenants and liable to ejectment.

The portion of the High Court's final judgment which is relevant to these matters is the following :—

"The mortgagees were in possession ever since the year 1886. They were entitled to deal with the property as a prudent owner would have done. This would almost necessarily involve the right to make usual tenancies. We think that upon redemption of the mortgage the persons who were bona fide in occupation of the land or some parts of it as tenants ceased to be the tenants of the mortgagee and became the tenants of the redeeming mortgagors. This we think was the true position of the respondents in the present appeal. Actual possession should not be granted against them. The decree ought to have been for redemption of the mortgage as against all the defendants but subject to the rights (whatever they were) of the present respondents as tenants. It was no part of the duty of the Civil Court, nor was it within its jurisdiction, to ascertain what was the real nature of the rights of these tenants; that is a matter which will be properly tried by the Revenue Court and we desire to make it quite clear in our judgment that we express no opinion as to whether these persons have acquired occupancy rights or not."

The High Court clearly recognizes the position of the respondents as tenants.

It is argued that on the finding of the Civil Courts that the land is a grove which is the basis of the order for redemption, it is not land let or held for agricultural purposes and that no occupancy rights can be acquired in it. But the land was let for cultivation, and the High Court have held that this letting was within the rights of the mortgagee. It is, therefore, binding upon the mortgagor, the applicant. Having through his representative let the land for agricultural purposes, he cannot now set up the fiction that it was not held for these purposes.

It is then contended that the applicant as a grove-holder is a tenant and the respondents are, therefore, his sub-tenants and debarred from acquiring occupancy rights. Reliance is placed upon the Board's rulings in Pandit Badri Prasad v. Bhim Sen (1) and Megh Singh v. Musammat Nazar Fatma (2). But the effect of these rulings is that a grove-holder is a tenant if he pays rent in cash or kind for the grove. In the present case the grove is held without payment of rent and the applicant is, therefore, not a tenant.

In my opinion there are no grounds for interfering in revision with the Commissioner's order. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

THE CHAIRMAN, MUNICIPALITY OF BEHAR—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 85—Tax—Assessment, liability to—Criterion for determining liability—"Within", meaning of.

In order to enforce the liability of a person to be assessed with tax under section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act, the Municipality must show that he not only has a holding within the limits of the Municipality, but that he has circumstances or property within those limits. The fact that he is in receipt of an income from property situate outside the limits of the Municipality and spends that income within those limits would not satisfy the requirements of the section. The word "within" in section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act refers not only to property but also to circumstances. [p. 821, col. 2]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Messrs. Purnendu Narain Sinha and Netai Chandra Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Siveswar Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was instituted by the appellant Saiyid Muhammad Ali Nawab for a declaration that he had been unlawfully assessed with tax under section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act, because he was not an occupier of any holding and had no circumstances or property within the meaning of that section within the Behar Municipality.

It has been found by both the Courts that the plaintiff had no property within the Municipality except a house in respect of which tax had been assessed. Section 85 requires, however, that he should not only be an occupier of a holding but also must have "circumstances or property within the Municipality" before he can be assessed and, therefore, the whole question is whether he had any circumstances or property within the Municipality.

It appears from the judgment of the District Judge that the plaintiff has an income of about Rs 15,000 from his property, which is not within the Municipality of Behar. The learned Judge, however, understood section 85 to mean that even if the plaintiff had circumstances or property outside the Municipality yet if the income derived therefrom was received and spent within the Municipality the requirements of section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act would be satisfied. In my opinion this is clearly an erroneous view of law. In order to make the assessee liable for assessment the Municipality will have to satisfy the Court that he has got not only a holding within the Municipality but that he has circumstances or property within the Municipality. The word "within" refers not only to property but also to circumstances.

Therefore, unless he had circumstances or property within the Municipality he will not be liable to assessment. The view of the law that I take in this case is fully concluded by authorities. The cases reported as Deb Narain Dutt v. Chairman of the Barnipur Municipality (1), Deb Narain Dutt v. Chairman of the Barnipur Municipality (2), Kameshwar Pershad v. Chairman of the Bhabua Municipality (3) and Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of the Municipality of Bihar v. Mahant Ramdeo Das (4), are conclusive on the point. In this view of the law it is impossible to maintain the judgment and decree of the lower Appel-

versus

RAM KISHORE AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1 TO 4 AND DEFENDANT No. 3— RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Adoption—Dhusars of Gurgaon settled in Central Provinces, whether governed by Punjab Customary Law—Orphan, adoption of, whether valid.

In matters of adoption Dhusars of Gurgaon, a non-agriculturist tribe, who settled in the Central Provinces are governed by the Customary Law of the Punjab and there is nothing to prevent the adoption of an orphan among them. [p. 825, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against the decree in Civil Suit No. 28 of 1907, in the Court of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 7th August 1916.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is a sequel to the case Ramkishore v. Jainarayan (1) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council remanded the suit for further trial. The learned District Judge, in a very careful judgment, has now decided the suit on the merits, and has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendant Jainarain their own share and that Jainarain is entitled to retain Kedarnath's share. The plaintiffs have been given a decree for possession of 3/5 of the property in suit excluding the tenancy lands.

The relationship of the parties is set out in the tree appearing at the beginning of the judgment of the learned District Judge. The only parties now on the record are the plaintiffs, defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and defendants Nos. 2 and 4, who claim under defendant No. 1. The parties are Dhusars by caste and the family belongs to Kutubpur, Tehsil Rewari, District Gurgaon, in the Punjab. It has been found by the District Judge that Harbhajan came to this part of the country some years before the first settlement and himself acquired the whole of the estate. At that time his uncle Balaram and his branch were not joint with Harbhajan. On Harbhajan's death in 1859 his sons Ramnath and Rambilas inherited the estate in equal shares. During the lifetime of Ramnath he adopted Kedarnath. Rambilas died first, in 1881, and on his death the name of his widow Jaidevi Bai was shown as an eight anna sharer in the family business as well as in the family villages in place of her husband. Ramnath died in 1883. About the year 1886-87 Jaidevi adopted the first defendant Jainarain and brought him to Ashti from the Punjab, and shortly afterwards his name was substituted for hers. The first plaintiff was born previously to this, but the other plaintiffs were born subsequently. In 1898 there was a partition of the family estate between Kedarnath and Jainarain in two equal shares, and Jainarain got his share, the property now claimed by the plaintiffs.

The principal question before us is whether Jainarain was validly adopted. If he was, the suit must fail. Two questions of law arise, the first being whether Jaidevi Bai inherited her husband's share and interest in the property held by him and Ramnath jointly, while the second is whether her adoption of Jainarain was valid. The first question is of subsidiary importance. The real question is whether Jainarain was adopted, and this depends on the further question whether the parties are governed by the Mitakshara Law, or whether in matters of adoption they follow Punjab Customary Law and whether in the latter case the adoption was valid according to that custom. Under the Customary Law of the Punjab it would appear that adoption is more accurately known as "The appointment of an heir." We naturally approach a question of Punjab Law with some diffidense, more specially since there are conflicting rulings by the Chief Court of the Punjab; but we derive great assistance from recent rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council. The learned District Judge, it appears, held that if the riwaj-i am applied to Dhusars, the adoption would be valid but that since Dhusars are not agriculturists he holds that the riwaj-i-am does not apply to them. He finds that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara, and that the appellant, the first defendant, has failed to prove a valid custom of adoption of orphans.

The learned Counsel for the appellant starts his argument with the proposition that prima facie the parties, who came from the Punjab, and who are governed in the Central Provinces by the same law as if they were still residents of the Punjab, are governed by custom and not by the orthodox Hindu Law. He cites the opening passage of Rattigan's Digest of the Customary Law of the Punjab. The opening passage of this work runs as follows:—

"Custom in this Province is the first rule of decision in all questions regarding succession, special property of females, betrothal, marriage, divorce, dower, adoption, guardianship, minority, bastardy, family relations, Wills, legacies, gift, partition, any religious usage or institution, or alluvion and diluvion."

This appears to be the accepted interpretation of section 5 of the Punjab Laws Act IV of 1872.

The riwaj-i am of the Gurgaon District is to be found in Exhibits 1-D 32 to 1-D 36. What is practically a reproduction of it is to be found in the Code of Tribal Custom forming an appendix to the Settlement Report of the Gurgaon District 1872-1883. Some of the special customs relating to adoption set out in the riwaj-i am are specifically stated to apply to Dhusars, and this appears to us, if the riwaj-i-am is binding on the parties, to establish the proposition that Dhusars are governed in matters of adoption not by the orthodox Hindu Law but by Customary Law. According to Hindu Law adoption is a religious ceremony and giving and taking forms a necessary portion of it. Under Punjab Customary Law there is no religious significance attached to the appointment of an heir, and there is no reason, therefore, why an orphan who cannot be given in adoption by his parents should not be adopted, in the Punjab sense. The learned District Judge says that several of the customs mentioned in the above-mentioned Code as being prevalent in the Gurgaon District are directly opposed to the well-known and established principles of Hindu Law. He goes on to say: "A widow can without permission, written or verbal, of her deceased husband adopt anyone she pleases of her husband's male relatives related through males, and for such an adoption consent of her husband's relatives is not at all necessary; for Dhusars specially the recorded custom is that the husband's male relatives are bound to supply her with a son and that failing this she is at liberty to adopt her daughter's son or other relatives through females. There is no limit about the adoptee's age and even a married man having children can be adopted. An only son of the eldest son can be given in adoption. From the fact that there is no limit about the age and that one is also empowered to give away in adoption his brother, it may be implied that the adoption of an orphan is not open to any objection." It may be taken as proved that Dhusars are non-agriculturists. This appears to us the only inference to be drawn from the evidence of defendants' witnesses Nos. 10, 11, 8, 9, 22 and 23. A very large number of rulings of the Chief Court of the Punjab have been cited before us by the learned Advocate for the respondents-plaintiffs to show that Punjab Customary Law does not apply to non-agriculturists or to the higher castes. We would mention specially the following cases cited by the lower Court: Mula Bakhsh v Muhammad Bakhsh (2), Mehtab-ud-din v. Abdullah (3), Muhammad Hussain v. Sultan Ali (4), Hiranam Singh v. Hardevi (5), Sardar Singh v. Maharaj Das (6). would also mention Gokal Chand v. Milkhi (7), Diwan Singh v. Paro (8), Tulsi Ram v. Nathu (9). On the other hand in Kanhya Lal v. Krishna (10) the riwaj-i-am of the Gurgaon District was followed and it was held that Agarwal Banias of the District do not follow strict Hindu Law. The Gurgaon riwaj-i am was also followed in Zaka-ud-din v. Saraj-ud-din (11). The following three cases are cited to show that a particular custom set up must be proved especially in the absence of any specific mention of that particular custom in the riwaj-i-am, Lelu v. Ram Chand (12), Raj Kaur v. Talok Singh (13), Santu v. Musammat Jok (14). Jainarain was an orphan when he was adopted and it is urged that there is nothing in the riwaj-i-am of Gurgaon specially authorising the adoption of an orphan, but as already suggested, once the element of religion is eliminated the burden of proving that an orphan cannot be adopted appears to us to lie upon the persons asserting it. In Chiman Lal v. Hari Chand (15) their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld the finding that Agarwal Banias of Zira in the Punjab were governed by Customary Law in matters of adoption, and that by the custom applicable to that class an unequivocal declaration by the adopting father that a boy had been adopted and the subsequent treatment of that boy as the adopted son were sufficient to constitute a valid adoption. In the present case Jainarain has always been treated as duly adopted. In paragraph 24 of his judgment the learned District Judge seems to hold, following the authorities cited by him, that the riwaj i-am cannot be accepted as a correct exposition of custom unless it is supported by independent evidence. We are of opinion that the District Judge has not given sufficient weight to the riwaj-i-am. In Beg v. Allah Ditta (16) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the riwaj-i am is a public record, prepared by a public officer in the discharge of his duties and under Government rules and is clearly admissible in evidence to prove the facts therein entered, subject to rebuttal. We do not find that the evidence afforded by the riwaj-i am has been rebutted in this case. Reliance is placed for the respondents on the evidence of D. W. No. 9 Bhawani Prashad and D. W. No. 23 to show that actual giving and taking is necessary for an adoption. We do not think anything more can be inferred from this evidence than that where there is somebody to give the boy in adoption, the ceremony of giving and taking is usually performed. Reliance is placed on page 55 of the Code of Tribal Custom, referred to above. The following is an extract:
